Earnest Whitsell, the photographer, who spent the winter with friends and relatives in Virginia, arrived here Tuesday morning and in a few days will have his art studio open for business.

Mr. E. G. Naylor, of Oakland, accompanied by his little daughter, went over Meversdale, Pa., on Friday morning last to visit relatives and friends, returning home Sunday night.

Rev. Thomas S. Long, Superintendent of the Park, is in Washington this week where he is attending the sessions of the Baltimore Conference, Methodist Episcopal church, of which Conference he is a member.

Mr. Herbert Montgomery, of Keyser, W. Va., was in Oakland Tuesday calling on our merchants and business men generally trying to interest them in the purchase of novelties, calendars, etc., for next year.

Drs. Bixler and Selby, dentists, have dissolved partnership, the former removing to rooms in the Ravenscroft building, while the latter will continue to occupy rooms in the First National Bank building.

Mr. Chas. Tower returned home Sunday evening from a business trip to points in the northern end of the county, being accompanied by Mrs. Tower and little son who were guests of relatives at Lonaconing during his absence from Oakland.

Attorneys Fred. A. Thayer, E. H. Sincell and John T. Mitchell, accompanied by Surveyor Alex. Mason, went to Bittinger Monday where they were engaged until yesterday morning making a survey of a large tract of land.

Mr. William T. Ravenscraft, of Denver, Col., who arrived here on March 25th in response to a telegram announcing the illness of his father, Dr. W. H. Ravenscraft, started for his home Sunday evening last.

Deputy Sheriff James Frantz, of Oakland, was at Selbysport Sunday where he attend the funeral of Mrs. William Frazee, whose death took place at her home in Selbysport on Saturday, a notice of which appears elsewhere in this paper today.

Dr. H. A. Jarrett, of Grafton, was in Oakland Monday and Tuesday when he rented one of the rooms in the Democrat building for the purpose of conducting a wholesale liquor establishment.

Col. A. G. Sturgiss, as administrator of the personal estate of the late John H. Purnell, gives notice through these columns to creditors of the deceased to file their claims with him on or before October 9th, 1905.

Mr. John F. Miller and family, who until recently resided near Eglon, West Va., left Oakland Monday night for Spokane, Washington, near which city Mr. Miller will locate and engage in farming.

Mr. Thos. H. Kimmell, of Mannington, spent Saturday night and Sunday at the bedside of his father, Mr. C. Kimmell, who is lying quite ill at the home of his daughter, Mrs. M. E. Flowers, at No. 10 East Main street. —Grafton Sentinel.

Attention is directed to the advertisement of Messrs. C. M. Rathbun & Sons, the planing mill men of Mountain Lake Park, which appears in this paper today. This firm handles only first-class goods and the prices quoted in the advertisement are as low as goods as the class can be sold.

In remitting for his subscription for another year Dr. A. F. Speicher, who is residing at Los Angeles, Cal., says: "We cannot get along without The Republican. It is a budget full of news from the land of our nativity each week. We are all well. Success to you."

The merchants of Oakland are making extensive preparations for a lively spring and summer trade. All of them are receiving daily large supplies of goods from the markets both east and west, and the several stores are taking on a different appearance as result of the change from winter goods to give place to the new stock of merchandise.

Messrs. D. E. Bolden, Henry Lauer, Samuel Lawton, Wm. Whorton, Eugene Baumgartner and Robert C. Townshend will go to Baltimore Monday morning where they will represent Garrett Lodge No. 113, Knights of Pythias in the Grand Lodge to meet in that city next week. The party will remain in Baltimore until Friday.

Mr. H. S. Yoder, one of the progressive farmers and stock breeders of the Grantsville section of Garrett county, offers for sale by advertisement published in this paper today thoroughbred Shorthorn cattle eligible to registry and solicits correspondence from those contemplating making purchases of cattle. Mr. Yoder also breeds Plymouth Rock fowls and has for sale some of the finest birds of that breed. His farm is located near Grantsville and is one of the best equipped in the country.

A party of four physicians of Columbus, Ohio, arrived here on Sunday and spent the day looking over the Oakland Hotel property with a view to either renting or purchasing it for the purpose of establishing a sanitarium. The gentlemen were very much impressed with the location of the property and made many favorable comments upon the appearance of the town. Whether or not negotiations for the property have been carried through we are unable to state.

Dr. Webster Ravenscroft, of Accident, sold at public auction at his home in that village a few days ago his real estate to Speicher Bros. and also disposed of much of his personal property. He has to removed with his family to Oakland and is occupying the farm adjoining the Weber place, whichhe has purchased from his brother, Senator R. A. Ravenscroft.

DR. RAVENSCRAFT PRACTICALLY WELL.

Has Almost Entirely Recovered His Usual Good Health.

This paper is extremely pleased to be able to state that Dr. W. H. Ravenscraft of Oakland, whose serious illness was noted in these columns last week and for a few days his life despaired of by his relatives and many friends here, owing to the formation of a clot on his brain, is in such an improved state that his entire and ultimate recovery is only the matter of a few days or weeks at the utmost.

The report published in one of our local contemporaries that the Doctor was violently insane was the imagination of the writer of that article and had no foundation whatever.

A police justice in New Jersey fined two women $10 each for carrying concealed weapons, the "concealed weapons" being their abusive tongues, which the women let fly at each other in the justice's august court. This promised to open up new and startling possibilities in the criminal courts, but on an appeal to the courts the ruling of the police magistrate was set aside—probably on the ground that it would establish a dangerous precedent.

Dr. B. F. Laughlin, of Mountain Lake Park, has located at Blaine, West Va., for the practice of his profession. Dr. Frank is the son of Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Laughlin, of the Park, and is a recent graduate of the leading medical college of Maryland where he carried off high honors upon his graduation. He is peculiarly equipped for the successful pursuit of his profession, being a gentleman of more than ordinary ability, sober, industrious and progressive. May he prosper, is the wish of THE REPUBLICAN and his host of friends in Oakland and the Park

Obituary.

Earnest Stilley was born in Germany Jan. 7th, 1821. He came to America in 1847 and settled on the Allegany mountains in Allegany (now Garrett) county, Md.

He was among the first settlers of this part of the country. Father Stilley on coming to this country was a member of the Lutheran church at Red House, and remained a member there until a few years ago, when he moved his membership and placed it in the M. E. church at Oak Grove, near his home.

Bro. Stilley lived a very humble, devoted, christian life, always proving to the world his faith by his works. As he was nearing the end of his earthly pilgrimage he manifested the same spirit and trust in Christ Jesus by his patience and calmness.

On the first day of March, 1905, after only a few days of illness with pneumonia, at the age 84 years, 1 month and 24 days, he quit the shores of time and with Paul he could say, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

His funeral was preached by his pastor, E. J. Westfall, at Oak Grove church, after which his body was laid to rest in the cemetery near the church to wait the resurrection.

The Claim of Patrick O'Mara

By HOWARD FIELDING

Copyright, 1904, by Charles W. Hooke

THERE was a great crowd along the avenue, and it was particularly dense at Fifty-first street, where a foolish millionaire in a bright red automobile had tried to cross ahead of the procession. Several policemen were reproving the automobilist, who was replying acrimoniously. The crowd was jeering good naturedly and had closed in so thickly behind the car that it could not be backed without creating carnage, and the odds were large that the impatient occupant would have to stay where he was until about three miles of Irishmen parading in honor of St. Patrick had passed that point.

The incident is of no importance in this narrative except that it resulted in blocking the path of Edmund Halloran, who was on his way to the University club. Mr. Halloran was a Democrat as a matter of intellectual conviction, but he was an aristocrat at heart. He disliked crowds, and with reason, for they are nearly always undignified. Dignity was Mr. Halloran's most conspicuous characteristic; he had so much of it that as a lawyer he could impart it even to the proceedings of the typical New York court.

Observing a vacant place upon the steps of the cathedral, Lawyer Halloran took advantage of it and for a moment was out of the press, but the people surged up and presently drove him into the sacred edifice. As he was entering he observed a tall, broad shouldered fellow who at the first glance impressed Halloran as a perfect picture of robust and sturdy youth. An elderly woman, obviously his mother, stood at his right and a pretty girl at his left. When the three turned to ascend the steps the woman and the girl took each an arm of the young man and helped him along. He walked with a peculiar lameness, as though the soles of his feet had been red hot. The mother's tenderness and solicitude were beautiful to behold, but the girl seemed impatient and a little out of temper.

Lawyer Halloran vaguely wondered what was the matter with the young man, never having seen anybody limp in precisely that way. It was a passing thought, and the matter would never have crossed his mind again, but a few minutes later, while he was enjoying the comparative seclusion of the vast and splendid edifice, he saw the mother enter and take an obscure seat. Immediately she began to pray with great fervor. The deep simplicity of her faith seemed to radiate into the atmosphere, and in its circle of influence the lawyer found himself assuming a more reverent spirit. The thought of his errand at the club and the annoyance of the delay were forgotten, and he was glad to be in the great church on the saint's day.

The woman remained at her devotions for perhaps ten minutes and then arose and moved toward the door, but immediately returned, as if she had forgotten something. She had, indeed, forgotten where she had been sitting, and, observing this, the lawyer thought it his duty to point out the error. He was one who had a nervous dread of mixing in the affairs of strangers, and it was with some difficulty that he brought himself to address this woman.

"You were sitting here, madam," he said.

His dignity quite overshadowed her. She looked up timidly and thanked him in a tone so humble that Halloran was ashamed of himself, for he felt that he must have assumed some sort of superiority. Therefore he replied with the greater courtesy, and poor Mrs. O'Mara was completely overwhelmed, for she perceived that this must be some personage of exalted distinction. She was so embarrassed that she could not see the very flat little purse that lay upon the seat, and Halloran was obliged to pick it up for her, perceiving as he did so how meager were its contents.

A memory of her very earnest devotions was in the lawyer's mind as he escorted her toward the door, and by way of farewell he ventured to express a hope that her prayer would be answered.

"I was praying for my son," said she. "I have asked the blessed saint to cure him of his lameness."

The lawyer's curiosity was revived, and he inquired the cause of the young man's affliction.

"He was hurt in a railroad accident," replied Mrs. O'Hara. "It's likely you may have heard of it—at Berkeley last summer."

The accident in question had been no great disaster, but it happened that Mr. Halloran remembered having read of it.

"Has your son recovered damages for the injury?" he asked. And at that moment he perceived that young O'Mara and the pretty girl had approached within hearing.

It was O'Mara himself who answered Mr. Halloran's question, and within half a minute the lawyer was repenting deeply of the sin of curiosity. O'Mara backed him against the massive masonry of the arched portal and proceeded to tell him the story of the accident, with infinite attention to detail. The pretty girl was on one side and the fragile, sweet faced woman upon the other, and there was no escape.

The worst of it was that O'Mara had no sooner got fairly started upon his story than the shrewd lawyer perceived that there was something wrong. O'Mara immediately began to speak of injuries and sufferings which were wholly inconsistent with his attitude at the moment. It was his feet which had sustained the damage. They had been touched by fire while he was pinned down by wreckage; they had never got well; in fact, they became worse every day, and the doctors could do nothing. Yet O'Mara stood upon those very feet as sturdily as any man ever did. Only when he referred directly to his present sufferings did O'Mara wince and lift his feet, first the right and then the left, with a peculiarly distressing affectation of agony.

Out of the corners of his eyes Halloran could see now and then the pretty girl and Mrs. O'Mara. The mother's expression was tenderly, yearningly sympathetic, but the girl was ashamed. Her face grew redder and redder; she clinched her hands nervously. From time to time she tried to break off the story or to remedy some obvious absurdity.

"We can't get hold of an honest doctor," said O'Mara. "That's what's the matter. They're afraid, every mother's son of 'em—afraid of the big corporation. And my lawyer's no better; he's done nothing for months."

"You see," said Mrs. O'Mara timidly, "we haven't much money"—

"Money!" echoed the son. "Why, we'll have plenty of that if this case ever comes to court. Don't you worry, little mother. You'll live in ease and comfort the rest of your days or I'm greatly mistaken."

"I think we ought to go now," said the pretty girl.

Halloran was thinking hard. He understood the case well enough. It was only a little worse than some others that he had seen. This young man, who had doubtless been the support of his mother, had become utterly worthless as the result of his dream of gold. He had perceived the opportunity of extorting damages from the railroad company, and this vision of "easy money" had destroyed his appetite for hard work, if indeed he had ever had any. Upon this latter point the lawyer had considerable doubt. For O'Mara himself Halloran would have done nothing, but Mrs. O'Mara had somehow won his sympathy. He doubted the possibility of doing anything with the suit for damages because it seemed certain that, even if the young man had sustained any real injury, he had entirely recovered from it so that no reputable doctor would testify for him. Probably the best that could be done for him was to drive the dishonest delusion out of him by proving that his case was hopeless.

"Who's your lawyer?" he demanded suddenly, interrupting a flow of O'Mara's eloquence.

"Well, it's John M. Dolan," said O'Mara, "and I'm a good deal in doubt about him."

He was going on to state the whole case over again when Halloran asserted himself.

"I haven't another minute," he declared. "Here's my card. Come to see me."

The pretty girl stepped aside to let him out, and under the influence of his nervous irritation he thrust himself through the crowd, cut the procession like a knife and made his way to the club, where he immediately began to be remorseful because he had taken so churlish a leave of Mrs. O'Mara.

"O'Mara's a fakir and a fraud," said he to himself. "I suppose that girl's engaged to him. Well, he's lost her; I can see that. He's lost her love, sure enough; but he'll never lose his mother's, confound him!"

The matter was still upon his mind next day, and one of the first things that he did after reaching his office was to call up his learned friend John M. Dolan by telephone. Mr. Dolan was not in the front rank of the profession, and he felt flattered that so great a man as Edmund Halloran should have deigned to look up his number in the telephone book.

"This fellow O'Mara," said he, "wasn't really hurt much so far as I can find out, though I believe that he was unconscious when they found him, probably from fright. His feet were burned a bit, and they still show the scar, but I can't get any doctor to say that the man isn't as well as he ever was. If O'Mara could tell the truth under oath I could get him a few hundred dollars, but if you have seen him you know what sort of an appearance he'd make on the stand. He'd lose any suit. I've abandoned the case."

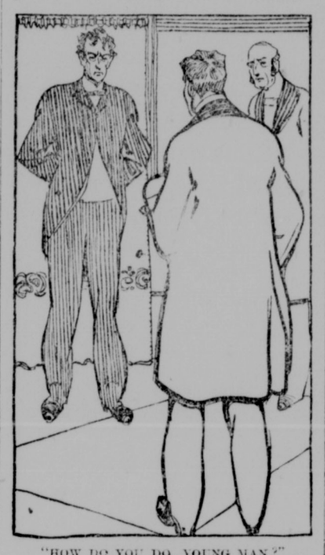
"All right," said Halloran. "I want to take it up."

He had scarcely hung up the receiver of the telephone when he was informed that Miss Edith Patten wished to see him. Halloran was not aware that he had ever had the pleasure of meeting Miss Patten, but when she entered his office he recognized the pretty girl of yesterday's adventure. She had come to beg him really to do something for Mr. Patrick O'Mara, whom she seemed to understand thoroughly. He had been a splendid fellow before this last, for damages had taken possession of his mind—an earnest, industrious, promising young man. Now he did nothing at all except talk of the money that he would win from the railroad company and the great pain in his feet, for which this money would requite him.

The young woman did not express it quite so bluntly. It was her opinion that the desire to give his mother ease and comfort and to make a home for herself had been at the root of Patrick's folly. So there was good behind the evil, as happens nearly always in this world.

Halloran frankly told Miss Patten what he intended to do.

"I know a doctor," he said, with a grim smile, "who is the most formidable of created beings. His name is Stone, and it suits him very well. When Mr. O'Mara comes to see me I'm going to take him to see my friend Stone, and when Stone gets through with him he will know that he is well enough to go to work."



"HOW DO YOU DO, YOUNG MAN?"

That very afternoon O'Mara appeared at the office. Impressed with its magnificence, his own idea of the damages that he would get out of the railroad company grew bigger than ever, and he limped very painfully as he entered Halloran's private room.

Without waiting for the young man to begin his interminable story, Halloran sprang up and took him by the arm.

"Come right along with me," he said. "I'm going to take you to an honest doctor."

An electric cab conveyed them swiftly to the office of Dr. Stone, with whom Halloran had had a long talk by telephone immediately after Miss Patten's visit. Stone was a tall, thin, high shouldered man, having a face triangular, like a cat's, and glaring, yellowish green eyes. A tangled mass of iron gray hair tumbled over his forehead, which was broad and bulging. Altogether he was a fearsome fellow, and at sight of him O'Mara stopped limping.

"How do you do, young man?" said Stone in a rasping voice. And then he stopped, though it was evident that he had meant to say much more.

There was a moment of silence, and then Stone advanced with his gaunt right arm extended and a pointing finger. He laid the finger upon a little white line that could be seen on the left side of O'Mara's head, a small injury where the hair had not grown again upon the scalp.

"Where did you get that?" asked the doctor.

"In the smashup," replied O'Mara. "It doesn't amount to anything. But, doctor, I've got the most terrible pair of feet that"—

"Sit down here," said Stone, forcing him into a chair. "I want to look at this scar; never saw one quite like it before. We'll attend to your feet by and by."

Half an hour later the doctor and the lawyer were alone in the office, while O'Mara was riding home luxuriously in the electric cab.

"Sue for anything you want to," said Stone. "He ought to have $50,000. That man's a monomaniac as the result of that crack on the head. All this business about his feet is a delusion, of course, but it's a delusion that the railroad people will have to pay for because they're responsible. Rely on my testimony. You know me."

"If you say that this is so," said Halloran, "by jingo, I believe I can get $50,000, and I'm glad for his mother's sake. Yet the poor woman would rather have him sound and well than twice that money."

"She'll have him sound and well before I'm through with him," said Stone. "Go and bring your suit. I want to observe this case for a month perhaps, and then I'll operate on the boy's head, and you'll see the result."

There is need of but a word in conclusion. Halloran brought his suit and forced it to a satisfactory settlement out of court, for the company's lawyer couldn't stand the combination of two such men as Halloran and Stone. Shortly thereafter Dr. Stone performed one of the neatest operations on the records, relieving the pressure on Pat O'Mara's brain and restoring him completely to himself. And simple hearted Mrs. O'Mara believes to this day that it was all an answer to her humble prayer in the great cathedral on the good St. Patrick's day.

The Claim of Patrick O'Mara

By HOWARD FIELDING

Copyright, 1904, by Charles W. Hooke

THERE was a great crowd along the avenue, and it was particularly dense at Fifty-first street, where a foolish millionaire in a bright red automobile had tried to cross ahead of the procession. Several policemen were reproving the automobilist, who was replying acrimoniously. The crowd was jeering good naturedly and had closed in so thickly behind the car that it could not be backed without creating carnage, and the odds were large that the impatient occupant would have to stay where he was until about three miles of Irishmen parading in honor of St. Patrick had passed that point.

The incident is of no importance in this narrative except that it resulted in blocking the path of Edmund Halloran, who was on his way to the University club. Mr. Halloran was a Democrat as a matter of intellectual conviction, but he was an aristocrat at heart. He disliked crowds, and with reason, for they are nearly always undignified. Dignity was Mr. Halloran's most conspicuous characteristic; he had so much of it that as a lawyer he could impart it even to the proceedings of the typical New York court.

Observing a vacant place upon the steps of the cathedral, Lawyer Halloran took advantage of it and for a moment was out of the press, but the people surged up and presently drove him into the sacred edifice. As he was entering he observed a tall, broad shouldered fellow who at the first glance impressed Halloran as a perfect picture of robust and sturdy youth. An elderly woman, obviously his mother, stood at his right and a pretty girl at his left. When the three turned to ascend the steps the woman and the girl took each an arm of the young man and helped him along. He walked with a peculiar lameness, as though the soles of his feet had been red hot. The mother's tenderness and solicitude were beautiful to behold, but the girl seemed impatient and a little out of temper.

Lawyer Halloran vaguely wondered what was the matter with the young man, never having seen anybody limp in precisely that way. It was a passing thought, and the matter would never have crossed his mind again, but a few minutes later, while he was enjoying the comparative seclusion of the vast and splendid edifice, he saw the mother enter and take an obscure seat. Immediately she began to pray with great fervor. The deep simplicity of her faith seemed to radiate into the atmosphere, and in its circle of influence the lawyer found himself assuming a more reverent spirit. The thought of his errand at the club and the annoyance of the delay were forgotten, and he was glad to be in the great church on the saint's day.

The woman remained at her devotions for perhaps ten minutes and then arose and moved toward the door, but immediately returned, as if she had forgotten something. She had, indeed, forgotten where she had been sitting, and, observing this, the lawyer thought it his duty to point out the error. He was one who had a nervous dread of mixing in the affairs of strangers, and it was with some difficulty that he brought himself to address this woman.

"You were sitting here, madam," he said.

His dignity quite overshadowed her. She looked up timidly and thanked him in a tone so humble that Halloran was ashamed of himself, for he felt that he must have assumed some sort of superiority. Therefore he replied with the greater courtesy, and poor Mrs. O'Mara was completely overwhelmed, for she perceived that this must be some personage of exalted distinction. She was so embarrassed that she could not see the very flat little purse that lay upon the seat, and Halloran was obliged to pick it up for her, perceiving as he did so how meager were its contents.

A memory of her very earnest devotions was in the lawyer's mind as he escorted her toward the door, and by way of farewell he ventured to express a hope that her prayer would be answered.

"I was praying for my son," said she. "I have asked the blessed saint to cure him of his lameness."

The lawyer's curiosity was revived, and he inquired the cause of the young man's affliction.

"He was hurt in a railroad accident," replied Mrs. O'Hara. "It's likely you may have heard of it—at Berkeley last summer."

The accident in question had been no great disaster, but it happened that Mr. Halloran remembered having read of it.

"Has your son recovered damages for the injury?" he asked. And at that moment he perceived that young O'Mara and the pretty girl had approached within hearing.

It was O'Mara himself who answered Mr. Halloran's question, and within half a minute the lawyer was repenting deeply of the sin of curiosity. O'Mara backed him against the massive masonry of the arched portal and proceeded to tell him the story of the accident, with infinite attention to detail. The pretty girl was on one side and the fragile, sweet faced woman upon the other, and there was no escape.

The worst of it was that O'Mara had no sooner got fairly started upon his story than the shrewd lawyer perceived that there was something wrong. O'Mara immediately began to speak of injuries and sufferings which were wholly inconsistent with his attitude at the moment. It was his feet which had sustained the damage. They had been touched by fire while he was pinned down by wreckage; they had never got well; in fact, they became worse every day, and the doctors could do nothing. Yet O'Mara stood upon those very feet as sturdily as any man ever did. Only when he referred directly to his present sufferings did O'Mara wince and lift his feet, first the right and then the left, with a peculiarly distressing affectation of agony.

Out of the corners of his eyes Halloran could see now and then the pretty girl and Mrs. O'Mara. The mother's expression was tenderly, yearningly sympathetic, but the girl was ashamed. Her face grew redder and redder; she clinched her hands nervously. From time to time she tried to break off the story or to remedy some obvious absurdity.

"We can't get hold of an honest doctor," said O'Mara. "That's what's the matter. They're afraid, every mother's son of 'em—afraid of the big corporation. And my lawyer's no better; he's done nothing for months."

"You see," said Mrs. O'Mara timidly, "we haven't much money"—

"Money!" echoed the son. "Why, we'll have plenty of that if this case ever comes to court. Don't you worry, little mother. You'll live in ease and comfort the rest of your days or I'm greatly mistaken."

"I think we ought to go now," said the pretty girl.

Halloran was thinking hard. He understood the case well enough. It was only a little worse than some others that he had seen. This young man, who had doubtless been the support of his mother, had become utterly worthless as the result of his dream of gold. He had perceived the opportunity of extorting damages from the railroad company, and this vision of "easy money" had destroyed his appetite for hard work, if indeed he had ever had any. Upon this latter point the lawyer had considerable doubt. For O'Mara himself Halloran would have done nothing, but Mrs. O'Mara had somehow won his sympathy. He doubted the possibility of doing anything with the suit for damages because it seemed certain that, even if the young man had sustained any real injury, he had entirely recovered from it so that no reputable doctor would testify for him. Probably the best that could be done for him was to drive the dishonest delusion out of him by proving that his case was hopeless.

"Who's your lawyer?" he demanded suddenly, interrupting a flow of O'Mara's eloquence.

"Well, it's John M. Dolan," said O'Mara, "and I'm a good deal in doubt about him."

He was going on to state the whole case over again when Halloran asserted himself.

"I haven't another minute," he declared. "Here's my card. Come to see me."

The pretty girl stepped aside to let him out, and under the influence of his nervous irritation he thrust himself through the crowd, cut the procession like a knife and made his way to the club, where he immediately began to be remorseful because he had taken so churlish a leave of Mrs. O'Mara.

"O'Mara's a fakir and a fraud," said he to himself. "I suppose that girl's engaged to him. Well, he's lost her; I can see that. He's lost her love, sure enough; but he'll never lose his mother's, confound him!"

The matter was still upon his mind next day, and one of the first things that he did after reaching his office was to call up his learned friend John M. Dolan by telephone. Mr. Dolan was not in the front rank of the profession, and he felt flattered that so great a man as Edmund Halloran should have deigned to look up his number in the telephone book.

"This fellow O'Mara," said he, "wasn't really hurt much so far as I can find out, though I believe that he was unconscious when they found him, probably from fright. His feet were burned a bit, and they still show the scar, but I can't get any doctor to say that the man isn't as well as he ever was. If O'Mara could tell the truth under oath I could get him a few hundred dollars, but if you have seen him you know what sort of an appearance he'd make on the stand. He'd lose any suit. I've abandoned the case."

"All right," said Halloran. "I want to take it up."

He had scarcely hung up the receiver of the telephone when he was informed that Miss Edith Patten wished to see him. Halloran was not aware that he had ever had the pleasure of meeting Miss Patten, but when she entered his office he recognized the pretty girl of yesterday's adventure. She had come to beg him really to do something for Mr. Patrick O'Mara, whom she seemed to understand thoroughly. He had been a splendid fellow before this but for damages had taken possession of his mind—an earnest, industrious, promising young man. Now he did nothing at all except talk of the money that he would win from the railroad company and the great pain in his feet, for which this money would requite him.

The young woman did not express it quite so bluntly. It was her opinion that the desire to give his mother ease and comfort and to make a home for herself had been at the root of Patrick's folly. So there was good behind the evil, as happens nearly always in this world.

Halloran frankly told Miss Patten what he intended to do.

"I know a doctor," he said, with a grim smile, "who is the most formidable of created beings. His name is Stone, and it suits him very well. When Mr. O'Mara comes to see me I'm going to take him to see my friend Stone, and when Stone gets through with him he will know that he is well enough to go to work."

"HOW DO YOU DO, YOUNG MAN?"

That very afternoon O'Mara appeared at the office. Impressed with its magnificence, his own idea of the damages that he would get out of the railroad company grew bigger than ever, and he limped very painfully as he entered Halloran's private room.

Without waiting for the young man to begin his interminable story, Halloran sprang up and took him by the arm.

"Come right along with me," he said. "I'm going to take you to an honest doctor."

An electric cab conveyed them swiftly to the office of Dr. Stone, with whom Halloran had had a long talk by telephone immediately after Miss Patten's visit. Stone was a tall, thin, high shouldered man, having a face triangular, like a cat's, and glaring, yellowish green eyes. A tangled mass of iron gray hair tumbled over his forehead, which was broad and bulging. Altogether he was a fearsome fellow, and at sight of him O'Mara stopped limping.

"How do you do, young man?" said Stone in a rasping voice. And then he stopped, though it was evident that he had meant to say much more.

There was a moment of silence, and then Stone advanced with his gaunt right arm extended and a pointing finger. He laid the finger upon a little white line that could be seen on the left side of O'Mara's head, a small injury where the hair had not grown again upon the scalp.

"Where did you get that?" asked the doctor.

"In the smashup," replied O'Mara. "It doesn't amount to anything. But, doctor, I've got the most terrible pair of feet that"—

"Sit down here," said Stone, forcing him into a chair. "I want to look at this scar; never saw one quite like it before. We'll attend to your feet by and by."

Half an hour later the doctor and the lawyer were alone in the office, while O'Mara was riding home luxuriously in the electric cab.

"Sue for anything you want to," said Stone. "He ought to have $50,000. That man's a monomaniac as the result of that crack on the head. All this business about his feet is a delusion, of course, but it's a delusion that the railroad people will have to pay for because they're responsible. Rely on my testimony. You know me."

"If you say that this is so," said Halloran, "by jingo, I believe I can get $50,000, and I'm glad for his mother's sake. Yet the poor woman would rather have him sound and well than twice that money."

"She'll have him sound and well before I'm through with him," said Stone. "Go and bring your suit. I want to observe this case for a month perhaps, and then I'll operate on the boy's head, and you'll see the result."

There is need of but a word in conclusion. Halloran brought his suit and forced it to a satisfactory settlement out of court, for the company's lawyer couldn't stand the combination of two such men as Halloran and Stone. Shortly thereafter Dr. Stone performed one of the neatest operations on the records, relieving the pressure on Pat O'Mara's brain and restoring him completely to himself. And simple hearted Mrs. O'Mara believes to this day that it was all an answer to her humble prayer in the great cathedral on the good St. Patrick's day.

The Simple Life

By CHARLES WAGNER

Translated From the French by Mary Louise Hendee

Copyright, 1901, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

THE WORLD AND THE LIFE OF THE HOME.

IN the time of the second empire, in one of our pleasantest subprefectures of the provinces, a little way from some baths frequented by the emperor, there was a mayor, a very worthy man and intelligent, too, whose head was suddenly turned by the thought that his sovereign might one day descend upon his home. Up to this time he had lived in the house of his fathers, a son respectful of the slightest family traditions. But when once the all absorbing idea of receiving the emperor had taken possession of his brain he became another man. In this new light what had before seemed sufficient for his needs, even enjoyable, all this simplicity that his ancestors had loved, appeared poor, ugly, ridiculous. Out of the question to ask an emperor to climb this wooden staircase, sit in these old armchairs, walk over such superannuated carpets. So the mayor called architect and masons; pickaxes attacked walls and demolished partitions, and a drawing room was made out of all proportion to the rest of the house in size and splendor. He and his family retired into close quarters, where people and furniture incommoded each other generally. Then, having emptied his purse and upset his household by this stroke of genius, he awaited the royal guest. Alas, he soon saw the end of the empire arrive, but the emperor never.

The folly of this poor man is not so rare. As mad as he are all those who sacrifice their home life to the demands of the world. And the danger in such a sacrifice is most menacing in times of unrest. Our contemporaries are constantly exposed to it and constantly succumbing. How many family treasures have they literally thrown away to satisfy worldly ambitions and conventions, but the happiness upon which they thought to come through these impious immolations always eludes them.

To give up the ancestral hearth, to let the family traditions fall into desuetude, to abandon the simple domestic customs, for whatever return is to make a fool's bargain, and such is the place in society of family life that if this be impoverished the trouble is felt throughout the whole social organism. To enjoy a normal development this organism has need of well tried individuals, each having his own value, his own hall mark. Otherwise society becomes a flock, and sometimes a flock without a shepherd. But whence does the individual draw his originality, this unique something which, joined to the distinctive qualities of others, constitutes the wealth and strength of a community? He can draw it only from his own family. Destroy the assemblage of memories and practices whence emanates for each home an atmosphere in miniature, and you dry up the sources of character sap the strength of public spirit.

It concerns the country that each home be a world, profound, respected, communicating to its members an ineffaceable moral imprint. But before pursuing the subject further let us rid ourselves of a misunderstanding. Family feeling, like all beautiful things, has its caricature, which is family egoism. Some families are like barred and bolted citadels, their members organized for the exploitation of the whole world. Everything that does not directly concern them is indifferent to them. They live like colonists—I had almost said intruders—in the society around them. Their particularism is pushed to such an excess that they make enemies of the whole human race. In their small way they resemble those powerful societies formed from time to time through the ages which possess themselves of universal rule and for which no one outside their own community counts. This is the spirit that has sometimes made the family seem a retreat of egoism which it was necessary to destroy for the public safety. But as patriotism and jingoism are as far apart as the east from the west, so are family feeling and clannishness.

Here we are talking of right family feeling, and nothing else in the world can take its place, for in it lie in germ all those fine and simple virtues which assure the strength and duration of social institutions. And the very base of family feeling is respect for the past, for the best possessions of a family are its common memories. An intangible, indivisible and inalienable capital, these souvenirs constitute a sacred fund that each member of a family ought to consider more precious than anything else he possesses. They exist in a dual form, in idea and in fact. They show themselves in language, habits of thought, sentiments, even instincts, and one sees them materialized in portraits, furniture, buildings, dress, songs. To profane eyes they are nothing; to the eyes of those who know how to appreciate the things of the family they are relics without which one should not part at any price.

But what generally happens in our day? Worldliness wars upon the sentiment of family, and I know of no strife more impassioned. By great means and small, by all sorts of new customs, requirements and pretensions, the spirit of the world breaks into the domestic sanctuary. What are this stranger's rights, its titles? Upon what does it rest its peremptory claims? This is what people too often neglect to inquire. They make a mistake. We treat the invader as very poor and simple people do a pompous visitor. For this incommoding guest of a day they pillage their garden, bully their children and servants and neglect their work. Such conduct is not only wrong; it is impolitic. One should have the courage to remain what he is in the face of all comers.

The worldly spirit is full of imperti nences. Here is a home which has formed characters of mark and is forming them yet. The people, the furnishings, the customs are all in harmony. By marriage or through relations of business or pleasure the worldly spirit enters. It finds everything out of date, awkward, too simple, lacking the modern touch. At first it restricts itself to criticism and light raillery. But this is the dangerous moment. Look out for yourself—here is the enemy! If you so much as listen to his reasonings, tomorrow you will sacrifice a piece of furniture, the next day a good old tradition, and so one by one the family heirlooms dear to the heart will go to the bric-a-brac dealer—and filial piety with them.

In the midst of your new habits and in the changed atmosphere your friends of other days, your old relatives, will be expatriated. Your next step will be to lay them aside in their turn. The worldly spirit leaves the old out of consideration. At last, established in an absolutely transformed setting, even you will view yourself with amazement. Nothing will be familiar, but surely it will be correct—at least the world will be satisfied. Ah, that is where you are mistaken! After having made you cast out pure treasure as so much junk it will find that your borrowed livery fits you ill and will hasten to make you sensible of the ridiculousness of the situation. Much better have had from the beginning the courage of your convictions and have defended your home.

Many young people when they marry listen to this voice of the world. Their parents have given them the example of a modest life, but the new generation thinks it affirms its rights to existence and liberty by repudiating ways in its eyes too patriarchal. So these young folks make efforts to set themselves up lavishly in the latest fashion and rid themselves of useless property at dirt cheap prices. Instead of filling their houses with objects which say, "Remember!" they garnish them with quite new furnishings that as yet have no meaning. Wait, I am wrong; these things are often symbols, as it were, of a facile and superficial existence. In their midst one breathes a certain heady vapor of mundanity. They recall the life outside, the turmoil, the rush. And were one sometimes disposed to forget this life they would call back his wandering thought and say, "Remember!" In another sense, do not forget your appointment at the club, the play, the races. The home then becomes a sort of halfway house where one comes to rest a little between two prolonged absences. It isn't a good place to stay. As it has no soul, it does not speak to yours. Time to eat and sleep, and then off again! Otherwise you become as dull as a hermit.

We are all acquainted with people who have a rage for being abroad, who think the world would no longer go round if they didn't figure on all sides of it. To stay at home is penal. There they cease to be in view. A horror of home life possesses them to such a degree that they would rather pay to be bored outside than be amused gratuitously within.

In this way society slowly gravitates toward life in herds, which must not be confounded with public life. The life in herds is somewhat like that of swarms of flies in the sun. Nothing so much resembles the worldly life of a man as the worldly life of another man. And this universal banality destroys the very essence of public spirit. One need not journey far to discover the ravages made in modern society by the spirit of worldliness, and if we have so little foundation, so little equilibrium, calm good sense and initiative, one of the chief reasons lies in the undermining of the home life. The masses have timed their pace by that of people of fashion. They, too, have become worldly. Nothing can be more so than to quit one's own hearth for the life of saloons. The squalor and misery of the homes are not enough to explain the current which carries each man away from his own. Why does the peasant desert for the inn the house that his father and grandfather found so comfortable? It has remained the same. There is the same fire in the same chimney. Whence comes it that it lights only an incomplete circle when in olden times young and old sat shoulder to shoulder? Something has changed in the minds of men. Yielding to dangerous impulses, they have broken with simplicity. The fathers have quitted their post of honor, the wives grow dull beside the solitary hearth and the children quarrel while waiting their turn to go abroad, each after his

We must learn again to live the home life, to value our domestic traditions. A pious care has preserved certain monuments of the past. So antique dress, provincial dialects, old folk songs, have found appreciative hands to gather them up before they should disappear from the earth. What a good deed, to guard these crumbs of a great past, these vestiges of the souls of our ancestors! Let us do the same for our family traditions, save and guard as much as possible of the patriarchal, whatever its form.

But not every one has traditions to keep; all the more reason for redoubling the effort to constitute and foster a family life. And to do this there is need neither of numbers nor a rich establishment. To create a home you must have the spirit of home. Just as the smallest village may have its history, its moral stamp, so the smallest home may have its soul. Oh, the spirit of places, the atmosphere which surrounds us in human dwellings! What a world of mystery! Here, even on the threshold, the cold begins to penetrate, you are ill at ease; something intangible repulses you. There no sooner does the door shut you in than friendliness and good humor envelop you. It is said that walls have ears. They have also voices, a mute eloquence. Everything that a dwelling contains is bathed in an ether of personality. And I find proof of its quality even in the apartments of bachelors and solitary women. What an abyss between one room and another room! Here all is dead, indifferent, commonplace; the device of the owner is written all over it, even in his fashion of arranging his photographs and books. All is the same to me. There one breathes in animation, a contagious joy in life. The visitor hears repeated in countless fashions: "Whoever you are, guest of an hour, I wish you well. Peace be with you."

Words can do little justice to the subject of home, tell little about the effect of a favorite flower in the window or the charm of an old armchair where the grandfather used to sit offering his wrinkled hands to the kisses of chubby children. Poor moderns, always moving or remodeling! We who from transforming our cities, our houses, our customs and creed have no longer where to lay our heads, let us not add to the pathos and emptiness of our changeful existence by abandoning the life of the home. Let us light again the flame put out on our hearths, make sanctuaries for ourselves, warm nests where the children may grow into men, where love may find privacy, old age repose, prayer an altar and the fatherland a cult.

CHAPTER XI.

SIMPLE BEAUTY.

SOME one may protest against the nature of the simple life in the name of aesthetics or oppose to ours the theory of the service of luxury, that providence of business, fostering mother of arts and grace of civilized society. We shall try briefly to anticipate these objections.

It will no doubt have been evident that the spirit which animates these pages is not utilitarian. It would be an error to suppose that the simplicity we seek has anything in common with that which misers impose upon themselves through cupidity or narrow minded people through false austerity. To the former the simple life is the one that costs least; to the latter it is a flat and colorless existence, whose merit lies in depriving oneself of everything bright, smiling, seductive.

It displeases us not a whit that people of large means should put their fortune into circulation instead of hoarding it, so giving life to commerce and the fine arts. That is using one's privileges to good advantage. What we would combat is foolish prodigality, the selfish use of wealth and, above all, the quest of the superfluous on the part of those who have the greatest need of taking thought for the necessary. The lavishness of a Maecenas could not have the same effect in a society as that of a common spendthrift who astonishes his contemporaries by the magnificence of his life and the folly of his waste. In these two cases the same term means very different things. To scatter money broadcast does not say it at all. There are ways of doing it which ennoble men and others which degrade them. Besides, to scatter money supposes that one is well provided with it. When the love of sumptuous living takes possession of those whose means are limited the matter becomes strangely altered. And a very striking characteristic of our time is the rage for scattering broadcast which the very people have who ought to husband their resources. Munificence is a benefit to society; that we grant willingly. Let us even allow that the prodigality of certain rich men is a safety valve for the escape of the superabundant. We shall not attempt to gainsay it. Our contention is that too many people meddle with the safety valve when to practice economy is the part of both their interest and their duty. Their extravagance is a private misfortune and a public danger.

So much for the utility of luxury.

We now wish to explain ourselves upon the question of aesthetics—oh, very modestly and without trespassing on the ground of the specialists. Through a too common illusion simplicity and beauty are considered as rivals. But simple is not synonymous with ugly any more than sumptuous, stylish and costly are synonymous with beautiful. Our eyes are wounded by the crying spectacle of gaudy ornament, venal art and senseless and graceless luxury. Wealth coupled with bad taste sometimes makes us regret that so much money is in circulation to provoke the creation of such a prodigality of horrors. Our contemporary art suffers as much from the want of simplicity as does our literature—too much in it that is irrelevant, overwrought, falsely imagined. Rarely is it given us to contemplate in line, form or color that simplicity allied to perfection which commands the eyes as evidence does the mind. We need to be rebaptized in the ideal purity of immortal beauty which puts its seal on the masterpieces. One shaft of its radiance is worth more than all our pompous exhibitions.

Yet what we now have most at heart is to speak of the ordinary aesthetics of life, of the care one should bestow upon the adornment of his dwelling and his person, giving to existence that luster without which it lacks charm. For it is not a matter of indifference whether man pays attention to these superfluous necessities or whether he does not; it is by them that we know whether he puts soul into his work. Far from considering it as wasteful to give time and thought to the perfecting, beautifying and poetizing of forms, I think we should spend as much as we can upon them. Nature gives us her example, and the man who should affect contempt for the ephemeral splendor of beauty with which we garnish our brief days would lose sight of the intentions of him who has put the same care and love into the painting of the lily of an hour and the eternal hills.

But we must not fall into the gross error of confounding true beauty with that which has only the name. The beauty and poetry of existence lie in the understanding we have of it. Our home, our table, our dress, should be the interpreters of intentions. That these intentions be so expressed it is first necessary to have them, and he who possesses them makes them evident through the simplest means. One need not be rich to give grace and charm to his habit and his habitation. It suffices to have good taste and good will. We come here to a point very important to everybody, but perhaps of more interest to women than to men.

Those who would have women conceal themselves in coarse garments of the shapeless uniformity of bags violate nature in her very heart and misunderstand completely the spirit of things. If dress were only a precaution to shelter us from cold or rain a piece of sacking or the skin of a beast would answer. But it is vastly more than this. Man puts himself entire into all that he does. He transforms into types the things that serve him. The dress is not simply a covering; it is a symbol. I call to witness the rich flowering of national and provincial costumes and those worn by our early corporations. A woman's toilet, too, has something to say to us. The more meaning there is in it the greater its worth. To be truly beautiful it must tell us of beautiful things, things personal and veritable. Spend all the money you possess upon it; if its form is determined by chance or custom, if it has no relation to her who wears it, it is only toggery, a domino. Then fast

A Remorseful Regret From the Married Man

"If I'd only married her," muttered Tanquerly, with the bitter regret of a lost soul bewailing vanished opportunities.

I thought of the sweet little wife he had at home and was swamped with surprise.

"Oh, if I'd only married her!" he repeated, still more intensely.

The woman referred to occupied a seat across and farther down the car from us. She had a form that made the ordinary carpenter's scaffolding look graceful and huggable; her jaw reminded one of a trip hammer; her face was plotted to throw a nervous child into convulsions, and her voice—her voice would make a busy boiler factory seem restful and serene after a second of it. She had just had a slight controversy with the conductor, and that official—you know how shy and shrinking the ordinary street car conductor is—had been reduced to quivering pulp in a trifle over a minute. He, one of the most explosive and overbearing of his kind, had joined issue with her confidently and gleefully, but when her strident voice once got to working full time, about 250 words to the second, I calculated, analyzing his character, dissecting his reputation, tearing up his habits, unjointing his hopes, shredding his ambitions and ruthlessly forecasting his future, it was pathetic to watch that strong man striving fruitlessly to stem the torrent, then yielding little by little, still struggling strenuously to get in a word, until at last he was swept out on to the back platform, a mangled and lacerated bundle of raw nerves, too broken spirited to so much as curse a little fussy old gentleman who berated him for not stopping the car at his corner. I never saw the stiffening so thoroughly, quickly and completely taken out of a man in my life. Oh, it was pitiable!

"If I'd only married her," murmured Tanquerly again.

"Are you crazy?" I demanded sharply.

Tanquerly shook his head slowly and painfully. "No," he said, "not yet. But I'll bet if I'd only married her I wouldn't have been to that banquet last night and felt as I do this morning."—Tom Watson's Magazine.

FOR SALE

OR

For Summer 1905

At Deer Park, Maryland, Main Line B. & O. R. R., to St. Louis, 2,500 Feet Above Tidewater, a Country Place of About 185 Acres.

"GLAMORGAN."

Thoroughly equipped as a farm and bounded by three county roads, insuring convenience and privacy. It is well adapted to public use such as a sanatorium or to private residences, five sites with beautiful views and appurtenant acres, being reached by its three miles of private pleasure drives through the woods.

The dwelling house was built from plans by Hewitt Bros., of Philadelphia. The plumbing is by Ogelsby, of the same city. It is in complete order, and is replete with the modern appliances of a gentleman's residence. It is within ten minutes' walk of postoffice and railroad station and within one mile of the Deer Park Hotel. Its general plan is as follows:

Wide porches surround three faces terminated, on a level, with billiard room.

I. FIRST FLOOR. Parlor, hall with main stair case, library, dining room and lavatory.

II. BACK BUILDING. Stair case to cellar, in which are furnace, gas machine (supplied by outside gasometer), wine closet, pantry (hot and cold water), back stairs to second story back building. Laundry—3 stationary tubs, hot and cold water in each; ironing stove, fire hose on reel and special boiler. Kitchen, with range, sink and all appliances. Back porch, ten feet from which is ice house practically inexhaustible in summer; servants bath room, etc.

I. SECOND FLOOR. Two communicating chambers, with bath room; one chamber communicating with its bath room; one chamber communcating with its bath room; total, four chambers with three bath rooms.

II. BACK BUILDING, 2nd FLOOR. Four chambers, two closets, bath room with W. C. adjoining.

THIRD FLOOR. Two chambers, two large lofts.

Every room has gas fixture and eight rooms have open fire-places in addition to furnace register.

The water supply is unexceptionable, its every source being from springs rising within the confines of the place and all having passed analytical examination. Two tanks (each in contact with outside air) having a combined capacity of 14,500 gallons, a wind mill, a horse power and an overshot wheel supplying the motor. Three dams (likewise spring water) contribute the ice supply and two of them are stocked with fish. The outbuildings are a barn with stalls for six horses and eight carriages, with ample storage for hay, straw and oats and having a coachman's room, a tenant's house of five rooms, a large cow and sheep stable and numerous sheds, etc.

This property is without incumbrance and possession can be given in May, 1905.

Gertrude C. Jeffers, who sues by her husband and next friend, Alpheus M. Jeffers, Alpheus M. Jeffers, Addie Warnick, trustee, Beryl Warnick, Hazel Warnick and Beulah Warnick, infants, who sue by their next friend, George Warnick, and George Warnick, plaintiffs, v. Albert Warnick, Edward E. Warnick, Ida R. Duckworth and Stephen A. Duckworth, her husband, John C. Brydon, Louis B. Brydon and Gilmor S. Hamill, defendants.

No. 1328 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of Military Lots Nos. 96 and 97, containing fifty acres each, situate, lying and being in Garrett county, Maryland, and for a distribution of the proceeds thereof amongst the parties to this cause in proportion to their several interests.

The bill states that the said Gertrude C. Jeffers, Addie Warnick, trustee, for the use and benefit of her three infant children, the said Beryl Warnick, Hazel Warnick and Beulah Warnick, George Warnick, Albert Warnick, Edward E. Warnick and Ida R. Duckworth are each seized and possessed in fee simple of an undivided one seventh interest in and to said Military Lots Nos. 96 and 97, and that a certain Truman P. Warnick was likewise seized and possessed of an undivided one-seventh interest in the said lands, the derivation of title to said respective interests being fully set forth in the several exhibits filed with said bill; and that the said Truman P. Warnick, on the 15th day of February, 1902, executed and delivered to the defendant, Gilmor S. Hamill, a mortgage upon his undivided one-seventh interest, and that having defaulted in the payment of the debt secured by said mortgage, on the 18th day of February, 1905, the said Hamill, mortgagee, exercised the power of sale contained in said mortgage and sold the interest of the said Truman P. Warnick in said lands to John C. Brydon and Louis B. Brydon to the extent of one-half of said undivided one-seventh interest, and to himself, the said Gilmor S. Hamill, to the extent of one-half of said undivided one-seventh interest, and duly reported said sale to this Court in a cause standing as No. 1315 Equity on the docket of said court as appears by the exhibit filed with said bill relating to said proceedings.

The bill further states that the plaintiffs together with the defendants are seized and possessed it fee simple, as tenants in common of the aforesaid Military Lots Nos. 96 and 97, and that the parties to this suit above named are the only persons interested in said lands; that said real estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties interested therein, and that in order to make division of said interests and more especially to protect and advance the interests of said infant children, it will be necessary that said real estate be sold and the proceeds thereof divided amongst the parties according to their several interests.

That the said Louis B. Brydon is a non-resident of the State of Maryland; that all the other parties to this cause reside within the State of Maryland, and that all of said parties are adults with the exception of the three infants above named.

The bill then prays for a decree for the sale of said real estate, a distribution among the parties according to their respective interests and for general relief, process and an order of publication.

It is thereupon, the 16th day of March, 1905, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, ordered, that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 15th day of April, 1905, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this bill, warning him to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor on or before the 1st day of May next, to show cause, if any he has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

TRUSTEES' SALE OF VALUABLE Real Estate

On BEAR CREEK, Garrett County, Maryland.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Garrett County, sitting in Equity, dated the 22nd day of March, 1905, and passed in a cause standing as No. 1321 Equity on the docket of said court, wherein Frederick Kamp et al. are complainants, and Henrietta Kamp et al. are defendants, the undersigned trustees appointed by said decree hereby give notice that they will on Saturday, the 15th Day of April, 1905,

At the hour of eleven o'clock a. m., of said day, in front of the Postoffice, in the town of Oakland, Maryland, offer at public auction to the highest bidder all those two lots or tracts of land situated, lying and being in Garrett County, Maryland, known and designated as

Military Lots Nos. 2620 and 2624,

Containing fifty acres each, lying on the north prong of Bear Creek near Engles Mill.

These lands are covered with virgin forest consisting of Oak and other hard woods and the timber is valuable.

Also all that other tract of land the same being part of the tract of land called

The Rights of Man, Second Part,

Which is fully described in a deed for the same from William C. Pennington, trustee, to Henry Kamp, dated the 24th day of February, 1880, containing 172 acres, more or less, of which land, however, the said Henry Kamp in his lifetime conveyed to Frederick Kamp the quantity of 122½ acres, leaving a balance of

49½ Acres

To be sold as aforesaid. This land also lies on the north prong of Bear Creek aforesaid and is partly covered with timber. The minerals underlying said land will be offered separately from the timber and surface, and the timber may be offered separately from the surface, which ever in the judgment of the said trustees will be for the best interests of the parties concerned.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by the decree, one-third cash on the day of sale, one-third in six months and one-third in twelve months from the day of sale, the deferred payments to bear interest from the day of sale, and to be secured to the satisfaction of the trustees, or the entire purchase money may be paid in cash, at the option of the purchaser or purchasers.

VOLUME 29. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 1905. NUMBER 6

GOVERNOR WARFIELD MAKES PROCLAMATION

April 14. Arbor and Highway Day A Legal Holiday.

TREES. HOMES OF THE BIRDS

Must Be Planted and Protected—Schools Exhorted to Carry Out Programs of Eexrcises—Pupils Should Be Taught to Love Trees and Song Birds.

Governor Warfield has issued the following proclamation to the people of Maryland concerning the observance of Arbor and Highway Day, which occurs on Friday next, April 14, 1905.

To the People of Maryland:

Whereas, By joint resolution No. 15, passed by the General Assembly of Maryland at its January Session, 1894, the Governor is "authorized and directed to issue a proclamation annually, designating a day in April for the planting of forest trees, to be known as 'Arbor and Highway Day,' and recommending that the day be devoted by the people of the State to that purpose and especially recommending to parents and teachers in public schools that they encourage their children, or those under their influence, to plant trees on that day by the side of a public road or about the school house or home, with such other practical suggestions on the subject as he may deem expedient and in furtherance of the object of these resolutions."

And whereas, Our song birds, whose homes are our trees and which are, therefore, inseparably associated with their preservation, have, of recent years, received special attention at the hands of the law-makers of our State, by the enactment of laws designed for the protection of both song and game birds, printed copies of which laws have been gratuitiously distributed to every public school board in Maryland by the State Game Warden in pursuance of suggestions made in my Arbor Day Proclamation of 1904.

Now therefore, I, Edwin Warfield, Governor of the State of Maryland, do hereby designate Friday, April 14th, 1905, as Arbor and Highway Day, and earnestly request that the people of Maryland do appropriately observe that day by planting shade trees along the public highways and about their school houses and homes. And I do further urge the public school boards throughout the State to require their teachers to carry out the admirable program of literary exercises prepared for use in the public schools on that day, by Professor M. Bates Stephens, State Superintendent of Education which will serve to impress upon the minds of our boys and girls of school age a love for our trees and song birds and to encourage State pride, patriotism and regard for established law, both human and divine. "Blessed is the man whose delight is in the law of the Lord he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water that bringeth forth his fruit in his season, his leaf also shall not wither and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper."

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Maryland, at the Capitol, in the City of Annapolis, this thirtieth day of March, in the year of our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred and Five, and of the Independence of the United States, the One Hundred and twenty-ninth.

EDWIN WARFIELD.

By His Excellency's Command,
OSWALD TILGHMAN,
Secretary of State.

ELECTRIC LIGHT EQUIPMENT DOUBLED.

Plant in Oakland Greatly Improved by Addition of New Machinery.

By the addition of a new boiler, an engine of 100 horsepower and a new dynamo to the electric light plant in Oakland the equipment has been doubled in power and capacity of lights.

The new engine has already been installed and the additional dynamo was received from the manufacturers on Monday and placed in position in the power house. As soon as one of the boilers now in use can be taken out and the foundation strengthened another boiler, already on the ground, will be put in.

This additional equipment was made necessary owing to the growing requirements of the town and the consequent demands made for lights both for private and business houses.

As soon as all the new machinery has been put in commission the system of lighting the streets will be changed when ten 2000 candle power incandescent-arc lights will be placed along the most important thoroughfares to take place of the small incandescent lights now in use. The additional cost for the larger lights will be but slight in aggregate, as all expenses for additional wiring, etc., will be borne by the owner of the plant, Mr. D. E. Offutt.

HAVE FILED A DISSENTING OPINION

Judges Schmucker, Pearce and Boyd On Poe Amendment.

Judges Boyd, in the Court of Appeals, has filed a dissenting opinion to that handed down by Chief Judge McSherry, representing the majority of the Court in the mandamus case of Mr. Murray Vandiver against Governor Warfield to compel the latter to publish the proposed Constitutional amendments restricting the suffrage and providing for State appropriations for county roads.

It will be remembered that while the Court was unanimous on the general point that the Governor's signature was not necessary to the validity of a proposed Constitutional amendment, the majority was five to three on other and vital points, which, if decided differently, would have annulled the main decision.

The opinion is concurred in by Judges Pearce and Schmucker, and differs from the opinion of the majority only on matters relating to the second section of the proposed amendment, which, the dissenting judges believe, contains matters which are purely legislative, and, such being the fact, require the signature of the Governor before they can become valid. The essential point upon which the difference of opinion exists is as to whether or not that section prescribes a different method of submitting the amendment than that provided by the general law. If it does, as the three dissenting judges hold, then plainly the whole instrument as it passed the two houses of the Legislature is legislative in the nature.

The settlement of this point turns the interpretion of the requirement that the words 'For' or 'Against the Constitutional amendment' must be written or printed by the voter on the ballot. Judge Boyd, in the opinion, declares that it was plainly the intention of the two branches of the Legislature to provide this method, radically different from the one prescribed by law as a method by which the voter could express his sentiments on the amendment, and that if he did express himself by writing the would not be invadidated, although the opposite would be the case under the general law. Thus, it is argued in the opinion, there could be no doubt that the proposed amendment contains provisions purely legislative in their character and could not be submitted unless it received the Governor's approval.

Upon the main question as to the necessity in ordinary of a proposed Constitutional amendment receiving the executive approval, the judges who dissented take occasion to reiterate their agreement with the majority.

HAMILL HOMESTEAD SOLD.

Mr. D. E. Offutt, Jr., Purchased the Property Saturday.

Last Saturday at public auction the old Patrick Hamill homestead located on Second street and embracing two building lots on Center street, sold by Messrs. G. S. Hamill and R. T. Semmes, trustees, to Mr. D. E. Offutt, Jr., of Oakland. The price paid for the entire property was $3750.

Mr. Offutt will put some repairs on the house and next spring will move it from its present location to one of the rear lots and erect a modern dwelling where the old house now stands.

"Bob" Male, of Deer Park, who was sentenced by Justice W. D. Hoye to serve a term of one year in the House of Correction for an assault upon Joseph McRobie in the home of the latter at Deer Park on the night of the 4th inst., instituted habeas corpus preceedings by his counsel, Messrs. Winger & Offutt, of Oakland, for the purpose of setting the verdict of the Justice aside to restore him to his liberty. The case was argued before Judge Robert R. Henderson, yesterday afternoon in the rooms of the bar association here, and last night the Court decided the case, granting Male an appeal to the Circuit Court, the case to come up at the September Term. Bond was fixed at a lower figure than that placed by the Justice, but Male, being unable up to this time to secure the necessary bond, is still in jail.

BITTINGER.

In our last week's budget to THE REPUBLICAN two items seem to have gotten badly mixed. The items in question were intended to read thus: "Miss Nettie Brenninger of Sunny side was the guest of her sister last week," and the other should have read "Mr. William Winterburg, of Grantsville, was the guest of his sister Mrs. T. B. Wiley last Sunday, and was accompanied on his return by Miss Myrtle Wiley, who will spend a few days at her uncle's home."

After a season of most delightful weather, a sudden return of winter conditions about the middle of last week drove our people indoors and set the busy housewives to kindle anew the fires that had been allowed to smoulder on the hearths. Snow, rain and bleak winds marked the closing days of last week, but this week opens fairer and warmer and we hope for continued fair weather.

Mr. George Witsel, of "Pea Ridge," came up last week to be present at the closing exercises of our public school, and remained over Saturday to pay his respects to our "hello" girl.

Mr. Oscar Robinson, of Avilton, paid our village a pleasant visit last Saturday and Sunday, and was a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joel Orendorf during his stay here.

Miss Malinda Orendorf who has been employed near Avilton for some weeks, returned to her home at this place last Saturday.

Liveryman H. Custer, of Jennings, passed through this place with one of his comfortable and attractive conveyances last Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Simon Brenneman and little son were calling on Mrs. Hattie Engle Sunday afternoon.

Misses Eliza and Ida Ralston are at home after having closed their schools on last Friday.

Miss Ruth McRobie, of Oakland, is visiting the Misses Ralston at their home near this place.

Mr. Joe Buckle spent Sunday with his family.

The school at this place closed last Friday after a successful term of seven and one half months, during all of which time a good average attendance was maintained, but the progress of the school was much hindered by the lack of a primary teacher.

CONTRACT FOR ERECTION OF JAIL LET TO-DAY

The Brady Construction Company, of Fairmont, the Successful Bidders.

CONTRACT PRICE IS $35.981.

Eight Bids Were Submitted to the Commissioners Ranging from Above Price to $42,300—Messrs. D. E. Bolden & Co. Withdrew Their Bid.

Yesterday the Board of County Commissioners received sealed bids for the erection of the proposed new jail in Oakland, according to the plans and specifications adopted by the Board at a meeting held some weeks ago, and this morning the contract was awarded to the Brady Construction Company, of Fairmont, at the price of $35,981, it being $19 lower than the next higher bid.

Eight bids were submitted to the Board as follows: Holbert & Spedden, of Fairmont, W. Va., $37,600; Stewart & Co., of Baltimore, $39,600; Brady Construction Co., Fairmont, $35,981; Champion Iron Company, Cleveland, O., $39,250; Elliott & Winchell, Clarksburg, submitted four bids, covering different kinds of materials, as follows: $36,000, $40,300, $38,500 and $42,300.

Messrs. D. E. Bolden & Co., of Oakland, after filing their bid for the work, withdrew it.

WRECK AT YOUGH BRIDGE.

Broken Flange Derailed Three Cars and Ripped Track Up Friday

By the breaking of a flange under a steel hopper loaded with coal on an east-bound freight train last Friday afternoon about three o'clock, three cars of the train were derailed and wrecked and several hundred feet of both the east and west-bound tracks on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at a point immediately west of the bridge spanning the Great Youghiogheny River, two miles west of Oakland, were torn up and traffic delayed both ways several hours.

It required the work of the rigging crews from Piedmont, Cumberland and Rowlesburg to replace the cars upon the rails and the services of a hundred men to repair the tracks. Train No. 55 was held in Oakland for an hour or more and the east-bound trains were held at Hutton and Terra Alta.

FORT FREDERICK'S IMPOSING RUINS

Maryland's Bloody Frontier War With Indians.

AN INTERESTING LOVE STORY

Braddock's Famous March Through the Valley and Incursion Which Followed—Indian Atrocities—Thomas and Michael Cresap.

Mr. T. J. C. Williams formerly of Hagerstown, writes as follows in the Baltimore Sun about old Fort Frederick, Washington county.

On one of the eastern foothills of the Alleghany Mountains, overlooking the Potomac river and about 90 miles west of Baltimore, stands old Fort Frederick. It is an imposing ruin still in a fair state of preservation. The walls are of stone about 20 feet in height, 4 or 5 feet in thickness at the base and 3 feet at the top.

Across the fort from curtain to curtain the distance is about 3000 feet. The inclosed space is several acres in extent, including the large areas at the bastions. The barracks and the great oaken door have disappeared, but the walls are in remarkably good repair. Just north of the fort passes the old National Turnpike road, which in the olden time was the great artery of communication between East and West. At the foot of the hill upon which the fort stands is the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, begun by President John Quincy Adams as a national work July 4, 1828, the same day that Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, laid the corner stone of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. This canal is the legal successor of George Washington's Potomac Navigation Company, which he designed as a commercial chain to hold the territory west of Alleghany Mountains to the Union. Across the canal and river a few hundred yards away are the mountains of West Virginia. Between the fort and the canal is the Western Maryland Railroad and across the river the Baltimore and Ohio.

Fort Frederick was erected by the Colonial government of Maryland in the autumn of 1755 to protect the colonists from the Indian raids which followed the defeat of General Braddock that year. It was then upon the extreme western limit of the fringe of settlements which extended along the Atlantic coasts and which extended along the Atlantic coast and which at that time reached less than 100 miles from tide water. The lovely Maryland valley which Fort Frederick overlooks and for the immediate protection of which it was erected had received its first white settlers not 20 years before. It was cut off from the older portion of the Colony by the Blue Ridge Mountains, but when General Braddock marched through a great deal of land had been granted to settlers by Lord Baltimore and colonists were rapidly coming. This valley is one of the fairest portions of the Union. It is the northern extension of the Valley of Virginia. It extends across Maryland between the North and South Mountains and across Pennsylvania to Western New York. The portion of this valley which lies in Maryland, between the Mason and Dixon line and the Potomac river, is drained into the Potomac by the Antietam and Conococheague creeks, and Hagerstown, with some 15,000, population, is the chief town.

Through this valley marched the army of British regulars under Braddock in May, 1755. The brave but conceited and hard-headed general drove at their head in an old coach which he had bought in Annapolis, and swore profusely as he bounded and bounced over the limestone rocks of a primitive trail in a country where wheel vehicles were at that time almost unknown. Braddock had been detained at Frederick by a lack of wagons to transport his baggage. Dr. Benjamin Franklin had met him there, had dined with him, conferred with him, had provided him with wagons, becoming personally responsible to their owners for their safe return and for the liberal hire that was exacted. He had, and this was the main object of his visit, impressed upon the mind of Braddock that however derelict Maryland and Virginia might be in responding to his demands, Pennsylvania was all that could be desired. The shrewd old philosopher had left Braddock with settled doubts of the result of the campaign.

Braddock's army crossed South Mountain into the valley of the Antietam (what is now Washington county, Maryland) by the pass through which the National pike was afterward made and where the battle of South Mountain was fought in 1892, and passed near the northern limits of the Antietam battlefield. At Conococheague settlement, on the Potomac, at the mouth of Conococheague creek, this being the last frontier settlement of the Colony, a great quantity of stores and provisions had been gathered. Here Braddock forded the Potomac and followed the road from Winchester to Will's creek, or Fort Cumberland, on the Upper Potomac, where the city of Cumberland, Md., now stands.

Almost the first news of the defeat of Braddock was brought to the settlers of the valley of the Antietam by the Indians, who came upon them with tomahawk, scalping knife and firebrand. Up to this time the settlers and Indians had lived together upon the most friendly terms. No quarrel or disturbance between them has been recorded. Suddenly in the winter of 1754 and 1755 every Indian mysteriously disappeared. French emissaries had been among them and had persuaded them to go out to the Ohio to join them in their war against the British.

Their sudden and hostile return, some of their parties with French captains, found the colonists entirely unprepared. Horatio Sharpe was Governor of Maryland at that time, and never was there a more active Governor. He was surrounded with difficulties. The Colonial Legislature was composed mainly of members from the tidewater counties which were in no danger from the Indians, and they were slow and niggardly in making appropriations for the defense of the frontier. Then there was a wrangle with Lord Baltimore about taxation upon his property for purposes of public defense. To this the Proprietor would not submit, and it was made the excuse for permitting the unfortunate frontier settlers to be massacred for lack of a military force to protect them.

Early in the strife, by persistent effort, Governor Sharpe got an appropriation of $6,000 for the construction of Fort Frederick, and his industry and determination were so great that in two months the fort had been sufficiently advanced to accommodate a garrison of 200 men.

The Indian War continued for more than a decade and the depredations and incursions of bands of savages into the valley did not cease until long after the treaty of peace between France and England had been concluded. The horrible cruelties practiced upon the settlers by the Indians so infuriated the whites that they could no longer dwell in peace near each other. About 1766 the Indians disappeared and since then none have lived in Maryland.

Governor Sharp's activity in behalf of the colonists was unremitting. He not only had Fort Frederick built and garisoned, but also made a number of smaller wooden forts or blockhouses as places of refuge for settlers upon any sudden alarm. While Fort Frederick was building, Washington was busily engaged upon a similar work at Winchester, Va. The first incursion of the Indians created such a picnic that almost the entire population of the Maryland valley fled across the country to the older settlements Early in 1756 Washington wrote to Lord Fairfax that the whole colony of Conococheague had fled and that between that place and Frederick City only two families remained. At one time a party of Indians penetrated to within 30 miles of Baltimore, spreading consternation among the people of a great part of the Province and creating a panic in Annapolis. This was a new experience for the people of unimportant conflicts with the Nanticoke Indians a century before, they had always lived upon friendly terms with the Indians and except upon the frontier, had seldom come in contact with them.

From time to time the settlers would return to their homes in the valley. They would seed and harvest their crops in armed bodies and take refuge in the forts at night. Sometimes families would spend the entire summer behind these palisades, returning to their homes after the Indians had retired to the headquarters of the French on the Ohio river, to spend the winter. At other times the people would remain in their homes, trusting to being notified of the approach of danger. When the approach of a band of Indians was discovered a messenger would go swiftly from house to house to warn the inmates. A gentle tap upon the window was the signal. The family would arise in silence and in the darkness take their flight to the nearest fort. Perhaps the messenger would arrive too late, and then the unfortunate persons would be dragged from their beds, men, women and children, and scalped by the light of their burning home.

Those who thus suffered death were fortunate, indeed, in comparison with those who fell into the hands of the savage enemies. The devilish ingenuity of the Indians in inflicting torture almost passes belief. A member of the Conococheague settlement who fell into their hands was buried alive, with only his head above ground. He was then scalped and a fire built near his face The poor creature died in slow agony, his eyes popping from his head. Many were bound to trees and slowly roasted to death or had their flesh torn from their bones, or were disemboweled while yet alive.

During the long period of warfare the principal leaders and defenders of Poultry and Garden Fence.

From all parts of the country there has come a demand for a special poultry fence,—one that could also be used for putting around gardens and yards, and strong enough if necessary to keep out horses, hog and cattle. After careful consideration, the manufacturers of the Electric Welded Fence have designed a "Perfect" fence of this kind at a very moderate price. It is not a netting, understand, but a good substantial fence, and is close enough at the bottom to keep out the smallest chickens, and you need no top or bottom boards. For further information regarding this fence write us for catalogue.

Hancock Jabs.

The Jabber was being scolded the other day by a young lady for not going to church and trying to be good. "Oh, I don't know that I care to be an angel," said he, "I might have trouble getting my coat on over my wings." She mildly suggested, "That he ought to be worried about getting his hat on over his horns."

The Supper At Bethany.

Jesus had worked His greatest miracle under the eaves of the ecclesiastical establishment. It was accepted as a challenge, and steps were immediately taken to compass His death. His hour not yet having come, the Master retired to Ephraim, twenty miles away, near to the wilderness or sparsely populated country. There in company with His disciples, He passed the time in physical and spiritual recuperation. A price was practical set upon His head, for the chief priests and Pharisees had given notice that if any one knew where He was he should give information in order that the arrest might be made. With mingled motives of curiosity, admiration, and opposition the people who had come to Jerusalem in large numbers to attend the Passover made quest for Jesus. For the time He eclipsed both temple and ceremony. As the days passed they began to say to each other in their disappointment, "Is it possible He is not coming to the feast at all?" But when the time was fully come, the Master resolutely set His face toward that slaughter-house of the prophets—Jerusalem. He was fully cognizant of all the peril of going to the city at the juncture. It was in this instance that one significant incident like a shaft of light fell across the inky blackness in which His life closed. It was that high and loving courtesy shown Him in the home in Bethnay. They banqueted Jesus They made a supper in His honor, and in grateful recognition of His merciful deeds.

In the noblest villa of the suburb of Jerusalem, the table with its damask coverings, was set in hollow square, as the custom was. It was surrounded by richly upholstered couches. Shaded lamps cast their full radiance upon the goodly scene. Eye, nostril, ear, and palate were delighted. Color, fragrance, music, and viands match their several organs of sense. According to Oriental custom, the house was open and the interested villagers hung like an animated fringe around the table, sharing with the invited guests sight of the cheer and gladness. On either side of Jesus reclined the trophies of His power—Simon whom He had healed of leprosy, and Lazarus whom He had revived from death. Noble and beautiful women graced and adorned the scene and hour.

One significant and timely deed lifted this feast to the level of a sacrament. Out of her boudoir Mary brought the most precious thing it contained—an Oriental cruse of alabaster, filled with genuine liquid perfume, very precious, the seal of which had never been broken. Her unspeakable gratitude would fain express itself in a deed of reverence and love. Unstintedly she poured the costly liquid upon Jesus' head and feet, using her luxuriant tresses for a towel. In a moment every recess of the house was filled with the subtle and delicious fragrance.

But as may be expected in every human gathering, which of necessity must contain some whose ethical evolution is retarded or stunted, an apple of discord was thrown into this feast of love. It came from the very hand that was filching from the common purse of the apostles. Judas stole the livery of charity in which to serve his own cupidity. He affected benevolence that he might cover his own grasping spirit. Some of the apostles were evidently infected with his carping spirit, at least joined mildly in the specious protest.

Rightly royally did Jesus come to defense of Mary and her deed. He interpreted her action and put the seal of His Divine approval upon it. If she gave Him a momentary and passing embalming, He embalmed her forever in the ineffable incense of His praise: "She hath wrought a good work. She hath done what she could. Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached there shall also this that this women hath done be told for a memorial of her." A practical principle of life is irradiated in connection with this incident. Jesus affirms that deeds which can be done any time must give place to those which can only be done just now. "The poor are always with you; not so I."

The banquet intended for His honor really set the seal of Jesus' doom and hastened it. The banquet couch proved a pedestal to lift him not only in sight of the admiring people, but also of His implacable enemies. The end of it was that not only "much people knew that He was there and came," but immediately also "the chief priests consulted."

came," but immediately also "the chief priests consulted."

The Teacher's Lantern.

A lessen in sacred asthetics is here. Money spent to adorn and beautify religion is never to be begrudged. A cathedral, for example, is a monument to the divine. It teaches and inspires. So wealth expended in awakening the sentiment of worship is never lost. It is always justifiable. Proportionate expenditures upon the artistic and tasteful are to be commended. They are definite contributions to ethical and spiritual evolution.

* * * * *

Much has been said of the "loneliness" of Jesus. But it must also be remembered that He was also much in society. The references are numerous enough to affirm habit. He adorned and beautified many a supper and wedding. His social side was not atrophied.

* * * * *

Judas, by reason of the enormity of his crime, is almost excluded in the average thought from the role of human beings. But it admits of question whether there are not men now living who under similar circumstances would not do exactly as Judas did, He was a man, not a devil from the nether world.

* * * * *

Martha did not sulk. Jesus had on a previous visit criticised her for being troubled with much serving. She did not on that account fly moodily to the other extreme and refuse to serve at all. It is very significant then (although it might be overlooked), when the record says, "Martha served." Taking criticism is a fine art as well as giving it.

* * * * *

Judas' proposition can not be disputed. It was a great sum—$100 in perfumery! The wages of a laborer a whole year! But no higher us of that money could have been made than was made of it. It was a sacramental act. It was an expression of gratitude and reverence. While it did not prelude deeds of charity the latter could not be any substitute for it.

* * * * *

That home at Bethany was ideal. The meshes of the domestic net were soft as silk, but firm as steel. No wonder Jesus loved to be there.

* * * * *

An adult Bible-class is said to have spent the entire hour in discussing the shape of the alabaster-box. It is to be feared that many are busy over husks and shells, pure technique—geography, archæology, and the like, but never reach the subtle fragrance of the ethical and spiritual meaning.

Letter to R. C. Townshend.

Oakland, Md.

Dear Sir: You want a cheap job of paint for a cheap house, don't you?

It's Devoe. It's the regular thing in Devoe; there's nothing, in all paint, so cheap as Devoe.

Oh, yes, you paint with mud; but that isn't paint; you want it to look about right for a month or two.

Paint Devoe; can't do it for less; there's nothing so cheap as Devoe.

It goes so far; save gallons; no matter about the price, save gallons. A gallon of paint, put on, costs $4 or $5; save gallons.

Devoe is your paint; save gallons; Devoe is your paint.

Yours truly

The Summer Girl and Dr. Osler's Theory

CHLOROFORM them, weed them out;
Leave no old man alive;
But forty is a bit too late—
Begin at thirty-five.
The gentleman calls for younger men,
So does the light canoe
And singing to the mandolin
When there are only two.

At forty men are either wed
Or bachelors so set
They scorn poor little Cupid's darts
And shy at Hymen's net.
To moonlight walks they are averse
The tennis court they scorn.
The twostep puts them out of breath,
As beaus their thread is spun.

So poison them and thus make room
For youths who understand
The soda fountain's subtle charm
When summer rules the land.
Remove the fossils; yes, indeed
But when you ply your pills
You might just spare a few papas
To liquidate the bills.

How He Defined Love.

Six-year-old Arthur came home to announce to his family that he was deeply in love with a little girl who lived in the neighborhood.

"What do you mean by being in love?" asked the father.

"Don't you know what love is, papa?" returned this wise child. "It's a stomach ache—only it's in your heart."—New York Globe.

Her Complaint.

Tess—Oh, he makes me tired. He's always trying to kiss me.

Jess—But you told me you liked him so much you wouldn't mind if he did kiss you.

Make Money In California

If you are industrious and capable you can make money there. The big ranches are breaking up into small farms that need more workers to care for the increased product. The towns and cities are prosperous because the country is prosperous.

There are great valleys of the richest soil in America waiting for you. If you have a little capital you can own one of these small farms yourself, or you can rent one on shares and pay for it out of the product in a few years. We will send you descriptive booklets and folders giving full information about the money-making opportunities for every member of the family.

You want to see what the country is really like; you can go there, work a few months, enjoy the delightful climate, the flowers, fruit and scenery, and earn enough to pay your expenses both ways by taking advantage of the

CRUSHING THE SERPENT.

Cardinal Gibbons' recent pronunciamento and the kindred action of the Baltimore annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, opposing the constitutional amendments to be voted upon in November in the State of Maryland, has in all probability sounded the death knell of this inquitous and un-American measure, or more fittingly expressed, has likely caused it to die "a bornin," since the hated bill is in embryo, and can have no real existence as a compulsory regulation until sanctioned by popular vote. With the influence of two such great moral and religious institutions as the Catholic and Methodist churches arrayed against it, wielding beyond question the balance of power those crafty politicians of the Democratic ring, who are promoting the franchise amendment for a dangerous and brutally selfish partisan purpose are destined to defeat 'ere the struggle is half begun.

Rev. A. J. Gill, formerly pastor of the Centre street M. E. church, Cumberland, who tathered the resolution opposing the franchise amendment made an eloquet appeal for human liberty in which he said:

"We do not want to establish a system of caste in America. We talk about the casts in India, which shuts out the light of liberty. Today we are in danger of establishing a system of caste that is more cruel than any system of caste in the world. Can we be consistent and do such things? Must we not as Christians stand for the rights and freedom of humanity? We make loud protestations of our interest in the African race. We have a good institution for the uplifting morally, spiritually and intellectually of these people. It would be better for the Methodist Episcopal church to close all its doors of learning and leave them in the dark without opportunity than to give them these things and then put them in a position of contempt. This resolution adopted by the Legislature was aimed directed at the negroes. Every reform in the state of Maryland has been voted for by the negro voters, and the reason they are to be disfranchised is because they stand for all that is right and good."

While the resolution did not carry by an unanimous vote, 77 clergymen recorded their ballots in its favor and 33 against. The text of the resolution follows:

WHEREAS, A proposed amendment to the Constitution of Maryland to restrict the suffrage is to be submitted to the voters of said state in November next; and

WHEREAS, The proposed amendment, in our judgment, is retrogressive, unwise, unjust and dangerous, and is condemned by the Governor and Attorney-General of the state; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, members of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, feel constrained to expressed our earnest opposition to the proposed measure.

A CHILD-HATER.

George Bernard Shaw, the writer, poses as a child-hater. Having made a reputation for saying smart things, Shaw must needs keep it up at any expense. In a recent article Shaw says the child is not a darling by long odds. "It is a savage, cruel, dirty intolerably inquisitive and indiscreet, etc." Home influence is demoralizing. The boarding school is the only security for the child, etc.

If he is really in earnest about the matter and merely conjuring paradoxes, how empty his life must be. He is to be pitied who can see nothing in an innocent child save a primordial savage. And who say that the sweet inquisitiveness of the babe is intolerable? Yes, charmingly so. Dirty? Sometimes, and picturesquely so. And what sort of home is that ranks in influence. Beneath the boarding school? The greatest saying of Jean Paul Ritcher was this one, "I love God and little children." And the venerable Cardinal Manning beautifully says in one of his books: "That we should approach children with great reverence, for that they are very near to God." Over against Shaw let us write Ritcher and Cardinal Manning.

No man can be great in any line who misses the spiritual significance of things. Shaw never can become great. The purity and power and promise and God-nearness of the child are lost on him. If this man who sees only the outside and somebody's child—the dirty, inquisitive and indiscreet infant—could have a child of his own, that dimpled darling would teach him more in a minute than he has learned in a lifetime.

NEW TOWN OF JENNINGSTOWN

Jennings Bros. Will Establish Big Industry in Tucker County, W. Va.

Jennings Bros., of Lopez, Pa., and of Jennings, Garrett county, Md., both of which places they founded, yesterday shipped two carloads of lumber through Cumberland to the new town of Jenningstown, Tucker county, W. Va., which they are establishing on the junction of the Dry Fork and the Randolph and Pocahontas railroads, thirteen miles south of Hendricks. There they own about twelve thousand acres of fine timber which will be developed as soon as the mills can be erected. Scores of workmen are on the scene and the town is being laid out. They will light the town with electricity, and put sewerage and each company house will be provided with a bath. The town will be located on the Dry Fork river. The Jennings Bros., who built a fifteen mile railroad in Garrett county, Md., are the promoters of the Randolph and Pocahontas railroad to be built from Jenningstown and the first meeting of the stockholders will be held in Elkins on April 12.—Cumberland News.

SHORT RUN.

Frosty night have given way to warmer ones and to all appearances spring is here. The recent freeze came too late however, to avail the sugar maker anything, for warm weather had started the sap.

Very little syrup were made in this section. Real winter weather quickly followed by a time of no frost cut the season short.

Farmers are busily engaged in putting in oats and preparing ground for corn.

Our school closed last Friday with a "feast" in the afternoon and an entertainment at night.

T[illegible] is a custom of our school established ten years ago. It consists of all the good things the season affords served at the schoolhouse to all the neighborhood.

The entertainment was a decided success reflecting credit upon both teacher and pupils. The parts were varied and well rendered. "The Belle of the Tableau" was equally as good acting the part of old Mrs. Higgins in the comic dialogue. From the tot going over his "You scarce expect one of my age to speak in public on the stage" to the blushing, stage stricken sixteen-year-old putting expression and feeling into the pathetic part of "The Legend." They all did well and are to be congratulated.

Miss Cora Weimer is a good teacher and her indecison, upon being asked by the trustees to spend a third winter among us, causes anxiety. She is not only a eminently successful teacher but is a good congenial friend.

Miss Feely, of Altamant, and Misses Florence DeWitt and Mabel Thayer, of near Deer Park, spent Saturday and Sunday in this vicinity.

Bert Wilson will work at Piedmont.

Mr. Chas. W. Jenkins, reporter for the Piedment Independent, took a flying trip to Keyser Saturday.

The school house narrowly escaped burning last week. The proximity of a dwelling where buckets could be had is all that saved it. We understand that the school authorities have forbidden teachers to have buckets in the school houses but the destruction of a few of them will cause the order the be revoked.

Girls look out! The young men of this vicinity have taken the driving craze. As a fair sample of the activity shown, I cite Mr. Milo Wilson. He went to Keyser, purchased a horse from Davis' stable at a fabulous price and as we understand a special job in a buggy is being made. Surely there is some reason for all this sudden impulse and I declare it isn't the condition of the roads, for they are the most used, the least worked and the worst in the county. Someone suggested that the youths argue to themselves that a natty looking turnout might prove a prevention of dreaded bachelorhood. You are right, my boys, nothing so takes a girl as an eventful drive in a comely rig with your own monogram on the seat risers, and again the means of convevance extends your field of operations.

School is out, clement weather is here and the period of inactivity is past. Now we go to work, burn ourselves brown in the sun and start new life coursing through our veins. We are not sorry; we learn lessons of industry from our surroundings and of joy from the birds cheerily singing an awakening carol to sleeping nature. We toil, but on every hand we see natural progress; we feel that we are in harmony, in fact, a part of the great awakening and we are content, happy. Life in the spring-time is one "grand sweet song."

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS LODGE.

Purchased Pritchard Lot on Third Street—Other Sales.

Mr. G. H. Pritchard has sold his lot on Third street in Oakland which has a frontage of forty-five feet on that thoroughfare to the Knights Pythias lodge in Oakland, the sum paid for the property amounting to $1500. The ground will be utilized by the purchaser for the erection of a business block, the second floor of which will be used a lodge room. The order is in good financial standing and is growing in strength as well as favor.

Mr. Pritchard has also disposed of about 130 acres of the Fickey farm to Dr. M. C. Hinebaugh, the deal having been effected one day this week.

FINZELL.

The weather has the appearance of March having borrowed from April.

F. A. Warner has gone to Baltimore to take treatment for his eyes which were injured about a year ago by a dynamite explosion. He has gone to the Presbyterian Hospital.

Miss Nettie Machin, accompanied by Mr. Hardin, of Meyersdale, Pa., visited her sister, Mrs. Lily Finzell, on Sunday.

Mrs. Sarah Finzell and daughter have gone to Westernport to visit her son.

The Great Savage Fireclay Company discharged all their men but about six on last Saturday.

The young son of Isaac Blocher was taken to Johns Hopkins last Monday for treatment and is improving nicely.

Messrs. Lewis McKenzie, Harvey Baker and Allan McKenzie have gone to Kalamazoo, Michigan, to work in the celery gardens.

Henry Finzel, Jr., and William Finzel have secured positions at Barton, Md.

Dr. Briscoe is expected to return from Baltimore on Tuesday to resume the practice of his profession.

Mrs. Jennie M. Finzel is visiting her father at Cumberland, Md.

Henry Durst, of New Germany, Md., and sister Carrie paid friends here a brief visit last Sunday.

The Piney Run Oil & Gas Company have finished their first test well in Gilmer county, W. Va., and have a duster in all sands. The drilling of the well cost about six thousand dollars. The company has about decided to surrender all their property in West Virginia as this is the third dry well drilled on their tract of land.

Frederick Warner, Sr., is very ill at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Jacob Steinla.

Olin Robinson has purchased the timber on the George Baker lot of Mrs. Carrie Coulehan.

William Miller, of the Glades, has purchased the Frank Getz property.

Joel Miller who has been quite ill, has somewhat recovered.

Thomas Johnson is one of the busiest men in our district. He farms one of the largest frams in the district and looks after the large planing mill in Frostburg and with that does quite a lot of building and contracting.

Charles Johnson had the misfortune to get his ankle badly sprained while at work on his mill.

Anthony Diess is very ill with pneumonia.

The political bees are commencing to buzz, but number Nine will have no "buzzer."

PAINT TALK

By J. M. Davis & Sons

LABOR

The cost of Labor for putting on a Paint that is adulterated is the same as putting on a Pure Paint that lasts twice as long. Devoe Lead and Zinc is pure and lasts twice as long as adulterated paint.

CHEAP

A paint that contains adulteration costs less by the gallon but takes more gallons than Devoe Lead and Zinc. Devoe is cheap because it goes further.

Call at our store and get a sample of Devoe Lead and Zinc and let us tell you all about it and show you a great many houses that have been painted with it.

If a dealer can't show you a state chemist's certificate for the paint he is selling, then it is sure to be adulterated.

DON'T

Don't buy any paint that the maker is afraid to put his formula on the label. F. W. Devoe & Co. put the formula of Devoe Lead and Zinc on the label.

DON'T

Don't buy any Paint that is not guaranteed pure and certified to by the state chemist. Call at our store and read the state chemist's certificate on Devoe Lead and Zinc

MILK AND WATER

One gallon of water and one gallon of milk don't make two gallons of milk. Neither does one gallon of paint and one gallon of adulteration make two gallons of paint. Devoe Lead and Zinc is all paint guaranteed strictly pure.

DON'T

Don't buy Paint by the gallon, but by the house. The price of a gallon of Paint don't always tell you how much the Paint for a house will cost. Devoe Lead and Zinc costs less per house than adulterated Paint.

PRICES

White Lead and White Zinc costs about seven cents per pound—Clay and Whiting costs one-half cent per pound. Why buy Whiting and Clay for Paint. Devoe Lead and Zinc contains no Whiting or Clay.

HONESTY

Lead and Oil is honest Paint. But Lead is too soft—chalks off. Zinc is hard and tough, and when ground in with the lead, prevents chalking. But they must be ground fine to combine. Devoe Lead and Zinc is famous for fineness.

You can always buy Paint for less than Devoe Lead and Zinc. Don't save your money.

QUANTITY

300 square feet of surface will take one gallon Devoe Lead and Zinc for TWO coats. Figure the size of your house and see how much the Paint costs.

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. McCandlish, of Friendsville, came up to Oakland Monday afternoon where they took the train for Grafton, returning to Oakland Tuesday evening.

Rev. J. A. McClelland and Mr. Scott T. Jones went to Jacksonburg, West Va., Tuesday evening where they are attending the meeting of the Presbytery of West Virginia and Western Maryland.

W. F. King, who has been finishing the new Webster Springs Hotel for Col. John L. McGraw, will return to Oakland about the 22nd of this month and will be ready for all the first class work in his line that may come his way.

Mr. Floyd Duckworth, of near Bloomington, was here Tuesday when he filed for probate in the Orphans' Court the last will and testament of his father, the late Aden C. Duckworth, who died on March 28th, after a long illness.

Attorney Orval Speelman, of Selby sport District, was in Oakland Tuesday in company with Mr. John Hileman, of Somerset county, Pa., who was here to transact some business with the Orphans' Court relative to closing up the estate of the latter's son-in-law, recently deceased.

The Board of County Commissioners, in session Tuesday, and yesterday and to-day, will probably adjourn tomorrow after signing the levy for the current year. Taxes will be slightly increased over last year, but this is necessary in order to meet legitimate expenses.

Rev. Thomas S. Long, Superintendent of the Park, who was at Washington, where he attended the sessions of the Baltimore Conference of the M. E. church, returned home on Saturday last and on Monday visited Oakland on business connected with the Park interests.

Mr. John Ault, of Oakland, who spent last week in Pittsburg, returned to Oakland Thursday afternoon and will leave for Pittsburg early next week where he will be engaged until along in July superintending the completion of a flat being erected in that city by one of her residents.

Messrs. J. M. Gamble, of Roanoke, Va., and John Bond, of Brockwayville, Pa., were in Oakland last Thursday afternoon, accompanied by Mr. N. U. Bond, of Bond, this county. The first named gentlemen remained here until Saturday inspecting the plant of the Preston Lumber and Coal Company.

Mr. C. A. Bender of Grantsville, was a town visitor Saturday. May first he takes charge of the upper hotel there which he purchased some months ago. He will make a good landlord and there is no doubt as to what kind of a house he will keep. He is very obliging and will make his guests feel at home.—Meyersdale Commercial.

Mr. James S. Lakin, of Terra Alta, has announced his candidacy for the nomination for Congress from the Second Congressional District of West Virginia. The convention to make the nomination will be held at Keyser some time during the present month and a special election will be held early in May when the candidate will be voted for. Mr. Lakin's friends say that his chances are extremely good.

Mr. Chas. J. Newman, the efficient rural router on the Oakland Brookside rural route, made his initial trip yesterday in a specially designed mail wagon, which he received on Tuesday from the manufacturers. The wagon is constructed solely for the purposes and is arranged looking solely to convenience of the carrier for the collection and distribution of mail matter.

Mr. John E. Gnagey, of Accident, returned to his home in that village on last Wednesday from a point near Dayton, Ohio, where he purchased a suburban home and will move thence with his family next October. By the removal of Mr. Gnagey and his estimable family from Accident the entire community will loose a good citizen, to the regret of all his friends and acquaintances, both at home and in other sections of the county.

Messrs. W. H. Chadderton, manager, and Hugh Calderwood, shepherd, for the Altamont Springs Farm owned by Col. Truesdell near Deer Park, were in Oakland yesterday and made this office a business visit. Shearing has already commenced at this farm and the clip will be in excess of last year when several thousand pounds of wool were sheared. Last week a Mr Witherell, of Vermont, visited the Truesdell place and contracted for a flock of lambs to be exported to Capetown, South Africa, where the animals will be used for breeding purposes.

Miss Icy Grew Hot.

Miss Icy Michael, of Frostburg, didn't like her sister's beau and tried to scare him away by firing a revolver in his vicinity. He and his girl objected to such proceedings and had her arrested. Squire Chambers fined her $5.00 for assault and sentenced her to six months in jail, and $20 fine for carrying concealed weapons. She took an appeal on the latter, declaring that she never had the revolver concealed at all.

The officers do seem to have a peculiar way of constraining all revolvers carried as "concealed;" also of deciding that all men who are found drunk are "drunk and disorderly." Even a drunken man is entitled to justice, for they are all "good fellows when sober."

Last Saturday night about ten o'clock William Ward, formerly of Oakland, went to the home of P. S. Lewis, located near the Offutt farm, south of Oakland, and after rousing Mr. Lewis from his slumbers by a shout, attempted to force an entrance This was resisted from the inside but Ward persisted and succeeded in breaking down the door. As he shot into the kitchen Mr. Lewis fired at him with a rifle but the ball went wild and missed its mark. A hand to hand fight ensued in which the gun was broken and with the barrel Lewis pounded Ward into insensibility. Dr. Selby dressed Ward's hurts on Sunday morning and the following day Mr. Lewis came to town and had a warrant issued for the offender's arrest. When Officer Frantz went to serve the warrant Ward had left, but he was located and arrested at Westernport as he alighted from a train on the West Virginia Central Tuesday morning. He was brought to Oakland the same evening and given a hearing on the charge yesterday by Justice Gonder who held him in $500 bail for his appearence at the March Term, and in default was remanded to jail.

As the Train Rolled North

By FRANK H. SWEET

Copyright, 1904, by Frank H. Sweet

When the Southern Palm Limited drew out from Jacksonville, northbound, there were two young men on board under widely different circumstances. One was crouching upon the second step of a Pullman, forward, with his eyes fixed grimly upon the door through which the conductor would pass on his round of ticket collecting. The other was in the observation car at the rear of the train two seats from the end, staring at an open letter with eyes widened in despair, horror and desperation.

This train made few stops, but at the first station, in obedience to a signal from the bell cord, it slowed down sufficiently for the conductor and brakeman to thrust the man from the second step of the Pullman; then it shot ahead at full speed to make up the few seconds lost. The tramp remained standing where he had dropped, his face now keen and alert, and his right arm upraised. As it swept by the train brushed his clothing and the wind of it stirred his rough, unkempt hair and beard. Three cars passed; then came the observation car. Suddenly his hand closed like a vise upon the rear railing, his body swung out and writhed for a few moments in midair, then his feet caught, and he drew himself in by sheer force of muscle and nerve to the same crouching position he had occupied on the Pullman forward.

Inside the car the other man was now tearing the letter into the most minute fragments, as if striving to annihilate its contents. When the pieces were too small for further reduction they swept through the open window and were scattered thinly over a half a mile of the roadbed. The man rose and glanced about the car. It was almost empty, and the other passengers were buried in papers or books. He turned back quickly, opened the door, and with a light spring threw himself from the train, but not to the ground! Just as he sprang, the tramp flung himself out suddenly, with nothing but his left hand grasping the rail. As the two bodies came together the tramp's right arm closed like a steel band around the other, while the weight of it bore them down, down, until their legs almost swept the mocking rails of the roadbed.

Not many men—not one in a thousand—could have sustained such a weight in such a position, swinging from side to side under the motion of a train going at fifty miles an hour, but gradually, little by little, the left arm contracted and drew them up, up and in until finally, with a last desperate effort, they were both crouching upon the rear platform, white, gasping, too exhausted to stand or speak.

The well dressed man recovered first. The horror was still in his eyes, but with it was something more. Perhaps that instant in midair, with death in front, had made him see more clearly; perhaps his miraculous rescue had made possible the greater rescue from himself. As he rose staggeringly the tramp's arm went out in feeble protest, but a hand fell upon the arm gently.

"No need of that now, my friend," the still white lips whispered. "I am awake and in my right mind. I shall never attempt anything like that again."

The train began to slacken, and at that moment the door opened and the conductor came out. They were passing over a short piece of road where repairs were being made, and slow speed was necessary. The conductor nodded to his passenger, but seemed surprised at his disheveled appearance. Then his gaze fell upon the tramp, and his face darkened.

"You here," he exclaimed, "after being put off once too? And, from the looks of this young man, you have been up to more than stealing a ride this time. I"—

There was a sudden jerk, which intimated that the train was about to increase its speed. The conductor caught the tramp by the shoulder and with a quick twist sent him from the train. The passenger uttered an angry cry of remonstrance and tried to stay the act, but too late. As the train gathered headway they saw the tramp go plunging and staggering down a steep embankment at the bottom of which he righted himself and waved his hand cheerfully at the receding train.

Five minutes later the young man was back in the car, two seats from the end, still dazed and white. Suddenly the door at the forward end opened, and a girl entered, holding a paper in her hand. She came straight to him.

"Robert, what does this awful thing about you mean?" she exclaimed. "I suppose you have seen the paper."

He was holding to the back of the seat for support, his face drawn and haggard.

"No, you needn't show it to me, Helen," he answered. "I have not seen the paper, but I know what it contains. It is true. I only discovered it myself a short time ago. I was given my [illegible] as we left the hotel and slipped it into my pocket. I did not read it until I left you and your mother and came back to the observation car just now. It was all in a letter from my partner."

The girl looked at him, her lips trembling, but she smiled. "I know it is not true, Robert," she declared positively, "not a word of it. I have known you ever since we went to school together, and you are utterly incapable of a thing like that. You have not read the paper, so you do not understand. Why, Robert"—her voice quivered with indignation—"the paper says you stole half a million dollars, and from poor people, mostly people whose means of support it was. It's absurd. You have been with us the last three months, and this has all happened within that time."

"But don't you see it's just the same, Helen," he said gently. "The money was intrusted to me, and I am the sole one responsible. If I neglected the trust and allowed my partner an opportunity to do the rest I am really the one to blame."

"I say you are not," she interrupted emphatically. "Maybe it was unbusinesslike and maybe you are legally responsible—I do not know about that. But I do know you are no more guilty than I am in the way the paper puts it. Of course you will let every cent of your property go toward paying these poor people, and if it isn't enough we will pay the rest off just as fast as we can earn it."

"Helen, Helen!" he remonstrated sharply. "You must not talk like that. You do not understand. We cannot be married now. Why, dear, I may be arrested."

"All the more need you will have for my help, then," she replied quickly. "If I am to be a helpmeet there will never be more occasion for it than now. We will be married just as soon as we reach Washington, just as we planned, and then we will work together to live this thing down. Why, Robert!"

For the young man's head had suddenly dropped to the back of the seat, and his shoulders were heaving convulsively. She sank to the seat beside him, slipping one of her hands into his, stroking it softly until he should regain control of himself.

And miles behind them on the track sat a tramp waiting for the next freight.

Wanted Judge to Be Overruled.

Up in Maine there is an old custom of opening the courts with prayer, which custom in one instance, described with considerable gusto by ex-Judge Henry E. Howland, led to a petition with which the judge couldn't exactly sympathize. The minister who was to officiate at this court was one of the good old fashioned, simple living, long praying kind who flourish in country churches. He prayed for the welfare of the nation and its executive and his cabinet; he prayed for the state officials and for mankind in general. Then, "O Lord, give to this presiding judge the wisdom he so much needs," besought the dominie with fervor. "Overrule his decisions to thine eternal honor and glory." The presiding judge, appreciating the spirit of the petition, while hardly relishing his diction, had to live down the reputation which his associates tried to confer on him in accordance with the characterization of the prayer.—New York Tribune.

Hindoos and Cows.

The Hindoos, or natives of India, worship idols of wood and stone. They also worship animals and plants. The cow is considered the most sacred animal; still they worship the ox and the bull, the fish, tortoise and bear; also serpents, monkeys, demons and spirits. They believe that when a person dies the soul passes into some animal or plant and lives another life, continuing to do so until it has lived millions of lives. They think that perhaps some one of their ancestors may be living in the cow or some other animal. For that reason they are very kind to animals and dare not allow them to be killed. When the cows become old, or for that reason become helpless, they are sent to the "asylum for animals" in Punjakole, India, where they are well kept for the rest of their lives. A good Brahman or Hindoo priest will feed his cow before he takes his own breakfast.

In the Natural Way.

During a session of the supreme court of Maine at Augusta a tedious and complicated real estate case had pretty nearly worn out the patience of the counsel on both sides. One of the lawyers engaged was Fred A. Appleton, whose fame as a wit was widespread.

Opposing him was a lawyer of pompous mien and much avoirdupois, who kept making blunder after blunder until even the judge became irritated. After making a particularly aggravating error he said:

"I beg your honor's pardon; that was another mistake. I seem to be inoculated with dullness today."

"Inoculated, brother?" said Mr. Appleton. "I thought you had it in the natural way."

Some Lively Kicker Items

Happenings That Keep the Editor Hustling—How a Dispute Between Grizzly Bill and Terrific Tom Ended.

OUR esteemed contemporary came out last week with an announcement that we were loafing in the Red Front saloon on a certain evening to the detriment of our dignity. His statement lacks truth. As editor of the Kicker we went in for a nip. As mayor, after the nip had been disposed of, we took a loaf around to see if any of the ordinances were being violated.

The editor of the Kicker, who is ourself, and the mayor of this town, who is also ourself, are in receipt of invitations to attend the opening of the Pacific poker rooms next week. As editor of the Kicker we shall accept the invitation, but as mayor we shall decline it. This will probably give us a chance to go as a private individual without hurting anybody's feelings.

As will be noticed in another column, Colonel Tom Taylor is no more. He died at his residence on Shawnee avenue Thursday night, passing away so peacefully that his wife didn't know that the grim destroyer had entered the house until after the colonel had been dead for some time. He was a good man, as men average. True, we had to shoot him about once in three months to let him understand that he didn't own and run the Kicker, but we always paid the doctor bills and convinced him that we had acted in his own interests. Peace to his ashes.

Last Tuesday afternoon a man calling himself Grizzly Bill got into a dispute at the Red Trout saloon with an individual who has been generally known around town as Terrific Tom. Both drew their guns and adjourned to the sidewalk and began shooting. Twelve shots were fired, and the only thing hit was Major Callahan's bulldog, who died an hour later. When the parties were arrested and brought before us as mayor we fined each $25, and in default they went to jail for three months apiece. The fine was not imposed so much for infraction of the ordinance as for the poor shooting they did.

Yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock an individual known as Jim Furlong, who supposed the editor of the Kicker was at home, rode up and down in front of the office on an old mule and yelled for gore and did a heap of bragging. We were over to Lone Jack at the time and could not attend to Mr. Furlong's case, but we hope he will repeat his performance at an early date.

We are in receipt of an invitation to deliver an address before the Oregonian Society of Archaeology early in June, taking as our subject the antiquities of Arizona as we have found them. We must decline with thanks. While this territory has lots of antiquities, including our esteemed contemporary, of which we are justly proud, we have no railroad pass to Portland, and the society says nothing about paying our hotel bill. When a man starts out to lecture for nothing and pays his own way to boot he is either a snide or an ass, and we don't want to be classed with either.

We don't want to find fault with the way the coroner conducts his office, as he is a green hand at it, but we do feel like throwing out a gentle suggestion that we believe is worthy of his consideration. In three different instances where he has gone over to Clinch Valley to inquest on bodies found hanging to trees the verdict has been, "Cause unknown." There should be no hesitancy in stating that the deceased was hanged by the neck until dead and that he deserved it. If he hadn't deserved hanging, he wouldn't have got there, and no one will blame the crowd who pulled on the rope.

Some of the executed may have relatives who will some day want to know all about it, and they should not be deceived into believing that this climate is bad for heart affections or that mountain fever breaks out every week or two and carries off half a dozen people.

The great and glorious west has a reputation to maintain, and all official facts should be given straight from the shoulder, no matter whose feelings are hurt. M. QUAD.

ionable dress, which completely masks feminine personality under designs of pure convention, despoils it of its principal attraction. From this abuse it comes about that many things which women admire do as much wrong to their beauty as to the purses of their husbands and fathers. What would you say of a young girl who expressed her thoughts in terms very choice indeed, but taken word for word from a phrase book? What charm could you find in this borrowed language? The effect of toilets well designed in themselves, but seen again and again on all women indiscriminately, is precisely the same.

I cannot resist citing here a passage from Camille Lemonnier that harmonizes with my idea:

"Nature has given to the fingers of woman a charming art, which she knows by instinct and which is peculiarly her own, as silk to the worm and lacework to the swift and subtle spider. She is the poet, the interpreter of her own grace and ingenuousness, the spinner of the mystery in which her wish to please arrays itself. All the talent she expends in her effort to equal man in the other arts is never worth the spirit and conception wrought out through a bit of stuff in her skillful hands.

"Well, I wish that this art were more honored than it is. As education should consist in thinking with one's mind, feeling with one's heart, expressing the little personalities of the inmost, invisible 'I'—which, on the contrary, are repressed, leveled down, by conformity—I would that the young girl in her novitiate of womanhood, the future mother, might early become the little exponent of this art of the toilet—her own dressmaker, in short—she who one day shall make the dresses of her children, but with the taste and the gift to improvise, to express herself in that masterpiece of feminine personality and skill, a gown, without which a woman is no more than a bundle of rags."

The dress you have made for yourself is almost always the most becoming, and, however that may be, it is the one that pleases you most. Women of leisure too often forget this; working women also in city and country alike. Since these last are costumed by dressmakers and milliners in very doubtful imitation of the modish world, grace has almost disappeared from their dress. And has anything more surely the gift to please than the fresh apparition of a young working girl or a daughter of the fields wearing the costume of her country and beautiful from her simplicity alone?

These same reflections might be applied to the fashion of decorating and arranging our houses. If there are toilets which reveal an entire conception of life, hats that are poems, knots of ribbon that are veritable works of art so there are interiors which after their manner speak to the mind. Why, under pretext of decorating our homes, do we destroy that personal character which always has such value? Why have our sleeping rooms conform to those of hotels, our reception rooms to waiting rooms, by making predominant a uniform type of official beauty?

What a pity to go through the houses of a city, the cities of a country, the countries of a vast continent, and encounter everywhere certain forms identical, inevitable, exasperating by their repetition! How aesthetics would gain by more simplicity! Instead of this luxury in job lots, all these decorations, pretentious, but vapid from iteration, we should have an infinite variety; happy improvisations would strike our eyes, the unexpected in a thousand forms would rejoice our hearts, and we should rediscover the secret of impressing on a drapery or a piece of furniture that stamp of human personality which makes certain antiques priceless.

Let us pass at last to things simpler still; I mean the little details of housekeeping which many young people of our day find so unpoetical. Their contempt for material things, for the humble cares a house demands, arises from a confusion very common, but none the less unfortunate, which comes from the belief that beauty and poetry are within some things, while others lack them; that some occupations are distinguished and agreeable, such as cultivating letters, playing the harp, and that others are menial and disagreeable, like blacking shoes, sweeping and watching the pot boil. Childish error! Neither harp nor broom has anything to do with it. All depends on the hand in which they rest and the spirit that moves it. Poetry is not in things; it is in us. It must be impressed on objects from without, as the sculptor impresses his dream on the marble. If our life and our occupations remain too often without charm in spite of any outward distinction they may have it is because we have not known how to put anything into them. The height of art is to make the inert live and to tame the savage. I would have our young girls apply themselves to the development of the truly feminine art of giving a soul to things which have none. The triumph of woman's charm is in that work. Only a woman knows how to put into a home that indefinable something whose virtue has made the poet say, "The house top rejoices and is glad." They say there are no such things as fairies or that there are fairies no longer, but they know not what they say. The original of the fairies sung by poets was found and is still among those amiable mortals who knead bread with energy, mend rents with cheerfulness, nurse the sick with smiles, put witchery into a ribbon and genius into a stew.

It is indisputable that the culture of the fine arts has something refining about it and that our thoughts and acts are in the end impregnated with that which strikes our eyes. But the exercise of the arts and the contemplation of their products are restricted privileges. It is not given to every one to possess, to comprehend or to create fine things. Yet there is a kind of ministering beauty which may make its way everywhere—the beauty which springs from the hands of our wives and daughters. Without it what is the most richly decorated house? A dead dwelling place. With it the barest home has life and brightness. Among the forces capable of transforming the will and increasing happiness there is perhaps none in more universal use than this beauty. It knows how to shape itself by means of the crudest tools in the midst of the greatest difficulties. When the dwelling is cramped, the purse limited, the table modest, a woman who has the gift finds a way to make order, fitness and convenience reign in her house. She puts care and art into everything she undertakes. To do well what one has to do is not in her eyes the privilege of the rich, but the right of all. That is her aim, and she knows how to give her home a dignity and an attractiveness that the dwellings of princes, if everything is left to mercenaries, cannot possess.

Thus understood life quickly shows itself rich in hidden beauties, in attractions and satisfactions close at hand. To be oneself, to realize in one's natural place the kind of beauty which is fitting there—this is the ideal. How the mission of woman broadens and deepens in significance when it is summed up in this: To put a soul into the inanimate and to give to this gracious spirit of things those subtle and winsome outward manifestations to which the most brutish of human beings is sensible! Is not this better than to covet what one has not and to give oneself up to longings for a poor imitation of others' finery?

CHAPTER XII.

PRIDE AND SIMPLICITY IN THE INTERCOURSE OF MEN.

IT would perhaps be difficult to find a more convincing example than pride to show that the obstacles to a better, stronger, serener life are rather in us than in circumstances. The diversity and, more than that, the contrasts in social conditions give rise inevitably to all sorts of conflicts. Yet, in spite of this, how greatly would social relations be simplified if we put another spirit into mapping out our plan of outward necessities! Be well persuaded that it is not primarily differences of class and occupation, differences in the outward manifestations of their destinies, which embroil men. If such were the case, we should find an idyllic peace reigning among colleagues and all those whose interests and lot are virtually equivalent. On the contrary, as every one knows, the most violent shocks come when equal meets equal, and there is no war worse than civil war. But that which above all things else hinders men from good understanding is pride. It makes a man a hedgehog, wounding every one he touches. Let us speak first of the pride of the great.

What offends me in this rich man passing in his carriage is not his equipage, his dress or the number and splendor of his retinue. It is his contempt. That he possesses a great fortune does not disturb me, unless I am badly disposed. But that he splashes me with mud, drives over my body, shows by his whole attitude that I count for nothing in his eyes because I am not rich, like himself—this is what disturbs me, and righteously. He heaps suffering upon me needlessly. He humiliates and insults me gratuitously. It is not what is vulgar within me, but what is noblest, that asserts itself in the face of this offensive pride. Do not accuse me of envy. I feel none. It is my manhood that is wounded. We need not search far to illustrate these ideas. Every man of any acquaintance with life has had numerous experiences which will justify our dictum in his eyes.

In certain communities devoted to material interests the pride of wealth dominates to such a degree that men are quoted like values in the stock market. The esteem in which a man is held is proportionate to the contents of his strong box. Here "society" is made up of big fortunes, the middle class of medium fortunes. Then come people who have little, then those who have nothing. All intercourse is regulated by this principle. And the relatively rich man who has shown his disdain for those less opulent is crushed in turn by the contempt of his superiors in fortune. So the madness of comparison rages from the summit to the base. Such an atmosphere is ready to perfection for the nurture of the worst feeling. Yet it is not wealth, but the spirit of the wealthy, that must be arraigned.

Many rich men are free from this gross conception—especially is this true of those who from father to son are accustomed to ease—yet they sometimes forget that there is a certain delicacy in not making contrasts too marked. Suppose there is no wrong in enjoying a large superfluity, is it indispensable to display it, to wound the eyes of those who lack necessities, to flaunt one's magnificence at the doors of poverty? Good taste and a sort of modesty always hinder a well man from talking of his fine appetite, his sound sleep, his exuberance of spirits, in the presence of one dying of consumption. Many of the rich do not exercise this tact and so are greatly wanting in pity and discretion. Are they not unreasonable to complain of envy after having done everything to provoke it?

But the greatest lack is that want of discernment which leads men to ground their pride in their fortune. To begin with, it is a childish confusion of thought to consider wealth as a personal quality. It would be hard to find a more ingenuous fashion of deceiving oneself as to the relative value of the container and the thing contained. I have no wish to dwell on this question. It is too painful. And yet one cannot resist saying to those concerned: "Take care; do not confound what you possess with what you are. Go learn to know the underside of worldly splendor, that you may feel its moral misery and its puerility." The traps pride sets for us are too ridiculous. We should distrust association with a thing that makes us hateful to our neighbors and robs us of clearness of vision.

He who yields to the pride of riches forgets this other point, the most important of all, that possession is a public trust. Without doubt individual wealth is as legitimate as individual existence and liberty. These things are inseparable, and it is a dream pregnant with dangers that offers battle to such fundamentals of life. But the individual touches society at every point, and all he does should be done with the whole in view. Possession, then, is less a privilege of which to be proud than a charge whose gravity should be felt. As there is an apprenticeship, often very difficult to serve, for the exercise of every social office, so this profession we call wealth demands an apprenticeship. To know how to be rich is an art, and one of the least easy of arts to master. Most people, rich and poor alike, imagine that in opulence one has nothing to do but to take life easy. That is why so few men know how to be rich. In the hands of too many wealth, according to the genial and redoubtable comparison of Luther, is like a harp in the hoofs of an ass. They have no idea of the manner of its use.

So when we encounter a man at once rich and simple—that is to say, who considers his wealth as a means of fulfilling his mission in the world—we should offer him our homage, for he is surely mark worthy. He has surmounted obstacles, borne trials and triumphed in temptations, both gross and subtle. He does not fail to discriminate between the contents of his pocketbook and the contents of his head or heart, and he does not estimate his fellow men in figures. His exceptional position, instead of exalting him, makes him humble, for he is very sensible of how far he falls short of reaching the level of his duty. He has remained a man. That says it all. He is accessible, helpful and far from making of his wealth a barrier to separate him from other men; he makes it a means for coming nearer and nearer to them. Although the profession of riches has been so dishonored by the selfish and the proud, such a man as this always makes his worth felt by every one not devoid of a sense of justice. Each of us who comes in contact with him and sees him live is forced to look within and ask himself the question, "What would become of me in such a situation—should I keep this modesty, this naturalness, this uprightness which uses its own as though it belonged to others?" So long as there is a human society in the world, so long as there are bitterly conflicting interests, so long as envy and egoism exist on the earth, nothing will be worthier of honor than wealth permeated by the spirit of simplicity. And it will do more than make itself forgiven; it will make itself beloved.

More dangerous than pride inspired by wealth is that inspired by power, and I mean by the word every prerogative that one man has over another, be it unlimited or restricted. I see no means of preventing the existence in the world of men of unequal authority. Every organism supposes a hierarchy of powers; we shall never escape from that law. But I fear that if the love of power is so widespread the spirit of power is almost impossible to find. From wrong understanding and misuse of it those who keep even a fraction of authority almost everywhere succeed in compromising it.

Power exercises a great influence over him who holds it. A head must be very well balanced not to be disturbed by it. The sort of dementia which took possession of the Roman emperors in the time of their world-wide rule is a universal malady whose symptoms belong to all times. In every man there sleeps a tyrant, awaiting only a favorable occasion for waking. Now, the tyrant is the worst enemy of authority, because he furnishes us its intolerable caricature, whence come a multitude of social complications, collisions and hatreds. Every man who says to those dependent on him, "Do this because it is my will and pleasure," does ill. There is within each one of us something that invites us to resist personal power, and this something is very respectable, for at bottom we are equal, and there is no one who has the right to exact obedience from me because he is he and I am I. If he does so his command degrades me, and I have no right to suffer myself to be degraded.

One must have lived in schools, in workshops, in the army, in government offices, he must have closely followed the relations between masters and servants, have observed a little everywhere where the supremacy of man exercises itself over man, to form any idea of the injury done by those who use power arrogantly. Of every free soul they make a slave soul, which is to say the soul of a rebel. And it appears that this result, with its social disaster, is most certain when he who commands is least removed from the station of him who obeys. The most implacable tyrant is the tyrant himself under authority. Foremen and overseers put more violence into their dealings than superintendents and employers. The corporal is generally harsher than the colonel. In certain families where madam has not much more education than her maid the relations between them are those of the convict and his warder. And woe everywhere to him who falls into the hands of a subaltern drunk with his authority!

We forget that the first duty of him who exercises power is humility. Haughtiness is not authority. It is not we who are the law; the law is over our heads. We only interpret it, but to make it valid in the eyes of others we must first be subject to it ourselves. To command and to obey in the society of men are, after all, but two forms of the same virtue—voluntary servitude. If you are not obeyed, it is generally because you have not yourself obeyed first.

The secret of moral ascendency rests with those who rule with simplicity. They soften by the spirit the harshness of the fact. Their authority is not in shoulder straps, titles or disciplinary measures. They make use of neither ferule nor threats, yet they achieve everything. Why? Because we feel that they are themselves ready for everything. That which confers upon a man the right to demand of another the sacrifice of his time, his money, his passions, even his life, is not only that he is resolved upon all these sacrifices himself, but that he has made them in advance. In the command of a man animated by this spirit of renunciation there is a mysterious force which communicates itself to him who is to obey and helps him do his duty.

In all the provinces of human activity there are chiefs who inspire, strengthen, magnetize their soldiers; under their direction the troops do prodigies. With them one feels himself capable of any effort, ready to go through fire, as the saying has it, and if he goes it is with enthusiasm.

But the pride of the exalted is not the only pride; there is also the pride of the humble—this arrogance of mod-the colonists were Thomas Cresap and his son Michael. The former had a shadow cast upon his memory by an unjust accusation that it was he who treacherously killed Logan, the Indian chief. Thomas Cresap was born in Yorkshire, England, and emigrated to Maryland early in life. He received in 1739 a grant from Lord Baltimore of a tract of land near the present city of Hagerstown. It was one of the earliest grants in Maryland west of the Blue Ridge. This farm subsequently became the property of Col. Thomas Hart, the father of Lucretia Hart, the wife of Henry Clay, and here Mrs. Clay was born. Cresap spent a considerable portion of his time at a hunting lodge in the wilderness near the South Branch of the Potomac. He accompanied General Braddock on his campaign, having from his friend, Governor Dunmare, a commission of captain of one of the Virginia companies. He was associated with Washington in the Ohio Company enterprise. Cresap and his son, Michael, adopted the Indian costume and fought the Indians to some extent, according to their own fashion. He was a close friend of Lord Baltimore, and was at one time sent by the proprietor to represent him and protect the northern part of his domain, which was claimed by the proprietor of Pennsylvania, who subsequently got it. Cresap at that time resisted by force Penn's sheriffs and was besieged in a block house he had built upon the Susquehanna near the present city of Columbus. The house was fired and in attempting to escape, Cressap was captured, carried to Philadelphia and exhibited to the people as the "Maryland monster."

Michael Cressap was no less brave than his distinguished father. But his career was shorter. Before the Declaration of Independence was made he had raised a body of soldiers and had marched at their head to Boston and in the war Washington had no braver nor more efficient men than these Marylanders and those from the adjacent portion of the valley of Virginia, led by General Morgan. Soon after arriving in camp Cressap's health failed and he left for his home on sick leave. He did not get father than New York, however. There he died, and was buried in Old Trinity Churchyard, where his tombstone may yet be seen.

Lack of appropriations by the Legislature prevented the Governor from maintaining constantly a garrison at Fort Frederick during the Indian war After the war it was entirely abandoned until the Revolution, when it was fitted up as a military prison. The British army at no time approached within 50 or 75 miles of it, and here the prisoners were safe from recapture. One party of them escaped by digging under the walls, but as a rule they showed but little desire to get away. The fort was under the command of Moses Rawlings, deputy commissioner of prisoners. For a time it was the practice to permit the prisoners to leave the fort and hire themselves to the farmers of the neighborhood. After they were exchanged many of them settled down and became citizens. Among others who did so was a portion of the army of General Burgoyne. In this party was an Irish ensign named Whistler, who afterward became an officer in the United States army in the Whiskey Rebellion and in the Indian wars. From him the artist Whistler was a descendant.

During the Civil War the fort was occasionally occupied by passing bodies of troops, and there is a hole in the south wall made by General Kenly, who mounted a cannon to shoot at parties of Confederates on the other side of the Potomac. In 1790 the Legislature of Maryland authorized the sale of the Fort Frederick property, 150 acre of land, and it was accordingly sold. It is now owned by a family of colored people.

The history of Fort Frederick is not without its romance. Several times during the old war the French despatched parties to capture it. In 1756 a party of about 50 Indians under a French captain crossed the mountains from the West. The captain carried written instructions to proceed to Fort Frederick and there meet another party which had preceded it to capture the fort and blow up the magazine. This party marched through the Virginia settlements which skirted the south bank of the Potomac, burned the houses, killed and scalped the people or carried them off prisoners. A body of settlers met and defeated this party and killed the Frenchman. The other party having also met with losses from the rifles of the settlers, the attack upon the fort was abandoned and a hasty raid was made upon the the settlers, and then the party left for the West. The story of two of the prisoners who were carried off by this band was told as follows by the late Charles James Faulkner, of Virginia:

"It was about daylight on the 17th of September, 1756, that this band of Indians surprised a little fort not far from Fort Frederick and murdered and scalped all they found in it. On their return they passed the house of William Stockton, east of the North Mountain, opposite the Maryland fort, who about an hour before their arrival, unconscious of the danger, had gone with wife to perform the last duties to a dying neighbor about two miles distant, leaving their children at home. The Indians seized two of these children, George, a boy of 15, and Isabella, a girl then 10 years of age, and carried them off as captives to the North. George, who was a youth of remarkable energy and spirit, after a captivity of three years made his escape and returned to his home in Berkeley county with his feelings deeply embittered against the Indians and their allies the French.

"Isabella Stockton, after being with them something upward of a month, was sold by them to a wealthy Canadian trader, who took her to his home near Montreal and being touched by the artless manners and prepossessing qualities of the child, bestowed, with his wife, every care on her education and training which the condition of the country then permitted. At 16 years of age she had developed into a girl of extraordinary beauty and attractions. At this time there arrived from France a nephew by the name of Jean Baptiste Plata, a young man highly educated and of the noblest and most chivalic traits of character. Living in the same house with Isabella, a mutual attachment soon sprang up between them, and in about one year he made known to his uncle his purpose to ask her hand in marriage. The uncle approved his purpose and the young man opened the subject to Isabella. She told him that she could not disguise from him her deep attachment to him, but she felt compelled to disclose to him what she had never before breathed to any human being—something of her early history. When but 10 years of age she had been taken as a captive from her parents by the Indians and had been sold to his uncle. The images of her dear father and mother had been continually present to her mind from that day to this. Her dreams had kept their faces and features as fresh and vivid in her memory as if she had seen them every day and she did not feel that she could with satisfaction to herself change her relations in life until she had once more revisited her home in Virginia, and if her parents were still alive to ask their consent to the proposed marriage.

"The young Frenchman promptly offered to take her to her parents not for a moment doubting that they would cordially ratify his union with their daughter. He accordingly procured the necessary horses from his uncle and they started on their long and perilous journey. They arrived safely in the county of Berkeley and he delivered her into the embraces of her astonished and delighted parents. For a few days all was gladness and joy. But as soon as it was communicated to them that the young Frenchman was engaged to and desired their daughter in marriage then all the animosity of the persecuted settlers sprang up in their bosoms. A Frenchman at that day was more hateful to a Virginia backwoodsman than even a Shawnee Indian, for they regarded them as the instigators and fomenters of all the cold-blooded murderers and barbarities which had drenched their settlement in blood. His proposal of marriage was rejected; he was even ordered to leave the house, but he lingered long enough in the neighborhood to mature an arrangement with Isabella by which he might effect her escape and both return to Canada.

"Availing himself of the opportunity when the father and George were absent on a hunt across the North Mountain, the two lovers started on their journey northward. The day after their departure the father and son returned, when the enraged father, discovering the flight, gave his orders to the fiery and impetuous George to go immediately in pursuit and to bring Isabella back, dead or alive, for he would rather see her a corpse than to hear of her marriage with a Frenchman. Meanwhile the fugitives had crossed the Potomac; they had forded the Juniata and they had reached the west bank of the Susquehanna, in the county now called Lycoming, in Pennsylvania, where they were detained by a sudden rise in the waters of that river. Here the furious and maddened George, whose temper had been improved by a three years' servitude among the Indians overtook the astonished lovers. The scene that followed was as brief as it was bloody. He demanded the return of his sister. She refused to go back. Her lover interposed and in two minutes the brave and chivalrous Frenchman lay a bleeding corpse in the arms of the agonized Isabella. History does not inform us what disposition was made of the body of Jean Baptiste Plata, but the lovely Isabella, crushed in all her earthly affections, was brought almost a raving maniac to her father's house. Ten years elapsed before her mind recovered its accustomed tone and vigor, when she married a gentleman of the name of William McCleery and they removed from Berkeley to Morgantown."

At Deer Park, Maryland, Main Line B. & O. R. R., to St. Louis, 2,500 Feet Above Tidewater, a Country Place of About 185 Acres.

"GLAMORGAN."

Thoroughly equipped as a farm and bounded by three county roads, insuring convenience and privacy. It is well adapted to public use such as a Sanatorium or to private residences, five sites with beautiful views and appurtenant acres, being reached by its three miles of private pleasure drives through the woods.

The dwelling house was built from plans by Hewitt Bros., of Philadelphia. The plumbing is by Ogelsby, of the same city. It is in complete order, and is replete with the modern appliances of a gentleman's residence. It is within ten minutes' walk of postoffice and railroad station and within one mile of the Deer Park Hotel. Its eneral plan is as follows:

Wide porches surround three faces terminated, on a level, with billiard room.

I. First Floor.—Parlor, hall with main stair case, library, dining room and lavatory.

II. Back Building.—Stair case to cellar, in which are furnace, gas machine (supplied by outside gasometer), wine closet, pantry (hot and cold water), back stairs to second story back building. Laundry—3 stationary tubs, hot and cold water in each; ironing stove, fire hose on reel and special boiler. Kitchen, with range, sink and all appliances. Back porch, ten feet from which is ice house practically inexhaustible in summer; servants bath room, etc.

I. Second Floor.—Two communicating chambers, with bath room; one chamber communicating with its bath room; one chamber communicating with its bath room; total, four chambers with three bath rooms.

II. Back Building, 2nd Floor.—Four chambers, two closets, bath room with W. C. adjoining.

Third Floor.—Two chambers, two large lofts.

Every room has gas fixture and eight rooms have open fire-places in addition to furnace register.

The water supply is unexceptionable, its every source being from springs rising within the confines of the place and all having passed analytical examination. Two tanks (each in contact with outside air) having a combined capacity of 14,500 gallons, a wind mill, a horse power and an overshot wheel supplying the motor. Three dams (likewise spring water) contribute the ice supply and two of them are stocked with fish. The outbuildings are a barn with stalls for six horses and eight carriages, with ample storage for hay, straw and oats and having a coachman's room, a tenant's house of five rooms, a large cow and sheep stable and numerous sheds, etc.

This property is without incumbrance and possession can be given in May, 1905.

Gertrude C. Jeffers, who sues by her husband and next friend, Alpheus M. Jeffers, Alpheus M. Jeffers, Addie Warnick, trustee, Beryl Warnick, Hazel Warnick and Beulah Warnick, infants, who sue by their next friend, George Warnick, and George Warnick, plaintiffs, v. Albert Warnick, Edward E. Warnick, Ida R. Duckworth and Stephen A. Duckworth, her husband, John C. Brydon, Louis B. Brydon and Gilmor S. Hamill, defendants.

No. 1328 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of Military Lots Nos. 96 and 97, containing fifty acres each, situate, lying and being in Garrett county, Maryland, and for a distribution of the proceeds thereof amongst the parties to this cause in proportion to their several interests.

The bill states that the said Gertrude C. Jeffers, Addie Warnick, trustee, for the use and benefit of her three infant children, the said Beryl Warnick, Hazel Warnick and Beulah Warnick, George Warnick, Albert Warnick, Edward E. Warnick and Ida R. Duckworth are each seized and possessed in fee simple of an undivided one seventh interest in and to said Military Lots Nos. 96 and 97, and that a certain Truman P. Warnick was likewise seized and possessed of an undivided one-seventh interest in the said lands, the derivation of title to said respective interests being fully set forth in the several exhibits filed with said bill; and that the said Truman P. Warnick, on the 15th day of February, 1902, executed and delivered to the defendant, Gilmor S. Hamill, a mortgage upon his undivided one-seventh interest, and that having defaulted in the payment of the debt secured by said mortgage, on the 18th day of February, 1905, the said Hamill, mortgagee, exercised the power of sale contained in said mortgage and sold the interest of the said Truman P. Warnick in said lands to John C. Brydon and Louis B Brydon to the extent of one-half of said undivided one-seventh interest, and to himself, the said Gilmor S. Hamill, to the extent of one-half of said undivided one-seventh interest, and duly reported said sale to this Court in a cause standing as No. 1315 Equity on the docket of said court as appears by the exhibit filed with said bill relating to said proceedings.

The bill further states that the plaintiffs together with the defendants are seized and possessed in fee simple, as tenants in common of the aforesaid Military Lots Nos. 96 and 97, and that the parties to this suit above named are the only persons interested in said lands; that said real estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties interested therein, and that in order to make division of said interests and more especially to protect and advance the interests of said infant children, it will be necessary that said real estate be sold and the proceeds thereof divided amongst the parties according to their several interests.

That the said Louis B. Brydon is a non-resident of the State of Maryland; that all the other parties to this cause reside within the State of Maryland, and that all of said parties are adults with the exception of the three infants above named.

The bill then prays for a decree for the sale of said real estate, a distribution among the parties according to their respective interests and for general relief, process and an order of publication.

It is thereupon, the 16th day of March, 1905, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, ordered, that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 15th day of April, 1905, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this bill, warning him to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor on or before the 1st day of May next, to show cause, if any he has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

TRUSTEES' SALE OF VALUABLE Real Estate

On BEAR CREEK, Garrett County, Maryland.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Garrett County, sitting in Equity, dated the 22nd day of March, 1905, and passed in a cause standing as No. 1321 Equity on the docket of said court, wherein Frederick Kamp et al. are complainants, and Henrietta Kamp et al. are defendants, the undersigned trustees appointed by said decree hereby give notice that they will on Saturday, the 15th Day of April, 1905,

At the hour of eleven o'clock a. m., of said day, in front of the Postoffice, in the town of Oakland, Maryland, offer at public auction to the highest bidder all those two lots or tracts of land situated, lying and being in Garrett County, Maryland, known and designated as

Military Lots Nos. 2620 and 2624,

Containing fifty acres each, lying on the north prong of Bear Creek near Engles Mill. These lands are covered with virgin forest consisting of Oak and other hard woods and the timber is valuable.

Also all that other tract of land the same being part of the tract of land called

The Rights of Man, Second Part,

Which is fully described in a deed for the same from William C. Pennington, trustee, to Henry Kamp, dated the 24th day of February, 1880, containing 172 acres, more or less, of which land, however, the said Henry Kamp in his lifetime conveyed to Frederick Kamp the quantity of 122¾ acres, leaving a balance of

49¼ Acres

To be sold as aforesaid. This land also lies on the north prong of Bear Creek aforesaid and is partly covered with timber. The minerals underlying said land will be offered separately from the timber and surface, and the timber may be offered separately from the surface, which ever in the judgment of the said trustees will be for the best interests of the parties concerned.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by the decree, one-third cash on the day of sale, one-third in six months and one-third in twelve months from the day of sale, the deferred payments to bear interest from the day of sale, and to be secured to the satisfaction of the trustees, or the entire purchase money may be paid in cash, at the option of the purchaser or purchasers.

COUNTY TAX RATE FIXED AT $1.37.

Increase Large and Caused by Levy of $36.000 for New Jail.

STATE AND COUNTY RATE $1.60½.

Appropriation for Public School Purposes $19.000, It Being the Same as Last Year—Other Appropriations About the Same as in Former Years.

The Board of County Commissioners in session from Monday of last week making the annual levy and transacting other business adjourned on Friday evening after having signed the levy for county purposes, the rate being fixed for all items at $1.37 on the $100, the heavy increase being made necessary owing to the erection of the proposed new jail, the total amount for the building, $36,000, being levied at this time.

The Commissioners levied the usual amount for public school purposes, $16,000 to operate the schools, and $3,000 with which to repair and erect new school buildings where needed.

The appropriations for other public purposes are about the same as in former years.

The total tax for State and county purposes will be $1.60 ½, an increase over last year of 44 cents on the $100, or about 40 per cent.

Remains Were Those of F. E. Holland.

The young B & O. conductor who was found dead on the rails at Deer Park, at a point near the depot, on Wednesday night of last week, at first identified as Chas. Holland, proved to be the remains of Mr. F. E. Holland, formerly of Terra Alta, then residing in Cumberland. The unfortunate man had been to Newburg to get his B. & O. check, and was returning to his home in Cumberland on passenger train No. 12. He got off the train at Oakland, and it is supposed that he boarded a freight train later to complete the trip to Cumberland, and that he in some manner fell from his train. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. David Holland, well known residents of Terra Alta, and was universally liked by all who knew him. The remains were taken to Terra Alta for interment.

WHERE WILL THE JAIL BE LOCATED?

Matter is Now in the Hands of the County Commissioners Who Meet Today.

OAKLAND CITIZENS RAISE $1500

To Cover Deficiency in Making Purchase of Ground Provided Commissioners Agree to Erect Building on Site Selected.

The location of the proposed new jail is yet a matter of speculation with the people as well as the Board of County Commissioners as nothing definite has been done to settle the problem up to this hour (one o'clock) today.

In the issue of THE REPUBLICAN of March 16th when a suggestion was published calling for a meeting of the taxpayers of the county to discuss the feasibility of securing a more desirable location for the proposed new buildings the matter took shape from that time and it has been under discussion ever since among the taxpayers and citizens of the town and county, the general opinion being that the old location was entirely out of the question. Since the first meeting matters have come to the surface making the hill site even more undesirable, foremost of which is the fact that the lot purchased for the erection of the new jail cannot be located by courses and distances and consequently a cloud has settled upon the title.

Last week when the Commissioners met here a committee of citizens interviewed that body urging the selection of a site more centrally located. The Commissioners made a proposition to the committee that if the block of lots on Alder street between Third and Fourth streets could be secured for $8000 that they will agree to place the buildings thereon. The lowest figure obtainable for these lots was $9400, leaving a deficiency of of $1400 to be made up by the citizens of the town. To raise this amount a call for a citizens' meeting was issued by Mayor McComas on last Saturday afternoon when the public spirited people of the town responded and in a very short time the requisite amount had been raised with some to spare. The contributors, with the respective amounts subscribed, follows:

This morning the Board of Commissioners met to finally decide the matter when the committee of citizens who have been undefatigueable in their efforts to secure a new site, waited upon the officials and stated what had been accomplished. Some slight details are yet to be arranged with respect to securing the title to two pieces of the property but no difficulty is anticipated.

While Commissioners Stephens and Stump favor the Corrigan site Commissioner Friend is a warm advocate of the Sweeney lot on Third street and the latter property may be selected. The Sweeney property is held at $5000 and is a splendid location for the purpose.

THE SITE SELECTED.

Just as this page is being closed for the press (at four o'clock) a telephone message to this office from Commissioner Stump at the office of the Commissioners conveys the information that the Corrigan site had been selected for the new buildings, the vote being two to one in its favor, Messrs. Stephens and Stump being for that location and Mr. Friend favoring the Sweeney property.

SUNNYSIDE

Miss Nettie Brenninger's many friends of this community were glad of her return from Bittinger after a visit of three weeks at her sister's, Mrs. L. Lohr, of that place. She is very popular in her home community and possesses the happy faculty of making friends wherever she goes.

Since her return home horses and buggies that have been idle for the past three week have been actively engaged by young men whose countenances are radiant with the sunshine of joy emanating from glad hearts.

Miss Nell Flowers, of Hauser, one of Garrett county's most successful teachers, accompanied by Mr. Will Hamill, passed through here on her way home from Deer Park where she has been engaged as teacher for the past winter.

A protracted meeting, conducted by Rev. William Cunningham, of Loch Lynn Heights, has been in progress for the past two weeks at Under wood Chapel, with good results.

Good behavior on the part of the congregation was reasonably well maintained throughout the meeting although the Minister had to "call down" the rougher element. However the behavior on last Saturday night was all that could be desired.

The Sunnyside Literary Society holds its meetings, we are informed, on Saturday evening of each week instead of on Thursday evening as was the former custom.

Farmers of this section, who "wintered" large quantities of potatoes with a view of getting advance prices this spring are now anxious to get orders at reduced prices. Orders come but slowly for potatoes at any price.

The writer, his wife and daughter attended divine services at Underwood Chapel on last Sunday morning, after which we were the guests of the kind hearted Glotfelty family of Underwood vicinity. We were entertained by this hospitable family to the fullest degree and an attempt to say how well we enjoyed the bountiful dinner prepared by Mrs. Glotfelty, and the spirit of sociability that was lavished upon us would be vain. I shall just say, however, that Charles and his good wife not only know how to entertain but they entertain.

CITY COUNCIL DISCUSSES THE WATER QUESTION

Proposed Source of Supply Will Be Laurel Run Five Miles Out.

FOUNTAIN WILL BE SAFEGUARDED

If the Plan To Supply Town from that Source Materializes—Contract for New Incandescent Arc Lights Closed With Mr. D. E. Offutt.

Monday the City Council as a body to hear and determine appeals from assessments as made and returned to that body by the assessor, was in session several hours in the afternoon and also in the evening when the appeal business was wound up for the present year, after which the Council sat as a legislative body in adjourned session when considerable business of importance was transacted.

Ex-Mayor Harry J. Frear, as a representative of several interests, appeared before the Council and submitted, or rather outlined, a plan whereby the town could secure an excellent and wholly adequate supply of water at low rate, provided a local stock company be formed for the purpose of financing the affair. Mr. Frear proposed that the source of supply be Laurel Run, which is located about five miles southwest of town and at a sufficient elevation to furnish a good pressure at all points within the corporate limits under the gravity system. The supply is controlled entirely by the Preston Company, through whose lands the stream runs its length While nothing definite was proposed by Mr. Frear his suggestions were taken to mean something that would probably lead to a solution of the water problem and a committee of Council was appointed to confer with the Lumber Company to see what arrangements could be made and to ascertain if the fountain, should the matter take definite shape, would be safeguarded from pollution.

The contract for furnishing additional lights for the town was closed with Mr. D. E. Offutt, owner of the electric station. Under the contract Mr. Offutt is to supply ten 2000 candle power incandescent arc lights to be placed at points designated by Council along the principal streets. These lights will succeed the sixteen candle power lights now in use along these thoroughfares.

An order was passed instructing City Attorney Heindel to take the necessary step to properly locate and define Fifth street from Oak street to the cemetery. At the corner of Green street and Fifth there seems to be an offset of eighteen feet and in order to eliminate this Council deemed the step necessary.

The next meeting of Council will be held on the first Monday evening of May when the tax rate for municipal purposes will be fixed.

The Entry of Jesus Into Jerusalem

Jesus left the white-embowered villa on the east slope of Olivet, of the morning of a day corresponding to our Sunday. He joined Himself, in a conspicuous manner, to the pilgrim caravan on its way to the festivities of the Passover week. He was enthusiastically welcomed. These Galilean travelers had a local pride in the wonder-working Prophet of Nazareth. They felt it an honor to be His escort to Jerusalem. They took their way over the southern shoulder of the fig-and olive-crowned mount.

Jesuscommissioned two of the apostles to hasten on and bring the best on which He should ride. It would not be necessary for them to catch it in the field. They would find it tethered by the roadside, as if there for His service. Mention of His name and deed would be all that was necessary to obtain the loan of it. This comparatively insignificant incident, the demand for the beast, hastily reported from mouth to mouth along the crowded thoroughfare, would serve notice of Jesus approach. Up from a thousand pilgrims' booths, on the slopes Olivet, the public garden of Jerusalem, and the camping-place of those whom the city could not hold, came an eager throng; out from the city gate came pouring another ever-augmenting multitude of those who were only waiting the signal of Jesus' approach.

He was mounted now, and so in plain view of the largest possible number. He rode a beast considered appropriate for a sacred function—one never ridden before. As only an ox that had never worn the yoke was esteemed fit for the altar, so this foal had never been saddled was meet for the Master's use.

Such a transport of admiring loyalty seized that mighty throng as made all former ebullitions seem faint in comparison. The palm-trees were stripped to provide the emblems of victory. Ten thousand cloaks were performed to carpet the highway with. A litter—a mattress—of twigs and green grass was formed, so that the King's beast might tread softly beneath Him.

And now the multitude, with that skill at improvisation which is a characteristic of the East, bursts forth in a noble psalm of welcome, the rear guard responding antiphonally to the advance.

From an angle in the road a glimpse of Zion is obtained—her palaces fair, her battlements strong. The sight is signal for a salvo of joy and praise. David's city is called upon to welcome David's Son. But this first view is only a foregleam of the splendor that awaits the unobstructed vision from the crest, as under the very feet of the pilgrims the whole glorious scene is unrolled. The great white heart of it is the temple, with its ample course rising in terraces; its snowy colonnades; its sanctuary, a mound of snow and fire.

At this goodly sight such a shout is raised as penetrates to even the star-chamber of the sanhedrin, and keys to its highest pitch the murderous jealousy of the rulers of Israel as they say to one another, bitterly: "Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? Behold the world is gone after Him."

How different Jesus' emotions! The crowd looked, and shouted joyfully. Jesus looked, and wept aloud. His human and patriotic heart is deeply stirred as, with prophet's eye, He sees the awful fate impending over that city which, spite of her loveliness, knows not the things that belong to her peace.

Some forward Pharisee, with ominous glance at the Tower Antonia, exhorts Jesus to suppress this demonstration. But Jesus puts the seal of His approval upon this festal spectacle in the declaration that the very rocks would find tongues to welcome Him, if the people did not.

So the Messenger of Malachi came suddenly to the temple. But a venal hierarchy could not abide the day of His coming. He calmly looked about as the Divine proprietor of all. But His presence was like the refiner's fire and fuller's soap to the dross and filth of the ecclesiastical establishment.

It was night, and Jesus returned to Bethany.

The Teacher's Lantern.

The triumphal entry was not a mere passing incident—an accident of Jesus' approach. It was a very large event.

* * * * *

Jesus deliberately planned His entry—designed to make it as effective as possible. He was not captured by the multitude; He captured it, and used it for His purpose. The orderly precision of all His movements indicates this: "The royal entry was an integral part of the history of Christ which would not be complete nor thoroughly consistent without it."

He openly came unto His own. The issue was pressed. They must accept or reject. The test was not made in any dark corner, either. Nothing could have been more conspicuous.

A triumphal entry, true! But how many points of contrast it presents to all other "triumphs" with which the world is familiar! The meekness of the Victor; the lowliness of His equipage; the absence of captives and spoils—a triumph accorded, not by the chief of Church or State, but by the common people! Yet, in comparison to it, even Pompey's famed triumph pales. No similar spectacle was ever fraught with such significance for the race.

* * * * *

Riding upon an ass is interpreted by some as a token of humility. It must be remembered, however, that the ass is not considered contemptible in the East. It is "statelier, livelier, swifter than with us." The white ass was the favorite animal of prophets and kings.

* * * * *

Longfellow, in "Divine Tragedy," with poet's license, describes the Syrophenician woman and her daughter on a house-top in Jerusalem, and witnessing Jesus' triumphal procession:

> Daughter. O that I could see Him!
> Mother. Perhaps thou wilt.
> . . . . . .
> Daughter. All has passed by me like a dream of wonder.
> But I have seen Him, and have heard His voice,
> And I am satisfied. I ask no more."

Mosaic from Commentaries.

Much people: Not only the great mass of the inhabitants of Palistine, but many foreign Jews thronged from every quarter—from Babylon, Arabia, Egypt; from Asia Minor, Greece, and Italy; probably even from Gaul and Spain.—Milman. Jesus was coming: The story of Christ's riding in triumph to Jerusalem is recorded by all the evangelists as worthy of special remark. Took branches: The leaves of the date palm, often ten feet long, which to this day are a regular feature in all decorations of the country. —Hall. The palms: The article indicating particular palm-trees, which every one knew as growing on the road from Bethany to Jerusalem.—Dods. They had not the keys of the city to present to Him, nor the sword, nor the mace to carry before Him; none of the city music to compliment Him with, but such as they had they the gave Him.—Henry. And cried: The cry of the multitude was, of course, not always the same, and the different evangelists give us different forms of it.—Camb. Bib. Hosanna: A rendering into Greek letters of the Hebrew words, "Save, we pray!" (Psa. cxviii, 25); not save us, but save the King. It is used as an expression of praise, life "Hallelujah," or "Hail." It was a kind of holy hurrah. Had the event occurred in Rome, the shout would have probably have been Io triumphe! Had it occurred in modern France, the people would have called out Vive! (Vive le roi!)—Peloubet. Sitting on: A Messianic sign, excluding all doubt.—Meyer. An ass's colt: The rich man's ass is a lordly beast. In size he is far ahead of anything of this kind we see here at home. His coat is as smooth and glossy as a horse's. His livery is shiny black, satiny white, or sleek mouse-color.—Zinck.

Dear Sir: Two years ago Mr. Grant Smith, Erie, Pa, painted three frame houses, and the woodwork of a brick house.

The painter estimated $116.50 for the paint, lead and oil.

He bought Devoe $97.40 and returned $11.60. Saved $31.10 on the paint.

Don't know the cost of the work. By the rule, the saving of labor would be from $60 to $90.

On all, from $90 to $120.

This is the tale, as it comes from Messrs W F Nick & Son, our agents there for 50 years.

SENATOR U. G. PALMER'S SPEECH

On the Proposed Constitutional Amendment Limiting the Right of Suffrage.

DELIVERED IN THE MARYLAND SENATE

On Wednesday, the 9th Day of March, 1904.

MR. PRESIDENT:—I arise for the purpose of putting myself on record as unqualifiedly opposed to this proposed piece of legislation and to all legislation which partakes of the same nature.

We are here today as representatives of the sovereign people of this great Commonwealth, and I am actuated in my motives by but two thoughts, viz: to carry out the wishes of my constituents, at whose instance I am here, and to lend my voice and vote and influence in defense of and for the furtherance of good government.

I believe that every person in this body is here for the same purpose and actuated by the same two motives. Hence I have implicit faith in the failure ultimately of this class of legislation. It may rise, flourish and be tolerated for a season, but its foundation principles are false and fall it must, sooner or later. Let us hope that this body in this year of grace will not be deluded even temporarily into giving its support to a doctrine that is false in principle and that can meet but one fate—its final destruction.

The sovereign people, in time, will always be right and they will wipe the laws, the government and the constitution itself out of existence if need be to make the voice of right supreme. And right makes might. The conscience of today is the destiny of tomorrow.

Mr. President, I am no political philosopher, but there are a few foundation principles of all government, concerning which not even any ordinary citizen can be mistaken.

For nearly a century this nation divided on a great constitutional question—one on which the wishes of the people were at first but dimly defined but which came more and more into prominence as the years rolled by. That question was whether the state or the federal government was supreme. It was aided, apparently, in its solution, first on one side and then on the other by acts of legislatures, decisions of courts and statutes of congress, and for three-fourths of a century no student of history nor nation of the earth was able to tell the result as based upon the trend of events. Servitude was a cardinal doctrine of the commonwealths believing in states' rights—a doctrine acknowledged by all today to be absolutely incompatible with a free democracy.

The fathers and founders of the Republic died in despair of solving the problems. In congress in 1775 John Adams declared, "You have rights antecedent to all earthly governments, rights that cannot be repelled nor restrained by human laws, rights derived from the great law-giver of the universe." The immortal Jefferson, the great apostle of democracy, in his early years wrote: "We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." But in his old age he cried out in despair: "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just, that his justice cannot sleep forever." The question was finally and forever solved and every person within this presence recognizes the finality and justice of that decision, but it took the greatest internecine war of all time to seal that decision, and with an expenditure of money and a loss of life appalling to our sister nations. "Retributive justice must fulfill her destiny."

The federal government, with right and justice on its side, had behind it the two essentials of the foundations of every stable government—men and money. Might in the final destiny of all things allies itself with right and must prevail. It is thus all-conquering, all-powerful. All government in its final, ultimate analysis, must depend for its very existence on its men who are able to bear arms and the money it gets from taxation. He who measures up to either of these and can bear arms or pay taxes, if the government shall be pure and perfect and democratic, must have a voice in making that government.

Let us examine briefly the import of this bill. If my father or grandfather was not a voter on Jan. 1, 1868, I might be an alumnus of the Hopkins University and the Harvard Law School, but if the partizan election official before whom I came to register chose to decide that my interpretation of that clause of the constitution which he used as a test were not satisfactory to him, I am disfranchised, and from his decision there is no earthly appeal. The proper interpretation of the constitution of the United States is a question on which the greatest constitutional lawyers of our land ever since its foundation have been hopelessly divided. But it remains for the Maryland Legislature of 1904 to determine that the suffrage of every one of our citizens save those whose grandfathers were voters Jan. 1, 1868, must be dependent upon the proper interpretation of that great document, on which the wisest fail, and that the court of last resort shall be an election official—in spirit, if not in letter, the partisan creatures of this legislative body.

This is the most despotic proposition that has ever seriously confronted the American people. It makes a tzar out of this partisan election official with more autocratic powers than the ruler of the Russias.

We are led to infer from the trend of events in the far East at this very moment, that all mankind, that all civilization is swinging toward two poles, viz: Despotism and Democracy. Some students of history go so far as to foretell a war of extermination—a great final war—and make this, the 20th century, the scene of the conflict. Its outcome, it matters not how much it is bedimmed by distance or attendant circumstances, is inevitable. No despotism can abide the cannonading or the centuries. Right, combined with might, must and shall prevail. They who by their might or their money uphold the government must make it. These are FUNDAMENTAL, CONSTITUTIONAL. All other questions of citizenship are legislative. We all deplore the punishment of a just man. We also say that two criminals might better go free than that one just man be punished. This question of suffrage is a sacred right. It is the highest privilege, the greatest prerogative with which man is endowed in this republic. The denying of the right to any man who possesses a fundamental qualification seems parallel to the case of the execution of a just man. Maryland has been very considerate and has even enlarged her citizenship by removing one of the fundamental qualifications, viz: the payment of taxes—which is commendable—and shall we bedim her glory and pervert the very course of government by restricting and abridging the other fundamental qualification?

While we love to quote Alcæus of old on "what constitutes a state," viz: "men, high minded men," why are we training the youth, the very flower of our land, in the highest skill and learning in military and naval affairs in our great national schools and spending in this city at the present time $15,000,000 that we may be second to no other nation in our defense against a foreign foe?

If all the states should enact laws similar to those proposed here we will disfranchise one-fifth of our entire population. There will probably be one-fifth more whose sympathies will be with the disfranchised through relationship, common interest or otherwise. Forty per cent. of our population within our midst alienated from our government, yet a part of us! It would take but a small percentage more to rise up in rebellion, demand their fundamental rights and the result would be too appalling for us to contemplate. I am no pessimist. I believe this and every other legislative body of our land "knows what is right, and knowing dare maintain" it and I cannot believe we will ever temporarily compromise our state through the hope of temporary power or preferment, by giving the seal of approval to any act by which we will go down into history as DESPOTIC rather than DEMOCRATIC, a condition which cannot abide.

This is a great country and we are a great people holding in our hands absolutely our own destiny. Does the great state of Maryland in this great sisterhood of commonwealths propose an open violation of the spirit if not the letter of the federal constitution itself, and flaunt our defiance in their very faces?

I represent the largest county in area in the state. In population it is the smallest with four exceptions. The mountains are high and rugged and the valleys numerous and deep. Educational advantages are meager and expensive. The county was organized in 1872. In examining the school records for the past two decades I find that the actual number of months of school per year has varied from one and three-fourth months on one extreme to six months on the other, which was the term last year for the first. The average has not exceeded four and one-half months. Many families live two and one-half miles and some nearly twice that from school. The dearth of educational facilities is no fault of ours. We have been levying a county tax for school purposes for years varying from 20 to 30 cents on the hundred dollars.

Geographical conditions are such that educational advantages are twice and thrice as expensive as in the flat land country. The percentage of illiteracy is high, reaching 22 per cent. of the electorate in one of the most rugged mountain districts. The population of our county at its formation was estimated at 7,000. The census of 1901 returns it as 17,701. Most of the increase is from immigration, of course. We have many foreign people among us, if not foreign born, of immediate foreign extraction. Many of our best and most substantial citizens are Germans and Welsh and Irish. Many of them are our largest taxpayers and are in the fullest sense our most influential citizens, the very bone and sinew of our government. Some of them even shouldered arms in time of war, staking their very lives and fortunes, and went out in defense of their country and its flag. In the adoption of this constitutional amendment they are DISFRANCHISED, ground by the wheels of this modern Juggernaut into political serfdom! And look at the injustice of it, too. Here is my neighbor. Born in Germany, perhaps; lived in this state and county for years; paid his taxes; obeyed the laws; exercised the right of franchise; perchance heeded the nation's cry for men, in avenging the Maine's disaster and exposed himself to the danger of Spanish bullets and Cuban fever on foreign battlefields. Disfranchised! Cast out into outer darkness.

Another neighbor may be an outcast, a menace to society, an anarchist, perchance, but through some perversion of the machinery of government his grandfather could vote somewhere a half a century ago, hence he is vested with all the sacred rights of citizenship. What an infamous law! I am against it.

If we are sincere in our zeal to put such a high standard on citizenship, why not be consistent and fair and honest and let it be a true test of a man's educational qualifications and not a mere political sham.

I believe in an educated, cultured electorate. It is clearly the duty of the state to educate its children and thus make good citizens out of them. Everett uttered much truth when he said: "Education is a better safeguard of our liberties than a standing army. If we retrench the wages of the school master we raise those of the recruiting sergeant." But it is perfectly clear that it is not the prerogative of the state to do it with a vengeance and alienate its citizenship because they do not measure up to any single educational test whatever. The state has no inherent right to make a constitutional matter out of one that is purely legislative. Let us use every possible means at hand to promote the welfare of our people, from every standpoint, moral, physical and intellectual, but beware of all legislation that usurps a man's right to citizenship, HIS LEGAL TEST OF MANHOOD and thus weaken the very governmental structure which we are endeavoring to uphold.

I shall now, henceforth and forever oppose any and every act, legislative or otherwise, which deprives a single constituent of mine, whether in county, state or nation, of his citizenship, if he be honest, upright and law-abiding.

A Poem for Today

MY TOMB

By Jean Pierre de Beranger

"FOR forty years, from 1815 until his death, Beranger was perhaps the most popular French writer of his time, and he was ranked among the greatest French poets," says an eminent critic. "There has been a reaction against that enthusiasm, and he is now severely judged by the critics. But if he is not entitled to stand on the high pedestal given to him by his contemporaries we yet cannot deny genius to the man who for more than a generation swayed the hearts of the people at his will and exerted on his countrymen and on his epoch an immense influence."

WHAT! whilst I'm well, beforehand you design,
At vast expense, for me to build a shrine?
Friends, 'tis absurd! to no such outlay go;
Leave to the great the pomp and pride of woe
Take what for marble or for brass would pay—
For a dead beggar garb by far too gay—
And buy life-stirring wine on my behalf:
The money for my tomb right gayly let us quaff!

A mausoleum worthy of my thanks
At least would cost you twenty thousand francs:
Come, for six months, rich vale and balmy sky,
As gay recluses, be it ours to try.
Concerts and balls where Beauty's self invites,
Shall furnish us our castle of delights:
I'll run the risk of finding life too sweet:
The money for my tomb right gayly let us eat!

But old I grow, and Lizzy's youthful yet:
Costly attire, then, she expects to get:
For to long fast a show of wealth resigns—
Bear witness Longchamps, where all Paris shines!
You to my fair one something surely owe;
A cashmere shawl she's looking for, I know:
'Twere well for life on such a faithful breast
The money for my tomb right gayly to invest!

No box of state, good friends, would I engage,
For mine own use, where spectres tread the stage:
What poor wan man with haggard eyes is this?
Soon must he die—ah, let him taste of bliss!
The veteran first should the raised curtain see—
There in the pit to keep a place for me.
(Tired of his wallet, long he cannot live)—
The money for my tomb to him let's gayly give!

What doth it boot me, that some learned eye
May spell my name on gravestone, by and by?
As to the flowers they promise for my bier,
I'd rather, living, scent their perfume here.
And thou, posterity!—that ne'er mayst be—
Waste not thy torch in seeking signs of me!
Like a wise man, I deemed that I was bound
The money for my tomb to scatter gayly round!

The Lady of the Toll-Gate and the Auto

"SHOOTING the chutes may be fun of the invigorating and intense kind," said the man who has had experience, "but it is mild compared with the fun of shooting toll-gates in an auto. Coming from York to Lancaster on one occasion while cutting across a corner of Pennsylvania a pair of us whirled through every gate till we reached the final one at Lancaster. We had done it that way not because we wished to defraud the road of its righteous receipts, but because we got no response when we blew our horn for somebody to come out and collect the toll. We might have yelled 'Hello!' as the custom of the horse drivers was, but what did we have a horn for? At the Lancaster gate we were met by a long and lank lady with a hatchet in her face and a broom in her hand, and we should have passed on as before, but she looked forbidding.

"'Hold up,' said she.

"'We're held up,' said I, throwing her a fetching smile that failed to fetch.

"'Pay your toll,' said she.

"'Why?' said I.

"'Because you won't get past this gate till you do,' said she, standing before us with her broom across her front as an obstructing sentry holds his gun.

"'They didn't charge us at any of the other gates,' said I, hoping to make her ashamed of herself by showing her how much more agreeable and hospitable her fellow gatekeepers were.

"'Oh, didn't they?' she snapped at me. 'Then I'll just collect for the whole road. I'm the boss.'

"She was a truthful woman, whatever else she was, and we had to whack up for a string of tollgates about forty miles long. I may add that the lady seemed to think it was quite amusing. We didn't."—New York Press.

Her Rules of Hygiene.

I took my young daughter Genevieve, five years old, to the doctor. When he asked her where she felt sick she said in her stomach. The doctor told her it was something she put in her stomach that upset her, so Genevieve said bravely: "Mr. Doctor, I never put anything in my stomach. I always put everything in my mouth."

What you call the cut of a garment is really the design. The cutting is mechanical, but the designing is high art.

The designer is the architect and it is he who is responsible for the style, the "hang"—the shape of the collar—the finish inside and out.

The Clothcraft designer has made style his life's study and receives a very large salary—so why shouldn't Clothcraft Clothes excel in style?

The cutting must be quick and accurate—that's all. On some goods the Clothcrafters use an electric machine with rapidly revolving steel discs—cutting many thicknesses of cloth at once. That is one of the ways in which Clothcraft Clothes are made possible at the price.

There are no other clothes as good as Clothcraft Clothes—at the price, and few at any price can equal them in fit and stylish finish, or in wear.

A potent reason for this is the fact that all Clothcraft Clothes are made in the Clothcraft factory under direct supervision. That is the direct road to economy and good work. Also it makes possible the use of special machines and special devices which save labor, reduce cost, and improve quality. You'd better examine Clothcraft Clothes.

EASTER.

"There was a garden . . . and in the garden a sepulcher." (John xix, 41.)

The effort to locate the Garden of Eden falls. It must needs do so, for it takes of the literalness which loses the spirit. The second chapter of Genesis really describes the earth prepared for man. Eden is as wide as the world. It is the world. This is the garden which the Lord God planted and in which He caused to grow every tree pleasant to the sight and good for food.

What God does is well done. Mind can not conceive or ideally construct for itself a world more admirable than this. Here "power, glory strength, and beauty all are aisled." Take, for example, the one quality of color. The poet of the Seasons puts it well:

"Who can paint
Like Nature? Can Imagination boast
Amid her gay creations hues like hers?
Or can it mix them with that matchless skill
And lose them in each other as appears
In every bud that blows?"

And color is matched by contour. The curve is everywhere—God's eternal line of beauty. No wonder the Hebrew poets describe Nature as maintaining an overture to her Maker. "Heavens are glad, earth rejoices, sea roars, trees of the wood sing, floods clap their hands, hills are joyful."

Glory of it is that to this wealth of radiance, fragrance, and harmony God has made man responsive. There is rhythm between man and the world. Each answers to other. So that man has been called a palace of sight and sound. But not only is the world a place of enjoyment: it is a sphere of Thought. By its very constitution it challenges attention and solicits observation. It is also sphere of Power. It has hidden forces for man to discover and subdue. Finally it is a sphere of Love. Its social net is ceaselessly weaving—a net whose meshes are as soft as silk, but as strong as steel.

Such is the garden-world. Its maker gave man a quit-claim deed to it when He said, "Have dominion! Dress and keep it." As some one quaintly said of the strawberry, so can be said of the world, "No doubt God could have made a better world than this, but he never did."

But in this world-garden there is one object which can not be ignored. It thrusts itself upon us like a rocky ledge for the bed of ferns. No flowers of rhetoric can cover it. Denial of it is impossible. Attempt to minify it is insult to human mind and heart. There can be no wide-visioned philosophy of life which ignores it. It is the Tomb. "In the garden is a sepulcher," Black and hideous; rayless, cheerless, hopeless, it gaps wide to receive soon or late every son of man. For six millenniums or for sixty for aught we know humanity like a stream has been falling into this insatiable abyss, so that—

All that tread
The globe, are but a handful of the tribes
That slumber in its bosom.

The best use of Easter is to articulate the Sepulcher into the Garden in such a manner that the symmetry and beauty of the latter shall not be marred. The old theology made no effort in this direction. On the contrary it increased the gloom and horror. It misanthropically asserted this world to be a shattered paradise, to be used only as a bridge to carry over to another world. It asserted physical Death to be the penalty of sin. So in homily and hymn Death was pictured as an avenger come to inflict the extreme penalty. But the modern view is more, sane and happy. According to it death is not a penalty at all. It inhered in the original constitution of the world before there was either man or sin. It is part of the beneficent plan of infinite goodness. Death is not an avenger, but an angel, tall and beautiful, God's usher to the fuller life.

Conviction of immortality is not, however, result of logic. Arguments, however skillfully formed, convince the smallest possible number. This is rather a matter of institution. It is sensed by the soul. The monologue of faith runs this way. The craving of my lower senses is satisfied by my Maker. There is light for eye, melody for ear, fragrance for nostril. But my masterful craving is for life—to live, to live forever. He who satisfies the lower cravings will not disappoint the highest. He who gives light to eye will give life to spirit. The goodness of God is the pledge that the sense for immortality will be satisfied.

The sepulcher in the garden is then no blind alley. It is an open thoroughfare, vocal and radiant with immortality. Instead of marring the garden, it is, from this point of view, its chief ornament.

SINCE the proposed constitutional amendment has been brought into such prominence by both political parties we reproduce on page two of this paper to-day the speech made by Senator Palmer of this county delivered in the Senate in opposition to the measure when it was under consideration by that body during the session of the Legislature one year ago. Mr. Palmer's remarks at that time were quoted in all parts of the State and the speech was commented upon by metropolitan newspapers in many of the states as being logical and well timed.

PREPARING TO BUILD.

Ground for New Municipal Building Being Cleared Off.

The lot at the corner of First and Liberty streets which was purchased some weeks ago by the town for the purpose of erecting thereon a new building for municipal purposes is being cleared of the old building which has stood on it for many years and put in readinass for the builders to begin the erection of the proposed new structure, plans for which have already been adopted which contemplate two stories, the first floor to be used for a town lock-up, fire department headquarters, police magistrate's office and perhaps a storage room for tools, etc., while the second story will be fitted for meeting of the Town Council and as a place for holding meetings of a public nature where the town citizens and property owners are interested.

The class of material for use in the construction of the building has not yet been decided upon by Council but the probabilities are that concrete blocks, having the appearance of hammered stone work, will be used. This material is considered as being first class for building purposes and has been subject to rigid tests by leading contractors all over the country. The cost of such material will be the same as brick, will be as substantial and present a much better appearance.

ENDORSE JAMES S. LAKIN.

Republicans of Preston County Adopt Strong Resolutions in His Favor.

The Republicans of Preston county, West Va., in convention assembled at Terra Alta on Saturday, the 15th inst., adopted strong resolutions favorable to the candidacy of Mr. James S. Lakin, of the firm of Offutt & Lakin, of that town, who is a candidate for the nomination for Congress to succeed Hon. A. G. Dayton, of Philippi, who was recently appointed to the Federal bench by President Roosevelt.

The convention to make the nomination will be held at Keyser on the 26th inst. and Mr. Lakin's friends both in his home county and elsewhere in the Congressional district which he seeks to represent in Congress, have strong hopes for his success both at the convention and at the special election to be held sometime in June. Mr. Lakin is well known in Oakland and other parts of Garrett county, having resided here with his father when the former was pastor and later presiding elder of the Methodist church here. In later years Mr. Lakin entered the employ of Mr. D. E. Offutt as clerk in his store here the editor of THE REPUBLICAN holding a similar position with Mr. Offutt at the same time. A few years ago a partnership was formed between Mr. Offutt and Mr. Lakin for the purpose of conducting a mercantile business at Terra Alta, the latter being placed in charge and by his strict attention to details the business is the most successful of any in that whole county.

Mr. Lakin's many friends in Oakland hope to see him nominated and elected.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mr. Patrick Holland, aged about 80 years, a pensioned emplove of the B. & O. railroad company, was found dead on the railroad about half way through Everett tunnel, two miles westof town, on last Saturday morning at 9 o'clock. Flagman James Jones stumbled over the remains horribly mangled and cut to pieces in the darkest part of the tunnel, and was terribly frightened and shocked, when he realized it was the body of a man.

Mr. Holland since the death of his wife, some few years ago has liyed alone in a little house near No. 40 water station, on the 17 mile grade, and was in the habit of walking to Piedmont about once a month. It is supposed he was on his way to town when he was caught in the tunnel by passing trains and killed. His remains were gathered up and sent to an undertaker at Piedmont, and buried in the Catholic graveyard at Westernport on the following Sunday.

"Paddy" as he was called was a typical Irishman, and known to nearly everybody in this place as the jovial and kindhearted old watchman, who for 20 years was stationed at the watch box half a mile west of Piedmont.

Mr. Samuel Brady of the Brady Construction Co., of Grafton, was in town last week.

Miss Mabel Shuck, of Bond, enroute to her future home at Dubois, Pa., stopped off for a few days to visit friends in this vicinity.

Messrs. Russell Pattison and John Raley, members of the Cardinal base ball team of Cumberland were home over Sunday.

During a festival held by the Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. church on last Saturday evening in the old school house, a fire occurred in the roof of the building from a defective flue, and for a time created considerable excitement. As soon as the bucket brigade got into effective service the fire was soon subdued without much loss.

Saturday was pay day at Pattison's mine, and at Marstellar's four foot.

Rev. A. R. Snedegar has returned from Confluence and filled his pulpit on last Sunday night.

Dr. Martin, of Kingwood, W. Va., is attending to the practice of Dr. Boynton at Barnum during the latter's absence in Phiadelphia.

Mr. Clarence Howard, of Piedmont, spent Sunday with his parents, Rev. and Mrs. J. R. Howard.

Miss Viva Jones, of Elk Garden, daughter of Capt. Jones, of the Elk Garden branch, is visiting her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. John Radcliffe, of Savage.

Two applications for saloon licenses for this town have been filed with the clerk of the Circuit Court, Mrs. Maggie Collin and Mr. Freeland Tibbets.

Mr. and Mrs. Boettner, of Frostburg, are guests of their son, Engineer John Boettner, of Savage.

Mr. William Brown, of the Nob, has the material on his lot recently purchased for the erection of a dwelling house.

Mr. Freeland Tibbets lost a valuable cow on last Tuesday by it being killed on the B. & O.

Extensive preparations are being made by the pupils and officers of the Presbyterian of Savage, and the M. E. Sunday schools of this place to celebrate the Easter festival on next Sunday evening.

The effect of the new bridge across the Potomac river connecting this place with Franklin, giving us an outlet to the West Va. R. R., has already developed conveniences and accommodations that could not be obtained from the B. & O. Orders went into effect on Wednesday stopping all passenger trains North and South at the new station. This order is not for a special or limited time, but will be scheduled as a regular stopping place summer and winter for passengers and freight.

Mr. Geo. Warnick returned home on Tuesday evening from a business trip of a few days to Elk Garden.

Messrs. Cal Simpson and John Smith contractors and builders, have just completed a home for Mr. Howard Kline at Pattison mine.

Mr. Thos. Devine, of Dodson, spent Palm Sunday with his sister, Mrs. Maggie Collins.

Presiding Elder McDowell, of Baltimore, officiated at the Quarterly Conference meeting in the M. E. church on last Wednesday afternoon. This is the first official appointment he has been able to attend in the last twelve months on account of an accident which occured early last spring when he slipped and fell on an icy pavement in front of his residence and fractured a knee cap.

Mr William Moody made a business trip to Oakland on Tuesday.

Work at the Pattison mine is very dull. No coal has been shipped this week so far and the prospects, according to reliable sources, point to one of the dullest seasons this particular mine has had for a number of years.

Supt. O. Tibbets, of Savage, was in town Sunday with friends.

Jim Cross took his team of base ball tossers, called the "Bangers" to Piedmont last Saturday afternoon to show the Piedmont fans how they could play ball when lined up against a semi-professional nine. The score stood 7 to 1 at the end in favor of the big salaried players and it is safe to to say that if they don't play better ball next Saturday when they meet the Baltimore Club there will be a disappointed crowd at Piedment.

RENTED HOTEL CHAUTAUQUA.

Mr. W. C. Dunnington Will Operate the House This Season.

Tuesday afternoon Mr. W. C. Dunnington, well known as an up-to-date hotel proprietor, entered into an agreement with Mr. G. H. Pritchard, who recently purchased Hotel Chautauqua, Mountain Lake Park, whereby the former becomes the lessee for the coming season, his term of tenancy beginning on May 1st.

Mr. Dunnington has successfully operated hotels at Terra Alta, Grafton and other points in West Virginia, always catering to the needs of his patrons and his reputation as a hotel man of the highest standing is unexcelled.

The hotel at the Park will be put in thorough repair from cellar to attic, new furniture, table ware, carpets, etc., will be placed in the house and the new management will spare no pains or expense to please his patrons.

RYANS GLADE.

Once more we dip our pen in ink to jot down a few of the happenings in this vicinity, which we hope will be of some interest to your many readers. A few days ago spring was here but Sunday's weather changed our mind and made us think of wintry days and the storm still continues this Tuesday morning with the ground covered with snow and mercury registering ten degrees below freezing. The fruit is damaged but to what extent we can't tell at present. We hope not so bad as it looks now.

Some of the farmers are almost done sowing oats.

The health of this community is fairly good.

Mrs. George Steyer is serious ill. Her extreme old age is much against her recovery, but we hope she will soon be out again.

Mr. Garrett V. Moon, of Bethlehem, was visiting his daughter, Mrs. N. B. Harvey last week. "Uncle Garrett," as he is commonly called, is hale and hearty for a man of his age, he being eighty-three years old. He is one of District No. 10's staunchest Republicans. May he live to cast several more Republican ballots.

Rev. E. J. Westfall preached a very interesting sermon Sunday afternoon to an attentive congregation. He recently organized a Sunday school at this place, the following officers being chosen for the coming year: Supt., J. B. Shockey; assistent supt., D. O. Harvey; secretary, J. W. Steyer; treasurer, Miss Ida Harvey.

Presiding Elder R. B. Ward will hold Quarterly Conference at this place next Saturday afternoon.

W. H. Mamaw has installed a boiler and engine in his mill in place of the one he sold the Nine brothers last winter. He will soon have his saw mill in operation.

Mr. John Savage, of Sunnyside, was in our midst last Sunday.

Mr. Elmer Harvey was visiting at S. G. Stever Sunday evening.

Mr. D. A. Harvey, of Blaine, was visiting his parents in this section recently.

Mr. E. W. Kelso was visiting Mr. Scott Thompson last Saturday who is dangerously ill at his home in Keyser. He is suffering with typhoid.

Mr. N. B. Harvey is our most successful hunter. He recently killed three red foxes.

Miss Lillie Weimer, who taught the Shook Shop school the past winter, was urgently requested by the patrons of the school to return and teach the school again next winter.

The political bee is buzzing in one are two ears in this community.

FIFTY CENTS

IN some conditions the gain from the use of Scott's Emulsion is very rapid. For this reason we put up a fifty-cent size, which is enough for an ordinary cough or cold or useful as a trial for babies and children. In other conditions the gain is slower—health cannot be built up in a day. In such cases Scott's Emulsion must be taken as nourishment; a food rather than a medicine. It's a food for tired and weak digestions.

PAINT TALK
By J. M. Davis & Sons

LABOR

The cost of Labor for putting on a Paint that is adulterated is the same as putting on a Pure Paint that lasts twice as long. Devoe Lead and Zinc is pure and lasts twice as long as adulterated paint.

CHEAP

A paint that contains adulteration costs less by the gallon but takes more gallons than Devoe Lead and Zinc. Devoe is cheap because it goes further.

Call at our store and get a sample of Devoe Lead and Zinc and let us tell you all about it and show you a great many houses that have been painted with it.

If a dealer can't show you a state chemist's certificate for the paint he is selling, then it is sure to be adulterated.

DON'T

Don't buy any paint that the maer is afraid to put his formula on the label. F. W. Devoe & Co. put the formula of Devoe Lead and Zinc on the label.

DON'T

Don't buy any Paint that is not guaranteed pure and certified to by the state chemist. Call at our store and read the state chemist's certificate on Devoe Lead and Zinc

MILK AND WATER

One gallon of water and one gallon of milk don't make two gallons of milk. Neither does one gallon of paint and one gallon of adulteration make two gallons of paint. Devoe Lead and Zinc is all paint guaranteed strictly pure.

DON'T

Don't buy Paint by the gallon, but by the house. The price of a gallon of Paint don't always tell you how much the Paint for a house will cost. Devoe Lead and Zinc costs less per house than adulterated Paint.

PRICES

White Lead and White Zinc costs about seven cents per pound—Clay and Whiting costs one-half cent per pound. Why buy Whiting and Clay for Paint. Devoe Lead and Zinc contains no Whiting or Clay.

HONESTY

Lead and Oil is honest Paint. But Lead is too soft—chalks off. Zinc is hard and tough, and when ground in with the lead, prevents chalking. But they must be ground fine to combine. Devoe Lead and Zinc is famous for fineness.

You can always buy Paint for less than Devoe Lead and Zinc. Don't save your money.

QUANTITY

300 square feet of surface will take one gallon Devoe Lead and Zinc for TWO coats. Figure the size of your house and see how much the Paint costs.

The suit for damages instituted in the Circuit Court of Allegany county by Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Murray against the Mayor and City Council of Cumberland, has been removed to this county for trial and will be taken up at the September Term.

Mr. Richard T. Lowndes, Jr., of Clarksburg, accompanied by two or three horsemen drove fifteen head of horses through Oakland yesterday morning en route to Cumberland, where the animals will be disposed of. The horses were purchased at and near Clarksburg and driven overland from that point.

Dr. W. H. Ravenscraft, whose illness was noted in these columns some weeks ago, and later his convalescence, is still growing steadily stronger and walks down town every day where he is met by many of his friends who show their pleasure at seeing him in good health again.

Messrs. J. C. Renninger and W. R. Offutt, two of our progressive young lawyers and real estate men, on last Friday purchased from Dr. and Mrs. J. Lee McComas a lot on Second street adjoining the property of Mr. George W. Legge. The lot is a valuable one for residential purposes and it is understood improvements will be made on it at an early date.

The next meeting of the Grafton Presbytery will be held in Oakland when quite a number of ministers of the Presbyterian faith will be here. Rev. McClelland, of the Oakland congregation, will be installed as pastor about June 20th when Rev. R. M. Ramsay, of Kingwood, who was elected Moderator for the ensuing six months at the recent session of the Presbytery held at Jacksonburg, will officiate.

Claude Brown is now traveling for the Freedom Casket Company.

Mr. George Little went to Hagerstown Monday night where he was sent by the local Council Jr. O. U. A. M. as its representative in the Grand Council which meets in that city this week.

By the burning out of the converter in front of St. Paul's M. E. church last Sunday night the church could not be illuminated and as a consequence the evening services could not be held, much to the regret of the congregation.

Messrs. Edward H. Sincell and Gilmor S. Hamill, as trustees, sold at public auction in front of the post office in Oakland Saturday a tract of nearly fifty acres of land lying on Bear creek, near Accident, belonging to the estate of the late Judge Kamp to Mr. Frederick Kamp, of Friendsville, for $910. Mr. E. Fringer was the auctioneer.

A meeting of St. Mark's Evangelical Lutheran congregation will be held in the Garrett Memorial church next Tuesday evening, April 25th, to decide whether the congregation is willing to sell the Corrigan lot to the County Commissioners. Every member is expected to attend, so that the meeting be a legal one and according to the charter.

For Rent.—Dundee Hall, a delightfully located boarding house of twenty-five rooms, completely furnished and in good repair, situated near the Loch Lynn Heights Hotel, Loch Lynn Heights, Md. The house when open has always enjoyed a good patronage. Apply for terms at this office or address G. W. Cochrane, Queen City Hotel, Cumberland, Md. 4-tf.

Prof. I. Frank McBee, accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. J. Arthur Fricker and three children, of San Juan, Porto Rica, arrived here last Friday evening from Baltimore, to which city Prof. McBee went to meet his relatives and bring them here where they will remain during the summer. The little folks were delighted with the snow, the first they had ever seen.

A bunch of traveling men, whose names were subjected to much comment and punned to the limit afforded fun at a local hotel. Among them were Mr. Tune and Mr. Shock. The former started to whistle a popular air that Mr. Shock said gave him a jolt. Another of the bunch offered to bet that his name was harder than any in the crowd. He was taken up by a man who said his name was Stone and the betting salesman said his name was Harder. The drinks were on Stone, who felt a bit rocky over losing what he thought was an easy bet.

From the report of the Grafton Presbyterian, which met at Jacksonburg, W. Va., last week, published in the Morgantown New Dominion the following is taken relative to Rev. John A. McClelland, of Oakland: "Rev. John A. McClelland, of the Reformed Presbyterian church, presbytery of New York and Vermont, was received into the church and arrangements were made for his installation as pastor of the churches at Oakland and Terra Alta. This will be done at an early date. He is a very able man and will be quite an addition to the ministerial force of the Presbytery.

COL. G. A. PEARRE IN WASHINGTON

Sixth District's Congressman Expected Home in a Day Or Two.

Col. George A. Pearre, representative in Congress from the Sixth Congressional district, returned to Washingtrn yesterday from Pineville, S. C., where he has been located for a few months in search of health and rest. Col. Pearre is expected in this city tomorrow or Thursday. A letter from him yesterday to his brother, Postmaster William Pearre, stated that he was in the best of health and weighed more than he ever did. He is anxious to return to Cumberland and feels that he is fully able to take care of his law practice here. His secretary, Mr. C. Edgar Kellar, joined him in Washington yesterday.—Cumberland News.

OAKLAND HOTEL RENTED

By Messrs. Devries & Eckles, for a Term of Three Years.

Yesterday Messrs. J. M. Devries and M. H. Eckles, the former of St. Paul, Minn., and the latter of Lima, O., closed a contract with the officials of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company for the lease of the Oakland Hotel for a term of three years and will take immediate possession of the property, expecting to place a large force of hands at work within a few days to clean the house up thoroughly and put it in prime condition for the accommodation of the large number of guests expected to summer here.

The lessees of the hotel are well informed hotel men and will do everything in their power to make the coming season a successful one.

DEER PARK SEASON OPENS JUNE 15

Splendid Improvements Have Been Made at Mountain Resort.

The beautiful summer resort at Deer Park, Maryland, which is better known internationally than any resort of the Allegany Mountain Range south of the Adirondacks, has been improved and made more attractive than ever. The tennis courts and golf links are now immediately in front of the large hotels and are, therefore, very convenient for use.

For fifteen years this magnificent resort has attracted most fashionable assemblages, not only from the East, but from everywhere and consequently has added to and extended its already spacious grounds.

Large sums of money have been spent in enhancing the natural attractiveness and beauty of the grounds, located at such an elevation to give perfectly and pure and exhilerating atmosphere.

Five hundred acres is a large area to be covered by a hotel and its environments, but the nine-mile plateau in this particular section of the Allegheny Range affords an excellent opportunity to spread out. There are 12 cottages belonging to the hotel, each having several acres of ground immediately surrounding it. Ex-President Cleveland occupied one of them for a season while he was Chief Executive of the country. The cottage season will open on June 15th, while the hotel will be opened on June 24th, under the management of Mr. W. E. Burwell, the most efficient Superintendent of Hotels of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

In the early part of the nineteenth century there was a great hunter name Browning who owned nearly all of the country in the vicinity of Deer Park and the country was considered a paradise for hunters and sportsmen. In the course of time the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, which naturally selected the great plateau as a convenient place to cross the mountains, went through this territory and accumulated much of the property. It developed upon that Company later to see the advantages afforded by the mountains in this section and establish a summer resort, with the consequent building of Deer Park hotel. It immediately became popular, and year after year, for a period of three months each summer, it was the scene of many a spirited concourse of people including presidents, ambassadors, princes, all helping toward the gaiety of the place. It is a general thing for all the cottages and many of the suites of rooms in the hotel to be engaged a year in advance, and the prospect for the season of 1905 is equally as flattering.

Pittsburg, Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and Cincinnati always have a full representation owing to the convenience of the through train service from these points. A great number come from the South and while Deer Park is never represented as a health resort, it is nevertheless a place entirely out of reach of malaria germs, and hay fever is unknown.

The Society of Resolute Hermits

By SEWELL FORD

Copyright, 1904, by Sewell Ford

POSSIBLY all might have been well had they not reckoned without Maggie Brady. Suddenly and with no warning Maggie swooped upon them.

"The old gent he's laid up with rheumatics," she announced, "an' I've come up to do the rooms."

Now, had Maggie been old or unlovely there would have been no thought of broken vows, but old and unlovely Maggie was not. While the terms of the contract between the members of the Society of Resolute Hermits had by no means been meant to include daughters of janitors, there was no one of the three who did not at once realize that it should. Three and twenty knows no social barriers across which saucy blue eyes may not look. The eyes of Maggie were particularly blue and particularly saucy. Her big checked apron, reaching from shoulders to shoe tops, suggested far more grace of figure than it concealed. Even the turkey red dust cap could not hide all of Maggie's crisp brown locks.

Following her announcement was a long pause. Maggie was taking stock of the three while the hermits were wondering what ought to be done.

"I'm Maggie Brady," she finally suggested. "I've come up to do the rooms."

It was Sir Arthur who made the decision as to whether or not Maggie should be an exception. He ruled her in. "Mac," he said, "I suppose we shall have to knock off while this—er—young person cleans the place."

It was well meant, this speech, but unfortunate. Miss Brady was amused to being thrust into the third person singular, and she made no effort to conceal her indignation.

"Young person, is it? Ah, cut that out! It don't go with me. I'm near as old as you an' every bit as good. Youse can just tell me what's to be done, an' I'll do it, but don't give me any of that young person business," which statements Miss Brady emphasized by thumping her broom handle on the floor.

"I'VE COME UP TO DO THE ROOMS."

"The young lady is displeased, Art," remarked Mac. "Better try again."

The Kid snickered, reached for his drawing board and began a sketch of the intruder.

But Sir Arthur rose to the occasion. Slipping a fresh sheet into his writing machine, he quickly hammered out a sentence, handed it to Maggie and said, "Come on, boys; let's walk around the block."

Silently Maggie watched them depart. In silent scorn she read this typewritten outrage:

"We don't care to hear you talk. Just clean."

Then, being an impulsive young woman, she sat down on the floor and wept. Lastly she descended to the rear basement in fine frenzy and made wild complaint to her father.

"They treated me like I was the dirt under their feet, so they did," she declared. "I won't stand for it, sure I won't! I'll tell Mike Cassidy, an' he'll smash 'em!"

Mrs. Brady, although but vaguely understanding the cause of the trouble, joined Maggie in demanding redress. A calm man was Brady, which was well. So he hobbled painfully up the long flights and made mild inquiry as to "what was wrong betwixt Maggie an' the young gents."

In no time at all the assembled members of the Society of Resolute Hermits agreed that apology was due Miss Brady, also explanation to her father. Like men, they offered both. Much against his will, Sir Arthur sketched the terms of the compact and pointed out the dilemma caused by the appearance of Maggie.

"Losh, losh! An' who'd 'a' thought three such foine lookin' young gents would want to hide from the guyrls!" exclaimed Mr. Brady as he went down to pacify his women folk.

Maggie dried her tears and returned to do the cleaning in contemptuous silence. Subsequently she took great pains to turn her back whenever she met any of the three; also she spread a highly colored version of the subject of the hermit society among the other tenants.

But they who had forsaken womankind paid no heed. This suited Maggie not at all. It is probable that she resented the slight for her sex. More likely it is that her vanity, of which she had no small stock, was touched. And there was reason. Not a tenant in the building save these three but gave back smile for smile. Some chucked her under the chin. The postman had once kissed her when they had met on the stairs. Yet the three on the top floor had for her neither word nor smile.

For a month Maggie hated them cordially, and as Mr. Brady's rheumatism grew worse she had opportunity twice a week to slight the cleaning of their rooms. Yet when she found the hermits clumsily trying to do the work left undone she was moved to sympathy. Finally, coming across a sketch which the Kid had made of her, she wholly relented. The girl in the sketch was, as Maggie put it, "real stunning."

"IT'S LOTS PRETTIER 'N ME."

"Say, can I have that pictur' you drawed of me?" Thus read the badly written note which Maggie slipped into the Kid's hand one day when Mac and Sir Arthur were absent.

"Of course," said the Kid, taken unawares. "Do you like it?"

"It's lots prettier 'n me," simpered Maggie.

"Hanged if it is! It isn't half so pretty," declared the Kid and then blushed guiltily for having said it. But the ice had been broken. There were no more words, but when Maggie winked slyly over Sir Arthur's shoulder the Kid winked back.

Mac's fall from grace was due to the fact that the hall was dark and that he was in a hurry. So was Maggie, for she ran plump into his arms and somehow or other stayed there for a moment.

"Oh, it's you, is it, Maggie?" exclaimed Mac.

"Sure," said Maggie. "Did you think it was Miss Astorbilt?"

"Perhaps. Why not? I'll bet you're as much of an armful as she."

"Go away with you," said Maggie, breaking loose. "You're a nice kind of a hermit, you are."

More ice went then. After that when Maggie climbed to the retreat of the Resolute Hermits with dustpan and broom there were two at whom it was safe to wink, provided the wink was seen by only one at a time. This complicated the game and gave it added zest.

There remained Sir Arthur, stern, unmoved, unapproachable. At least he was undisturbed until one day when he alone occupied the den. He had his feet on the table and a writing pad on his lap. He was grinding away at a quatrain which he hoped to sell for as much as $4. There was something in it about kisses.

"OH-H-H! I SAY, NOW!"

Maggie, leaning on her broom, boldly tried to read over his shoulder the much corrected lines and at last broke the silence by a sarcastic aside to herself, "A whole lot he knows about that, I don't think!"

"Meaning me?" asked Sir Arthur.

"Sure," promptly declared Maggie.

"Who else? There ain't no crowd, is there?"

True, there was no crowd, for they were two.

"What is it that I don't know 'bout?" asked Sir Arthur.

"Why, kissin' an' all that." And Maggie, leaning over his shoulder, indicated with contemptuous finger the scribbled lines.

"What makes you think so?"

"No thinkin' at all. I knows."

Sir Arthur looked into the saucy blue eyes at short range and read therein a challenge.

"Do you dare me?" he demanded.

"Um-mum!" replied Maggie through pursed lips.

Now, Sir Arthur was three and twenty, and Maggie's eyes invited. Undoubtedly he meant, hermit or no hermit, to take the dare. Still, he had done no more than put a sustaining finger under Maggie's chin when the door suddenly opened, and there stood Mac and the Kid, returned most atrociously inopportune.

"Oh-h-h! I say, now!" they chorused. They were shocked—immensely shocked, so they said—and tried to look it.

"Don't you believe 'em!" protested Maggie indignantly. "They're every bit as gay both of them, only not near so nice," with which sweeping declaration she departed, leaving the Resolute Hermits to make new vows in which, particularly and especially, but with some small suspicion of regret, was Maggie Brady adjured for all time.

Neglect of the Teeth Is Culpable.

Dentists tell us our teeth are rapidly deteriorating. The Scotch peasants who lived and grew strong on milk and porridge now drink tea and eat a herring for breakfast, while the rich regale themselves on soft food and made dishes of every kind. The poorer classes pay no attention to their children's teeth, and while in that wise country Japan and among the Hindoos daily tooth brushing and cleansing are never omitted, it is the last thing poor people think of in England. A man or woman in the prime of youth, but almost toothless, is a common sight. They neglect their teeth, then they get toothache and have a tooth extracted, and when their teeth are gone they can neither masticate nor digest. I would have children taught in the schools something about their health and how to keep it, how to preserve their teeth and how to feed and bring up babies, facts of which at present they are deplorably ignorant. Even well to do people display culpable indifference about their teeth and often omit to clean them before going to bed, which is the A B C of all teeth preservation.—Lady Violet Greville.

Blessing the Beasts.

One of the quaintest ceremonies which may still be seen in some parts of Normandy is the "benediction des bestiaux." The oxen, asses and a few thoroughbred horses which are raised in that part of France are assembled in front of the little church. There may also be a bullock or two and some cows. The procession of peasants in their quaint costumes issues from the church to the music of a chant which is droned by the priest and people. The venerable cure sprinkles a few drops on the heads of each of the beasts, who receive it as it is given, with a becoming air of conviction. When all the animals have received the benediction bundles tied up in coarse linen are placed at the pedestal of the cross facing the church. These packets contain bread and salt, which are to be given to the animals not able to attend the ceremony. There may be a couple of hundred peasants taking part in this ceremony, and not a trace of levity or anything but devout composure is to be seen on their faces. When the ceremony is completed the procession passes through the village chanting and then disperses.

A Useless Craft.

"It does beat all, Michael, what they are teaching girls now in these city schools," said old Mrs. Millikin, laying down the advertising section of a big daily which she had been reading closely for the last half hour. "Of course when Jamie went to the farm school and they gave him digging and chores and such it seemed right enough, for he was a boy and was fitting himself for making a living off the land.

"But what I can't make out is why ever city folks, and girls at that, and ones that don't need to be scratching to make ends meet, should be paying $25 extra, as the paper here says, just to learn fencing."

"Does seem kind o' queer, ma, come to think of it," returned the old man at the other end of the table, "but seems like of late I've been hearing a lot of talk 'bout nature studies and 'back to nature' and simple lifes and such, and maybe that's the city folks' way o' getting at those things, though it 'pears to me as if 'twould come handier for 'em to take a jaunt out in the country where real fences was if they're so mighty anxious to be learned 'bout the building of 'em!"

Tibet Sheep.

The principal beast of burden in the inner ranges of the Himalayas is the mountain sheep, which will carry each from seventeen to twenty-five pounds of baggage and live entirely on the herbage by the wayside. A small flock of them accompanied a recent expedition of a famous Indian explorer for more than a thousand miles, being at the finish none the worse for the journey. It is common in the Himalayas to load sheep high up in the mountains with borax and then to drive them down to the plains, where they are shorn of their wool and return laden with grain or salt. They stand the severe cold of the higher ranges of Tibet better than the yak or mountain cow and are indeed indispensable to the primitive needs of transit of the dwellers there.

The Simple Life

ings, fit pendant to that of the great. The root of these two prides is the same. It is not alone that lofty and imperious being, the man who says, "I am the law," that provokes insurrection by his very attitude; it is also that pigheaded subaltern who will not admit that there is anything beyond his knowledge.

There are really many people who find all superiority irritating. For them every piece of advice is an offense, every criticism an imposition, every order an outrage on their liberty. They would not know how to submit to rule. To respect anything or anybody would seem to them a mental aberration. They say to people after their fashion, "Beyond us there is nothing."

To the family of the proud belong also those difficult and supersensitive people who in humble life find that their superiors never do them fitting honor, whom the best and most kindly do not succeed in satisfying and who go about their duties with the air of a martyr. At bottom these disaffected minds have too much misplaced self respect. They do not know how to fill their place simply, but complicate their life and that of others by unreasonable demands and morbid suspicions.

When one takes the trouble to study men at short range he is surprised to find that pride has so many lurking places among those who are by common consent called the humble. So powerful is this vice that it arrives at forming round those who live in the most modest circumstances a wall which isolates them from their neighbors. There they are, intrenched, barricaded with their ambitions and their contempts, as inaccessible as the powerful of earth behind their aristocratic prejudices. Obscure or illustrious, pride wraps itself in its dark royalty of enmity to the human race. It is the same in misery and in high places—solitary and impotent, on guard against everybody, embroiling everything. And the last word about it is always this: If there is so much hostility and hatred between different classes of men it is due less to exterior conditions than to an interior fatality. Conflicting interests and differences of situation dig ditches between us, it is true, but pride transforms the ditches into gulfs, and in reality it is pride alone which cries from brink to brink, "There is nothing common between you and us!"

We have not finished with pride, but it is impossible to picture it under all its forms. I feel most resentful against it when it meddles with knowledge and appropriates that. We owe our knowledge to our fellows, as we do our riches and power. It is a social force which ought to be of service to everybody, and it can only be so when those who know remain sympathetically near to those who know not. When knowledge is turned into a tool for ambition it destroys itself.

And what shall we say of the pride of good men? For it exists and makes even virtue hateful. The just who repent them of the evil others do remain in brotherhood and social rectitude. But the just who despise others for their faults and misdeeds cut themselves off from humanity, and their goodness, descended to the rank of an ornament for their vanity, becomes like those riches which kindness does not inform, like authority untempered by the spirit of obedience. Like proud wealth and arrogant power, supercilious virtue also is detestable. It fosters in man traits and an attitude provocative of I know not what. The sight of it repels instead of attracting, and those whom it deigns to distinguish with its benefits feel as though they had been slapped in the face.

To resume and conclude, it is an error to think that our advantages, whatever they are, should be put to the service of our vanity. Each of them constitutes for him who enjoys it an obligation and not a reason for vainglory. Material wealth, power, knowledge, gifts of the heart and mind, become so much cause for discord when they serve to nourish pride. They remain beneficent only so long as they are the source of modesty in those who possess them.

Let us be humble if we have great possessions, for that proves that we are great debtors. All that a man has he owes to some one, and are we sure of being able to pay our debts?

Let us be humble if we sit in high places and hold the fate of others in our hands, for no clear sighted man their will and all the influence they transmit become elements nutritive of its native energy. Such use of authority as this cultivates that fruitful obedience out of which free souls are born. The purely personal authority of parents, masters and institutions is to the child like the brushwood beneath which the young plant withers and dies. Impersonal authority, the authority of a man who has first submitted himself to the time honored realities before which he wishes the individual fancy of the child to bend, resembles pure and luminous air. True, it has an activity and influences us in its manner, but it nourishes our individuality and gives it firmness and stability. Without this authority there is no education. To watch, to guide, to keep a firm hand—such is the function of the educator. He should appear to the child not like a barrier of whims, which, if need be, one may clear, provided the leap be proportioned to the height of the obstacle, but like a transparent wall through which may be seen unchanging realities, laws, limits and truths against which no action is possible." Thus arises respect, which is the faculty of conceiving something greater than ourselves—respect, which broadens us and frees us by making us more modest. This is the law of education for simplicity. It may be summed up in these words: To make free and reverential men, who shall be individual and fraternal.

Let us draw from this principle some practical applications.

From the very fact that the child is the future he must be linked to the past by piety. We owe it to him to clothe tradition in the forms most practical and most fit to create a deep impression; whence the exceptional place that should be given in education to the ancients, to the cult of remembrance of the past and by extension to the history of the domestic rooftree. Above all do we fulfill a duty toward our children when we give the place of honor to the grandparents. Nothing speaks to a child with so much force or so well develops his modesty as to see his father and mother on all occasions preserve toward an old grandfather, often infirm, an attitude of respect. It is a perpetual object lesson that is irresistible. That it may have its full force it is necessary for a tacit understanding to obtain among all the grownup members of the family. To the child's eyes they must all be in league, held to mutual respect and understanding, under penalty of compromising their educational authority, and in their number must be counted the servants. Servants are big people, and the same sentiment of respect is injured in the child's disregard of them as in his disregard of his father or grandfather. The moment he addresses an impolite or arrogant word to a person older than himself he strays from the path that a child ought never to quit, and if only occasionally the parents neglect to point this out they will soon perceive by his conduct toward themselves the the enemy has found entrance to h heart.

We mistake if we think that a child is naturally alien to respect, basing this opinion on the very numerous examples of irreverence which he offers us. Respect is for the child a fundamental need. His moral being feeds on it. The child aspires confusedly to revere and admire something, but when advantage is not taken of this aspiration it gets corrupted or lost. By our lack of cohesion and mutual deference we, the grownups, discredit daily in the child's eyes our own cause and that of everything worthy of respect. We inoculate in him a bad spirit whose effects then turn against us.

This pitiful truth nowhere appears with more force than in the relations between masters and servants as we have made them. Our social errors, our want of simplicity and kindness, all fall back upon the heads of our children. There are certainly few people of the middle classes who understand that it is better to part with many thousands of dollars than to lead their children to lose respect for servants who represent in our households the humble, yet nothing is truer. Maintain as strictly as you will conventions and distances, that demarcation of social frontiers which permits each one to remain in his place and to observe the law of differences—that is a good thing. I am persuaded—but on condition of never forgetting that those who serve us are men and women like ourselves. You require of your domestics certain formulas of speech and certain attitudes, outward evidence of the respect they owe you. Do you also teach your children and use yourselves manners toward your servants which show them that you respect their dignity as individuals as you desire them to respect you? Here we have continually in our homes an excellent ground for experiment in the practice of that mutual respect which is one of the essential conditions of social sanity. I fear we profit by it too little. We do not fail to exact respect, but we fail to give it. So it is most frequently the case that we get only hypocrisy and this supplementary result, all unexpected—the cultivation of pride in our children. These two factors combined heap up great difficulties for that future which we ought to be safeguarding. I am right, then, in saying that the day when by your own practices you have brought about the lessening of respect in your children you have suffered a sensible loss.

Why should I not say it? It seems to me that the greater part of us labor for this loss. On all sides, in almost every social rank, I notice that a pretty bad spirit is fostered in children, a spirit of reciprocal contempt. Here those who have calloused hands and working clothes are disdained; there it is all who do not wear blue jeans. Children educated in this spirit make sad fellow citizens. There is in all this the want of that simplicity which makes it possible for some interior force of initiative to make a violent way to the light, producing explosions, upheavals, all sorts of grave disorders. And where there are no outward manifestations the evil lies dormant; beneath apparent order are hidden dumb revolts, flaws made by an abnormal existence, apathy, death.

The system is evil which produces such fruit, and, however simple it may appear, in reality it brings forth all possible complications.

The other system is the extreme opposite, that of bringing up children for themselves. The roles are reversed; the parents are there for the child. No sooner is he born than he becomes the center. White headed grandfather and stalwart father bow before these curls. His lisping is their law. A sign from him suffices. If he cries in the night no fatigue is of account; the whole household must be roused. The newcomer is not long in discovering his omnipotence, and before he can walk he is drunken with it. As he grows older all this deepens and broadens. Parents, grandparents, servants, teachers, everybody is at his command. He accepts the homage and even the immolation of his neighbor; he treats like a rebellious subject any one who does not step out of his path. There is only himself. He is the unique, the perfect, the infallible. Too late it is perceived that all this has been evolving a master, and what a master! Forgetful of sacrifices, without respect, even pity. He no longer has any regard for those to whom he owes everything, and he goes through life without law or check.

This education, too, has its social counterpart. It flourishes wherever the past does not count, where history begins with the living, where there is no tradition, no discipline, no reverence; where those who know the least make the most noise; where those who stand for public order are alarmed by every chance comer whose power lies in his making a great outcry and respecting nothing. It insures the reign of transitory passion, the triumph of the inferior will. I compare these two educations—one the exaltation of the environment, the other the tyranny of the new—and I find them equally baneful. But the most disastrous of all is the combination of the two, which produces human beings half automatons, half despots, forever vacillating between the spirit of a sheep and the spirit of revolt or domination.

Children should be educated neither for themselves nor for their parents, for man is no more designed to be a personage than a specimen. They should be educated for life. The aim of their education is to aid them to become active members of humanity, brotherly forces, free servants of the civil organization. To follow a method of education inspired by any other principle is to complicate life, deform it, sow the seeds of all disorders.

When we would sum up in a phrase the destiny of the child the word "future" springs to our lips. The child is the future. This word says all—the sufferings of the past, the stress of today, hope. But when the education of the child begins he is incapable of estimating the reach of this word, for he is held by impressions of the present. Who, then, shall give him the first enlightenment and put him in the way he should go? The parents, the teachers. And with very little reflection they perceive that their work does not interest simply themselves and the child, but that they represent and administer impersonal powers and interests. The child should continually appear to them as a future citizen. With this ruling idea they will take thought for two things that complement each other—for the initial and personal force which is germinating in the child and for the social destination of this force. At no moment of their direction over him can they forget that this little being confided to their care must become himself and a brother. These two conditions, far from excluding each other, never exist apart. It is impossible to be brotherly, to love, to give oneself, unless one is master of himself; and, reciprocally, none can possess himself, comprehend his own individual being, until he has first made his way through the outward accidents of his existence down to the profound springs of life where man feels himself one with other men in all that is most intimately his own.

To aid a child to become himself and a brother it is necessary to protect him against the violent and destructive action of the forces of disorder. These forces are exterior and interior. Every child is menaced from without not only by material dangers, but by the meddlesomeness of alien wills, and from within by an exaggerated idea of his own personality and all the fancies it breeds. There is a great outward danger which may come from the abuse of power in educators. The right of might finds itself a place in education with extreme facility. To educate another one must have renounced this right—that is to say, made abnegation of the inferior sentiment of personal importance, which transforms us into the enemies of others, even of our own children. Our authority is beneficent only when it is inspired by one higher than our own. In this case it is not only salutary, but also indispensable, and becomes in its turn the best guarantee against the greater peril which threatens the child from within—that of exaggerating his own importance. At the beginning of life the vividness of personal impressions is so great that to establish an equilibrium they must be submitted to the gentle influence of a calm and superior will. The true quality of the office of educator is to represent this will to the child in a manner as continuous and as disinterested as possible. Educators, then, stand for all that is to be respected in the world. They give to the child impressions of that which precedes it, outruns it, envelops it, but they do not crush it. On the contrary they can fail to be sensible of unfitness for so grave a role.

Let us be humble if we have much knowledge, for it duly serves to better show the vastness of the unknown, and to compare the little we have discovered for ourselves with the amplitude of that which we owe to the pains of others.

And, above all, let us be humble if we are virtuous, since no one should be more sensible of his defects than he whose conscience is illumined, and since he, more than any one else, should feel the need of charity toward evil doers, even of suffering in their stead.

"And what about the necessary distinctions in life?" some one may ask. "As a result of your simplifications are you not going to destroy that sense of the difference between men which must be maintained if society exists at all?"

I have no mind to suppress distinctions and differences, but I think that what distinguishes a man is not found in his social rank, his occupation, his dress or his fortune, but solely in himself. More than any other, our own age has pricked the vain bubble of purely outward greatness. To be somebody at present it does not suffice to wear the mantle of an emperor or a royal crown. What honor is there in wielding power through gold lace, a coat of arms or a ribbon? Not that visible signs are to be despised—they have their meaning and use—but on condition that they cover something and not a vacuum. The moment they cease to stand for realities they become useless and dangerous. The only true distinction is superior worth. If you would have social rank duly respected you must begin by being worthy of the rank that is your own; otherwise you help to bring it into hatred and contempt. It is, unhappily, too true that respect is diminishing among us, and it certainly is not from a lack of lines drawn round those who wish to be respected. The root of the evil is in the mistaken idea that high station exempts him who holds it from observing the common obligations of life. As we rise we believe that we free ourselves from the law, forgetting that the spirit of obedience and humility should grow with our possessions and power. So it comes about that those who demand the most homage make the least effort to merit the homage they demand. This is why respect is diminishing.

The sole distinction necessary is the wish to become better. The man who strives to be better becomes more humble, more approachable, more friendly even with those who owe him allegiance, but as he gains by being better known he loses nothing in distinction, and he reaps the more respect in that he has sown the less pride.

AN IMPOSTER.

Trying to Do Up the Preachers and Old Soldiers.

A slim, tall man dressed in blue, came to the pastor's study last Saturday evening, and seeing the button on the pastor's coat, he stepped forward quickly and said, "Why how do you do, comrade? I am very glad to meet you. I am an old soldier too. Was in the 83rd Regt. Pa. Vol. for three years and four months. I am a Pennsylvanian. I recently moved a few miles out here in the country on the Morris farm. My brother-in-law wants to run a dairy farm. I am a Lutheran. My wife and I brought our letter of dismissal along and want to unite with your church.

"Next Monday afternoon we are having a double wedding at our house My daughter and my wife's sister are getting married and we want you to perform the ceremony. We will drive in to town, take you out and bring you back again. I paid the farmer rent over two hundred dollars for farming implements and he also had some hay and corn, for which he wants $76. I had but $68 left. The man is going out West and wants his money this evening. Now I am a stranger in this country and it is very embarrasing to ask for help, but being you are a Lutheran minister and I and my family are Lutherans I came to ask you to befriend me just till the middle of next week, when my brother-in-law is coming; he has money and I will pay you back, etc."

My reply was "Well Iam very short, checked out all I had a few days ago, but $1.

"But let us go down to our church treasurer, perhaps I can get that much." My object was to ask Dr. Hinebaugh (treas.) whether there was such a farm out here in the country north of Mt. Lake Park, owned by a Mr. Morris and tenanted by a Mr. Walker last year. The doctor said no. So I went out and told the fellow that there was no money in the treasury, which was true, because the pastor had drawn out all just a few days previous. I told the fellow that perhaps he could find that much elsewhere. He said "good bye" and away he went. I think headed for Cumberland to try and impose on someone else.

The fellow ought to be arrested for false pretense.

REV. E. MANGES,
Pastor St. Mark's Lutheran Church.

Farm For Sale.

As agent I offer for sale the Jennie Friend farm two miles north of Deer Park, containing 127 acres of land, sixty acres of which are cleared and in meadow. The property is improved with two stables, a dwelling of five rooms in good repair, a young orchard, and is well watered. Apply to E. G. Miller, Deer Park, Md.

KEARNEY.

We will send you a few items from our little village or community.

Once again we breathe the balmy breezes of spring and happy are we to see it after such a long and severe winter.

The farmers are busy getting in their spring crops.

Elisha Harvey and D. O. Harvey have their lime kiln burning.

We had an accident in this community, which might prove serious. Mrs. J. O. Harvey, while washing, scraped some fuel under the kettle, among it being a loaded shot gun shell, which exploded, the contents flying in her face and arm.

Mrs. E. W. Kelso was visiting her daughter, Mrs. D. M. Dixon in Oakland, this week.

Mr. G. V. Moon is visiting his daughter, Mrs. N. B. Harvey, of this place.

Miss Ida Harvey returned home Monday from Blaine, W. Va., where she was visiting her brother, Mr. L. A. Harvey.

Mrs. B. W. Harvey is convalescing after an illness of two weeks.

Mr. E. Harvey is busy with his saw, hatchet, wedge and grafting wax.

The firm of B. W. and C. G. Harvey has just received a ton of Puritan chicken food to feed their chickens. They have seven hundred eggs, pure bred, of White Leghorns, Wyandotte and Brown Leghorns in the process of incubating.

Secretary of the Grange, Mr. Scott Harvey is engaged hauling fertilizer.

Mr. J. R. Browning and wife were visiting Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Harvey Sunday.

Mr. G. W. Harvey is at Etam, West Va., building a cupola on the M. E. church of that place

Quarterly meeting will be held at the White Church Easter Sunday.

Wishing THE REPUBLICAN success.

VOLUME 29. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, APRIL 27, 1905. NUMBER 8

JAMES S. LAKIN NOMINATED FOR CONGRESS

By the Republicans of the Second West Virginia District at Keyser Last Night

WON OUT ON THE 33RD BALLOT.

Nominee Is the Son of Rev. and Mrs. C. H. Lakin, Formerly of Oakland, and Now a Resident of Terra Alta Where He is Largely Interested.

The many warm friends of Mr. James S. Lakin, of Terra Alta, where he is prominently identified with the business interests of that section as a merchant and banker, are highly gratified that he secured the nomination for Congress on the Republican ticket at the Congressional Convention held in Keyser yesterday. His nomination occured on the 33rd ballot, when he secured 147 votes. One hundred and twenty-six votes were necessary to nominate.

Mr. Lakin was nominated to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Congressman Alston G. Dayton. He is a son of Rev. and Mrs. C. H. Lakin, for many years a minister in this section of the country, residing in Oakland where the congressman to-be entered upon his business career as a clerk for Mr. D. E. Offutt and later as a partner of the same gentleman in the mercantile business at Terra Alta.

Strike Officially Called Off.

A Meyersdale diabatch says:

"The miners' strike in the Meyersdale region, which was inaugurated December 15, 1903, was declared off by Organizer E. S. McCullough, acting upon instruction from the National organization, at a mass meeting of the striking miners here last evening. Since the strike was declared 16 months ago a majority of the mines have been operated nearly, if not altogather, full time. It is said the calling off of this strike means the virtual passing of the organization in this region, as it has utterly failed in gaining a single point contended for."

Farm For Sale.

BITTINGER.

The young people of the Lutheran Sabbath school of this place rendered a very pleasing Easter entertainment in the church on last Sabbath evening. The house was very prettily and tastily decorated with evergreens so arranged as to eloquently express the theme "The Gate Ajar". The services was presided over by the pastor, Rev. Shoup, and the entire program was rendered in a most commendable manner. The entertainment began with a violin voluntary by Prof. Althers with organ accompaniment by Mrs. Emory. This was followed by a series of appropriate songs interspersed with responsive readings and recitations by members of the Sunday school. An offering was taken for the church extention fund of the Evangelical Lutheran church. A special feature of the entertainment was two recitations, one by Master Paul Davis entitled "It is Not Lost," and one by Miss Ruth Shoup entitled "Rabboni." These as well as the other recitations were rendered in a most pleasing style and our young people are to be commended upon their achievements and excellent work in this entertainment.

Rev. Shoup and Jonas Bittinger were calling on friends at Accident on last Monday.

Mr. O. C. Robinson, of Avilton, was seen in our midst on last Friday afternoon. It would seem that Oscar has been smitten by some of our pretty young ladies' winning smiles.

Messrs. H. H. Flick and Adam Richter drove over from Accident last Sunday and spent the night with friends here returning on Monday morning.

Mr. Young P. Lohr and Mr. Whorton's little son, of Oakland, were visiting here and at Grantsville last week.

Mr. Abel DeWitt was in this section a few days ago buying wool and lambs.

Mr. Eli Stanton, of Grantsville, passed through here last Monday afternoon.

Mrs. Hattie Engle went on a fishing trip last Monday and we hope to report the extent of the catch next week.

$4,000,000 FOR ENGINES.

B. & O. Awards Mammoth Contract for Power.

Announcement was made Tuesday by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company of contracts closed Monday afternoon for 250 new locomotives, which will cost a little over $4,000,000.

The American Locomotive Company got the lion's share of the contracts, orders being placed with it for 210 consolidation type freight locomotives and 35 Pacific type passenger locomotives. To Burnham, Williams & Co. (Baldwin Locomotive Works) was awarded a contract for five switching locomotives. The contracts call for the beginning of the delivery of the locomotives in August, and all are to be delivered by December 1, 1905.

President Murray is especially anxious to get this additional motive power in service as early as possible to meet the requirements in the steady but heavy increase of traffic over the system.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has made a wonderful growth and development since it went into the hands of the receivers, in 1896. At the end of the fiscal year June 30, 1896, four months after it had gone into receivership, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad had a total of 1077 locomotives, while on April 1, 1905, the motive power in the service had increased 624, to a total of 1701 locomotives. In addition, the affiliated lines had 124 locomotives in service. The addition of the 250 locomotives just contracted for will make the total number the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and affiliated lines 2075. This number will be slightly reduced by the putting out of service of some old locomotives, but it will still leave the road with almost double the number of locomotives it had when it went into the hands of the receivers.

Rapid progress is being made in getting the present rolling stock of the system in first-class condition by following out the present policy of making substantial repairs and by disposing of the obsolete equipment which cannot be utilized to good advantage for the present traffic requirements.

With 10,000 freight cars, which the Company has decided to add to its equipment, the end of the calendar year will show an addition of 11,250 new cars and 250 locomotives of the most modern designed to the equipment of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

The 35 Pacific type of passenger locomotives that has been ordered are of the most modern and substantial design and specification that has yet been produced, and will be fully equipped for the efficient and economical handling of both heavy and light passenger trains over all parts of the system at the highest permissible speed.

The 210 consolidation type of freight locomotive have been especially designed, with large driver wheels and other essential features, for the fast movement of heavy freight trains. The five switching locomotive are of a special type for the handling of the terminal work in the New York district.

The American Locomorive Company, which recived the larger part of the contracts, has a capital stock of $50,000,000, one-half preferred and one half common. It owns every important locomotive works in the United States and Canada.

Prof. Leo Rasche Luckily Escaped Serious Injnry.

Yesterday afternoon Prof. Leo J. Rasche was the central figure in an accident which fortunately terminated very luckily for this well known musical instructor and bandsman. Prof. Rasche has a number of private pupils who live a short distance beyond the eastern limits of the city, and yesterday, in order to amicably adjust conflicting engagements, he pressed into service a wild-eyed "bronco," kindly loaned him by a friend. At the railroad crossing in the East End the animal gave an exhibition of a few of its in-born gymnastic traits, and as a result the Professor was unseated and thrown heavily on the tracks and remained there in a dazed condition for several minutes, regaining his sense just in time to avoid being struck by a rapidly approaching train. His injuries, the more painful being a fractured finger, were attended to by Dr. Doyle. In the near future the Professor should remember that old axium: "Music hath charms to sooth the savage beast," and at least try this expedient when he again uses the "bronco" as a means of rapid transit."—Friday's Grafton Sentinel.

CEMETERY CLEARED OF ROCK.

The Catholic Burying Ground Improved and New Fence Erected.

The members of St. Peter's Catholic church on Monday gathered at the cemetery belonging to the congregation and cleared the ground of rocks in which no graves are located which had been previously plowed up and around the lot a substantial fence was erected to take the place of old wooden structure that had passed its days of usefulness.

The members of the church are to be congratulated for the interest manifested and we feel sure they merit and will receive the thanks of not only their own members but those of the citizens generally of Oakland.

Methodist Advice.

MR. EDITOR: Some time ago we saw an item in one of the papers of Garrett county stating that county is to be "explored" by two Baptist ministers who are "to pave the coming of a new man to be stationed in the county where, in some communities, the people are pleading for the gospel," and would like a small space in your valuable columns to give a few words of advice to our own people by saying we will give our prayers to these men in their efforts to plant the gospel in such "communities where the people are pleading for the gospel," but give them no encouragement to enter the societies under our supervision. We will have no part in writing or debating "why we are a Methodist," or similar questions. We will distribute tracts and other literature from our own publishing houses and read no other, we will treat them with due regard but do our own preaching from our pulpits for none but the pastor of a Methodist church can permit a minister from another church to enter this his sacred "throne". All ordained ministers are always ready to administer the sacrament of baptism to all who wish it, not only by sprinkiing but also by immersion. All persons who want a copy of the Bible can secure one from any of the ministers of our church and if any are not able to buy, they will be given one "without money and without price."

This advice, which can be observed without any unchristian feeling or act on the part of any one and which has been given with no selfish feeling, but merely to remind our people that we love them and can care for them, is given in the same spirit that a father would instruct his children.

A METHODIST.

No Drinking While on Duty.

The Baltimore & Ohio railroad, in its efforts to safe guard the traveling public and to prevent and eliminate accidents will not employ any man who is known to be a drinking man. One of the questions asked an applicant is, 'do you drink?" If the answer is no, he stands a show for getting the job he is looking for, that is if there are any open. If the answer is in the affirmative, he is at once told, "we cannot use you." If a man admits that he takes even one drink a day, he will not be employed. If a man is found drinking on duty, after he has been working for the road some time, he is immediately let go. Too much depends on the clearheadedness of railroad employes to take chances. If a man who is a moderate drinker is employed, after admitting the fact to the man who hired him, he could not be reprimanded even for drinking on duty, as he would immediately say: "I told you that I took a drink now and then; I've only had one." Moderate drinkers sometimes are not so moderate, and in that lies the danger, not only of their own lives, but the life of every one who must work or travel on the road.

DIED

WALTER—At his home in Morgantown on last Friday afternoon, April 21st, 1905, Mr. George H. Walter, formerly proprietor of the Schley Hotel, who moved from Oakland to Morgantown something over a year ago. Mr. Walter was 72 years of age and his death caused by dropsy of the heart. He had been in ill health for a number of years and his death was not unexpected, but the end came with startling suddenness while his daughter was talking with him. Deceased had been a member of the Lutheran church for many years. The remains were taken to Somerset Sunday morning for interment. Mr. Walter was a member of the Masonic fraternity and the members of the Somerset lodge had charge of the interment. A wife, daughter and three sons survive him. The sympathy of all is extended to them in their bereavement.

LUTHERANS SELL THEIR CHURCH LOT TO COUNTY

Act of the Official Board Confirmed by Members

AT MEETING TUESDAY NIGHT.

Agreement to Sell Property to County Removes Opstacle for Erection of Proposed New Public Buildings Church will be Located Elsewhere.

At the congregational meeting of the St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church held on Tuesday night of this week, the action of the official board of the church in agreeing to sell the Corrigan lot to the Board of County Commissioners for the site for proposed new public buildings, was ratified by a majority vote of the members, thus removing one of the two remaining obstacles standing in the way of securing a clear title to the whole block of lots wanted by the Commissioners for county purposes.

At a meeting of the church officials held recently the board decided to sell the property to the county for $4,000, leaving a net profit to the church of $600, but to dispose of property legitimately final action was necessary by a vote of the congregation, which was taken Tuesday night with the result above stated.

The church meeting was largely attended, the entire membership taking great interest in the matter, and while some opposition was manifested there is little or no ill feeling existing as a result of the sale.

As soon as the papers can be prepared they will be signed by the Council transferring the lot to the Board of Commissioners. The Council is composed of five members, they being Messrs. Dr. Hinebaugh, Lloyd Lantz, Daniel Hinebaugh, Samuel Butler and James A. Sincell.

At the meeting Tuesday night several eligable sites were mentioned that can be secured for the proposed new church, but no definite action was taken. It is thought, however, that a lot can be secured within a short time when work on the edifice will be commenced, plans for which have already been considered by the building committee but some changes, since another location will have to be sought, will of necersity have to be made, but this will not interfer materially with the work.

Tenant Wanted

At Altamont Springs Farm a tenant by the year is wanted. House, garden and pasture for cow will be furnished; also a man to work by the year is wanted to whom board will be furnished. Apply to W. H. Chadderton, manager, Deer Park, Md.

Jesus Washing The Disciples' Feet.

The sadness of the Last Supper has been emphasized out of proportion. Jesus as host would certainly not allow the occasion to wholly lose its festive character. The room was spacious. The walls had been freshly whitened and its tile floor scoured. The low gaily painted table was in position, with the couches, forming three sides of a hollow square about it. Dishes, basins, and water-jars were all in position. It was a goodly scene the well-trimmed lamps shone down upon. The fresh turbans of blue, crimson, and yellow; the animated faces, the table covered with damask and well supplied—all made a study for a painter.

The presence of Judas was one ugly spot on this feast of love. Jesus, without explicitly designating the traitor, announced that one of the twelve would betray Him. He did this for their sakes, that they might know He was perfectly aware of His impending fate, and not taken by surprise. He did it for Judas' sake also. It was the last appeal to the traitor. He gave Judas a prominent place at the table, and gave him his portion lovingly with His own hand. He let him know, however, that He read his wicked heart, and only when it was clearly of no avail,He bade him do quickly his wicked deed.

The other blot upon the otherwise fascinating picture was the unseemly dispute as to precedence at table. The disciples scrambled for the most eligible places. It was in part to rebuke this that Jesus acted a significant parable before them. He performed the most menial task of the scullery drudge, one that with their Oriental ideas they would hardly have performed for the Master Himself. Peter's strong protest indicates the depth of the apparent degradation. But Jesus, with full consciousness of His origin and destiny, could still do this lowly service. Etiquette of court could neither make nor unmake this King of men who came from God and went to God. There must be an end of caste, of place, and precedence, when the Lord and Master washes the disciples' feet. Henceforth they must cherish such a feeling toward one another as would make them willing to perform a service as lowly as that of washing the feet of another.

Jesus, by His own interpretation of His acted parable, leads to a more subtle and universal meaning than that which appears upon the surface. He teaches humility and the spirit of service, but He teaches more than that. To Peter, the protester, He affirmed that there was a washing (theologically, the washing of regeneration) without which a man continued an alien and stranger, having no part nor lot in the kingdom. Peter grasps the symbolical meaning at once, when he cries, "Not my feet only, but hands and head." Peter's extravagance gives Jesus another opportunity for subtle, but practical, discrimination. It is as if Jesus had said, "One who has had a bath does not need to bathe again to be rid of the dirt that adheres to the feet on walking from the bath to the table. Washing the feet is sufficient. So one who has had the washing of regeneration does not need to have it repeated in order to be cleansed from fresh guilt. Daily forgiveness for daily trespasses is sufficient."

The Teacher's Lantern.

The upper room, where the Last Supper was eaten, probably belonged to some well-to-do disciple. [John Mark's father (?)] It may have been the scene of the appearance of Jesus after His resurrection and of the Pentecostal effusion of the spirit. If so, it was the very cradle of the infant Church.

* * * * *

The anachronism of Leanardo de Vinci's lovely fresco of the East Supper is curious. He represents Jesus and the disciples sitting in Occidental style at a very modern extension table. They did not sit at all, but reclined on couches. It was this reclining that made it natural for John to lay his head on Jesus' bosom, and for Peter and John to hold their whispered conversation without Judas observing them, and finally for Jesus to wash the disciples' feet, as they would extend over the edge of the couch and away from the table.

* * * * *

This action of Jesus is not a mere accident or incident. It exhibits the fundamental principle, the very animating spirit of His life and mission. He became a servant. We must understand this action and imitate it, or we have no part with Him.

* * * * *

Feet-washing can never rise to a sacramental dignity. The literal act is a caricature in which the spirit is lost. The Lord's commandment to wash one another's feet is only another putting of His new commandment of love. Love is humility. Love delights to serve the necessities as well of the body as of the soul.

* * * * *

The foot-washing parable signifies that it is Jesus who does the washing. It also teaches that those who have received His washing will need constant renewal to be rid of the soil of daily life, although this no way depreciates the virtue of the original washing. Finally, persons who have been so renewed are furnished to be helpful to others.

* * * * *

Some one criticises the evangelist for giving Satan a place in his narrative. But he could not avoid it. God's work and the devil's were paralled in human life. The Berlen Bible quaintly says: "Christ prepares Himself. Satan prepares himself. Hence the text appears here abrubtly torn asunder. Yet there is deep harmony."The style is thus intersected to show that Christ has such a tangled way to pierce through, and that His disciples must in like manner follow Him.

* * * * *

Jesus' devotion to His disciples is supurb. Naturally He would have been observed with His own approaching sufferings, and His attention diverted from His followers. But his self-oblivion was complete. Under shadow of His cross He did not forget "His own" "He loved them to the (His) end."

* * * * *

The inutility and importance of mere ceremony or sacrament is evidenced by the fact that Judas, with the others had his feet washed. The traitor had not been benefited an iota by this service, even though it was rendered by the Lord's own hands. As a man's heart is, so is he, sacrament or no sacrament.

The Last Word

By KEITH GORDON

Copyright, 1905, by T. C. McClure

"As if marriage were the only end and aim of a girl's life!" she threw off scornfully. Her companion smoked imperturbably into the night for several seconds before replying. Always he had the air of one loath to break a silence, one who had a constitutional aversion to the futilities of speech. But she was accustomed to that, even whimsically attached to his deliberate ways. At last he spoke. In the darkness she could see his face only as a pale blur, but there was a suspicious sweetness in his tone.

"All the little rippling, purling brooks," he said slowly, "and all the ordinary rivers, even the great majestic streams, 'wind somewhere to the sea.' And I'm sure it isn't my fault," he added in an injured voice.

"Some rivers plunge underground and lose themselves," she argued stubbornly.

"I said 'ordinary rivers.'" This with laconic patience from the gloom.

A quick, flashing smile touched her lips and vanished as if frightened to find itself out in the dark. She wondered—well, a number of things; as, for instance, what he was thinking of at that very instant, whether he had ever really been in love and, if so, what she was like, how deeply love would stir him, whether—

She made a little impatient movement to brush away the thoughts which buzzed through her mind like gnats, but still they hovered about, scattered, but not dispersed. He was one of the men a woman simply had to think about—broad of shoulder and exasperatingly masculine, a sort of unexplored country of mannishness that forever challenged. She drew a sharp, piqued sigh. However much the feminine mind paid tribute, he apparently preserved a Jove-like calm. Ruthlessly she prodded him again.

"But why hasn't a girl just as good a right to contemplate the joys of bachelorhood as a man?" she demanded. "A man marries if he wants to, when he wants and, above all, because he wants to, while a girl—well, she gets the idea that matrimony is a refuge from the wrath to come. If she doesn't marry, she knows that her best friends will refer to her behind her back as an 'old maid' and think of her as one of life's failures. It isn't fair! Why hasn't she just as much of a right to her singleness as a man?"

The dark mass in the opposite chair seemed to be considering the question. There was a movement, and the point of light that marked his cigar shifted.

"She has," he said, with calm conviction, "only one expects her to have too much taste to exercise the right." There was a pause, and then he elaborated: "Being a woman, you see, dear girl, is just a trifle like being caught in a net. It is by no means the same thing as being a man, and all the emancipation in the world can't really free her. She is an entirely different being, and I'm rather glad she is!"

The girl was holding her breath, she scarcely knew why. Sprites, hand in hand, seemed to be dancing along her nerves and singing in tiny threadlike voices that only she could hear: "And I'm glad too! And I'm glad too!" It took her several moments to study the sudden joy; then she pursued the argument calmly:

"But, no; surely you're not in earnest. Surely you're not of the antiquated school that believes, for instance, that a woman's brain is of a different and, of course, inferior caliber to man's." There was a fine disdain in her tone notwithstanding the fact that her heart was beating impatiently.

The man chuckled softly, for, truth to tell, he was that very sort of creature. Never had he been able to take the organ under discussion seriously. He admitted it now without reserve, with a fine, large, indulgent masculine assurance.

"It's a wonderful little contrivance, the feminine brain," he concluded, "but certainly it is different."

Again in the darkness the mouselike smile flashed out and back again, accompanied this time by an audible sound that started as a snicker, but was deftly turned into a sniff of scorn. It was the latter that the man recognized and greeted with an amused laugh.

"Ever hear about the little buttercup that pined to be a daisy, or the rose that swore it was a potato, and if it wasn't it would be—there now?" inquired the man, with bland cynicism. Again the point of light shifted. He had replaced the cigar in his mouth and settled a little more luxuriously in his chair as if in mere sybaritic enjoyment of his extraordinary luck in having been born as he was.

"Your illustrations are beside the facts," she retorted at last, with dignity. "I was not asserting that girls wish to be men!"

"Well, then"—his tone implied an amiable desire to please—"ever hear of the little buttercup that insisted that it was a daisy in spite of appearances and the testimony of its yellow petals? Well, that's like the foolish little girls who want to be judged by man's standard."

Two slender hands were clapped noiselessly, but their owner enunciated with some heat: "How would you like to be a woman yourself and be put upon and—and snubbed and forever taunted with the fact of your inferiority? Oh, not in so many words," she went on hurriedly, lest he should interrupt her speech. "Not that, of course, but by being told that you couldn't understand, being patronized, having allowances made—'Oh, well, she's only a woman!' Just tell me, honor bright, how would you like it?"

The man chuckled. The vision of himself in the predicament suggested was not without its humorous side. The figure of speech he had used a few minutes earlier came back to him with a new force. It was like being caught under a net, though the meshes were silken.

"Well?" she demanded, with a ring of triumph in her voice.

"I don't suppose I should like it," he admitted between puffs. "But that doesn't prove anything, you know," he went on hastily. "That's because I'm a man." Then, as an afterthought, "When you're once used to being a woman—er—I should think you might get used to it—grow to like it. Man's good angel, you know, and all that!"

"But what if one wearies of the role of good angel—what if one longs to be just oneself? For my part, I don't see why man shouldn't be woman's good angel for awhile—he's so strong and brave and, above all, superior!"

Her voice was deceptively mocking. Being only a man, and a man in the dark at that, he had no way of knowing that her eyes were dancing mischievously and she was wondering if he were horribly shocked. What he did know, however, was that the voice, with its youthful, almost boyish treble, was the sweetest in the world to him, that he would rather be mocked and flounted by those lips than flattered by any others. Still he had a point to prove, and he tossed the dwindled cigar off into the bushes that flanked the porch, squared his shoulders aggressively and demanded:

"Would you propose to a man if—er—you loved him?"

His listener gasped. This was carrying the war into the enemy's country with a vengeance. Propose to a man she loved! Not for rubies and diamonds—not for principalities and powers! One might propose to a man one didn't love, but to the man—never!

"No," came the answer in a voice grown suddenly small and meek.

"And she talks about wanting a man's rights!" he groaned to some invisible person. "And she hasn't the nerve to do a little thing like that. My, oh, my!

"I'm afraid you'll have to stay in the good angel business awhile yet—until, for instance, you can stand up and tell a man you love him. I don't see any other way."

There was a pause, in which he waited for her to speak, but she said nothing. Then he leaned forward, and in the gloom she could see the shining of his eyes. He, too, must have seen some secret thing in her face, for, with a laugh—soft, exultant—he took her hands in his and pressed them fervently to his lips.

"You are such funny, helpless, ridiculously superior creatures," were her last words upon the subject a little later, "that I suppose it will have to be—yes."

The Issue of Race.

In the twelfth chapter of the book of Judges it is told how the Gileadites slew forty and two thousand Ephraimites at the passages of Jordan because they pronounced "shibboleth" "sibboleth." That was a race issue. By their faulty speech the forty and two thousand proved themselves to be of another race, and they were slain. Read ancient history and learn that in the dark backward and abysm of time the hand of every man of one race was against the hand of every man of all other races. Stranger meant enemy, alien meant foe. Then the race issue was at its strongest. Centuries have passed. Almost universal tolerance has come about. While races still preserve their national identity, ingress and egress are, for the most part, free and open. The sons of one race mate freely with the daughters of another. Without loss of caste or taint of dishonor a French girl may marry a Neapolitan, a Swiss maiden a Prussian youth, a Norwegian Olsen a German Gretchen, a Russian an Austrian, a Spaniard a Portuguese, an Englishman a Scot. The population of the United States is an amazing composite of all these and other races.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Would Open His Eyes.

"Yes. Why?"

"Well, if he had a wife I think she'd quickly convince him of that mistake."—New York Press.

Bowser Joins a Club

Is Elected a Member of the Unsophisticated Innocents and Thinks It a Great Honor—Goes to Meeting In State, but Returns In Sorry Plight.

[Copyright, 1905, by T. C. McClure.]

"HERE is something that came for you by mail this afternoon," said Mrs. Bowser as she handed Mr. Bowser an official envelope when he came up to dinner the other evening. "I hope you have not been drawn on a jury again."

Mr. Bowser opened the envelope with great deliberation and at once commenced to grow dignified. He drew himself up, swelled out his chest, and when Mrs. Bowser asked what the communication was he loftily replied:

"I have rather been expecting the honor, but didn't know exactly when it would come."

"So you have been honored?"

"I call it an honor, indeed. This is to notify me that I have been elected a member of the Unsophisticated Innocent club and that I am expected to appear there this evening and make a few remarks and pay the first quarter's dues."

"The what kind of club?"

"The Unsophisticated Innocents."

"Some one is playing a joke on you. No club of any standing ever took such a name as that."

"My dear woman, no one ever attempts to joke with me," replied Mr. Bowser as he folded his arms across his breast and thought of Napoleon crossing the Alps. "The U. I. club, as I happen to know, is composed of artists, poets, authors and statesmen, and the honor of belonging to it is something to be coveted. My name went in a full year ago, and they have just got around to elect me. I would rather be a member of the U. I. club than be mayor of the city or any other officer of importance."

Mrs. Bowser said no more until dinner was over, while Mr. Bowser's dignity and pomposity seemed to grow with every minute. Before the meal was concluded it was plain that he looked upon her as very small potatoes.

"And so you mean to go to this Unsophisticated thing this evening?" she queried as they passed upstairs.

"Please give the club its title or do not mention it at all," he sternly replied.

"But you are going?"

"Of course I'm going. You might as well ask if I would take the office of president of the United States if elected. Be kind enough to lay out my dress suit."

"And you—you are sure about it?"

"Sure about what?"

"That this is a nice club and that this letter is not a joke. That title makes me fear that—that"—

"Madam, are you getting daft all at once? You have but to ask the first man you meet to learn that the Unsophisticated Innocents are men of the highest standing. Joke with me! Joke with Mr. Bowser! Do I look like a man to take liberties with? You seem to have queer ideas about things."

No more was said, and half an hour later Mr. Bowser came downstairs in his dress suit and prepared to go out.

"Do you expect to be called on for a few remarks?" she asked as he was drawing on his gloves.

"Certainly. I shall make an address from twenty minutes to half an hour in length. They may not be satisfied with one, but want two or three of them."

"And are you prepared at such short notice?"

"I am always prepared to make an address, deliver a lecture or get off a speech. You seem to forget who I am. Don't sit up for me. It may be daylight before I return. What the devil is that old wall eyed cat looking at me in that way for?"

The cat had been taking a nap under the lounge and had come out to see Mr. Bowser in his dress suit. The look complained of was one of comic horror, but there was no club handy, and she escaped punishment. When Mr. Bowser had departed the feline turned to Mrs. Bowser, and, though no words were uttered, she was understood to say:

"Now, what we want to do is to get ready for high old jinks. When the Unsophisticated Innocent comes home, you'll hear things creak!"

Mrs. Bowser did not go to bed. At midnight, as she sat reading her book, she heard a great shuffling and suppressed laughter on the doorstep, and as she opened the door three men ran away and Mr. Bowser lurched in. She assisted him along to the sitting room and into a chair, and under the gaslight she saw that he had been weeping. That was not all. His hat and gloves and cane were gone. He had been rolled in the dust, and one coat tail was missing. His trousers were torn and the buttons ripped off his vest, and no man could have looked more dilapidated.

"Well?" she queried after giving him a long looking over.

"It was just as you said," he replied as the tears started afresh.

"You mean that the Unsophisticated Innocents were a lot of jokers?"

"Yesh. I was in a room over a shaloon, and they—they joked with me. Mrs. Bowsher, I was never sho insulted in my life. I would have given a thousand dollars to get home, but they wouldn't let me. When I wanted to go, they rolled me on the floor. Think of it, Mrs. Bowsher, rolling me, your loving husband. Mr. Bowsher, on the floor!"

"Didn't I tell you it was all a fake?"

"Yesh, you did, but I didn't believe you. I thought you didn't know nothing. Oh, it was awful, Mrs. Bowsher—perfectly awful. They asked me to get up and shpeak, and when I rose they pelted me wiz onions and taters and yelled me down. Think of their hitting me on my bald head wiz a tater!"

A wave of emotion swept over him at the recollection, and he sobbed aloud.

SHE SAW HE HAD BEEN WEEPING.

Mrs. Bowser patted him on the head, and the cat came and rubbed against his leg, but it was five minutes before he could go on.

"They wouldn't listen to my address, but howled me down and shouted for beer. There was 'bout fifty fellers, and they made me buy 'bout two kegs of beer. When I said I wouldn't buy any they rolled me on the floor and pulled my coat tail off. Think of that, Mrs. Bowsher."

"Yes, I'm thinking."

"Think of a great big loafer grabbing hold of me and swinging me around and tearing my coat tail off! Don't you think I can have him sent to prison for that? And they didn't stop there. They tore all the buttons off my vest and rode me around the room on a bench. How dare they do such things to Mr. Bowsher—how dare they?"

"Well, you are not fatally injured, are you?" she asked after a silence, during which the tears chased each other down his cheeks.

"I guess not. I've got about forty bumps and bruises, but I guess I will live through it. But what about my feelings, Mrs. Bowsher—what about my feelings? I shall never get over it. They make me buy two kegs of beer. They roll me over the floor. They tear off one of my coat tails. Then they shing a song 'bout Bowsher and Towsher and Wowsher, and everybody laughs and yells, Mrs. Bowsher"—

"But what did you drink?" she interrupted.

"Nozzing 't all. I got mad and wouldn't drink, and then they held me down on the floor and poured beer down my neck—poured almost a keg of beer down my neck!"

"And have you had enough of the Unsophisticated Innocents?"

"I have, Mrs. Bowsher—I have. From this time forward whatever you tell me to do I shall do. You know best about all things. You—you are a wise womans, and I'm—I'm a fool. Mrs. Bow-ow-sher, I never in all my life loved you ash I do—do"—

He rose up with the intention of adding an embrace to his words, but lurched aside and sat down on the floor with a great jar, and, leaning his back against the wall, he was soon sound asleep. Mrs. Bowser left him there and went to bed. At what hour he followed her she did not know, but she certainly expected to find him in a humble and contrite mood when she awoke. A surprise awaited her. As he got out of bed at the usual hour he said:

"It seems a mighty funny thing that I can't go out to a club of an evening without this house being all upset. Here we are, half an hour late this morning!"

"I believe you did join the Unsophisticated Innocents last night," she replied.

"Of course I did, and I never had such honor and deference paid me before. I was it with the biggest kind of an I, and I suppose you will be jealous about it!" M. QUAD.

Simple Bowser Knocked Out

His New Mode of Living Is Too Much For Him, and He Gives It Up.

TIRES OF OLD CLOTHES

Taken For a Tramp and Half Starved, He Capitulates---Orders and Eats a Banquet.

[Copyright, 1905, by T. C. McClure.]

DURING the second night of Mr. Bowser's "simple life" he had dreams. He dreamed of codfish, cornmeal, cold potatoes and raw turnips. He dreamed of old clothes, going barefoot and sleeping on straw beds. He dreamed that he was trying to get into a first class restaurant to order juicy beefsteak, creamed potatoes, asparagus with butter gravy and all else good, to be followed by a bottle of champagne, but that the Rev. Charles Wagner stood in his path with a sled stake in his hand and warned him to turn back and be satisfied with burdock leaves.

Four different times during the night his groans and yells aroused Mrs. Bowser, and when the hour for getting up arrived he looked like a man who had been lost in a huckleberry swamp for a week. She felt sorry for him, and yet she said:

"You are ten minutes late this morning, but the cook will have your fried bread and codfish all ready.

Mr. Bowser glared at her and was on the point of giving expression to his feelings when he remembered that he was a guileless Uncle Rube. He had to sit down to the feast prepared for him, and he had to seem to enjoy it, but there was rage in his heart. A dainty breakfast had been prepared for Mrs. Bowser, and when the odor was wafted to his nostrils he felt amazed that he didn't arm himself with an ax or crowbar and break loose.

"IF YOU GIVE ME ANY OF YOUR LIP I'LL STAND YOU ON YOUR HEAD."

"I thought you were going to do without collar and necktie today?" queried Mrs. Bowser as he finished his meal and was getting ready to go.

"Who said I was going to?" he demanded in something like his old bossy tones.

"I—I thought a stocking around the neck would be more in keeping with your clothes, but of course it's for you to say. I'll have cook boil you a yellow turnip and make some catnip tea for your dinner tonight. Have you a headache this morning?"

"Of course not. I never felt better in my life."

"I am glad to hear that. I didn't know but that a simple life might be a trial to you, but it seems to be just what you needed. Shall you sleep on the floor tonight? Beds are simply a useless piece of extravagance."

"You needn't worry about where I shall sleep," he growled in reply as he struggled with his overcoat.

"I'll have a tallow candle tonight, and we'll pop corn and play checkers, the same as the farmers. I think if you keep the thing up for a month I shall become a convert."

"A—a month!" gasped Mr. Bowser as he felt the wolf of hunger gnawing at his vitals.

"Well, even two weeks. Shan't I bring you a glass of cold water to drink before you go? And why don't you take along a crust of bread and a piece of suet for your lunch?"

Had the cat been around Mr. Bowser would have shed her blood in gleeful ferocity, but as she wasn't and as he was determined that Mrs. Bowser shouldn't get the best of him while life remained he went his way without a word. It so happened that at the gate he met the policeman who had thrown him into a snowdrift for a tramp the day before, and the officer looked him over and demanded:

"Now, then, have you been begging at that house?"

"—I live there, I'd have you know."

"Don't lie to me, old fake! I have my eye on you, and if I catch you tripping you'll go to the cooler. Hustle along with you."

It was a hard blow to Mr. Bowser's "simplicity." He fumed and raged for the next two blocks, and then something happened that brought about the beginning of the end. The keeper of a restaurant, who was standing at his door, beckoned to him and said:

"Here, old man, if you'll clean off the rest of this snow I'll give you a bite of breakfast."

"You go to Jericho!" was the prompt and vigorous answer.

"What! What's that! Look a-here, you old Weary Willie, if you give me any of your lip I'll stand you on your head! Who do you think I am?"

"And who do you think I am?" hissed Mr. Bowser as he thrust his chin forward and prepared for battle.

There would have been a scrap but for a small boy who happened to be passing and recognized Mr. Bowser.

"Say," he called to the restaurateur, "that feller hain't no tramp! He don't have to shovel snow to git a meal!"

"Then who in blazes is he?"

"He's old Bowser, who lives up on First place. He's wearin' them duds because he's got a new fad."

Mr. Bowser left the house at 8:30. At 9:15 Mrs. Bowser received a telegram reading:

"Get a messenger and send my business suit of clothes to the office."

She had hardly dispatched the garments when she received a second telegram, reading:

"Have fried chicken, corn fritters and sweet potatoes for dinner tonight."

Half an hour later came another, reading:

"Have oyster soup. Have boiled onions. Have asparagus. Have rice pudding."

Then Mr. Bowser rested for an hour and sent the following:

"Have dinner half an hour ahead of the usual time. Have two fried chickens. Have ice cream and raisins and nuts for dessert. Spare no expense whatever."

There was one more telegram. It came at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and it read:

"May bring home two friends with me to dinner. Have three fried chickens. Have everything you can think of. Have a regular banquet, and if the cook does any kicking raise her wages."

Mr. Bowser appeared half an hour ahead of his usual time. He not only had on the business suit she had sent over to him, but he had bought himself a flaming red necktie and a rhinestone pin and had his shoes shined as never for a year before.

"Well, dear, what is it?" queried Mrs. Bowser as he entered the hall.

"What is what?"

"Why have you decided not to pursue the 'simple life' any further?"

"I fail to catch your meaning."

"You read the 'Simple Life,' by the Rev. Charles Wagner, and you started out to follow it. Are you going to drop it?"

"We will have a little talk after dinner, woman," he replied as he made for the dining room, and then Mrs. Bowser knew what the end would be.

A banquet had been prepared, and though Mr. Bowser hadn't brought two friends with him he devoured their share. A shipwrecked mariner afloat for two weeks couldn't have been more ravenous. When he was at last through eating and drinking he led the way upstairs and turned on her to say:

"Woman, this is the dead line!"

"Why, what do you mean?"

"I mean that you have crowded me to the wall for the last time. I will see you on board the train for your mother's at 10 o'clock in the morning."

"But for why? What have I done? You started out to live a 'simple life,' and"—

"And our respective lawyers can arrange about the alimony. Should any one call to see me this evening you may tell him that I am busy and cannot be disturbed."

And when he had retired to the library the cook came upstairs and asked:

"Was it a-readin' of 'The Simple Life' that made him carry on so, mum?"

"I think it was, Bridget."

"Then I wants to quit me job at once. He may get hould of 'The Ferocious Life' and read it before he goes to bed, and who's to say he won't get up and eat pounded glass and drink vinegar and chop us all to pieces wid the ax! A-beggin' of yer pardon ten times over, mum, but ye've got a strange man on yer hands—a very strange man."

M. QUAD.

Certainly.

"I went to consult my doctor the other morning," said Millsap, "and he gave me a bit of advice and charged me $10 for it. I didn't occupy his time more than five minutes. It's all right for a doctor to exact a reasonable fee, but I don't think he ought to charge plumbers' rates for his time."

"What was the advice he gave you, may I ask?" said the professor.

"He told me I must give up my pipe."

"Your pipe? Then he had a right to charge you plumbers' rates."—Chicago Tribune.

The Curing of William Hicks.

BILL HICKS had asthma—shook the floors
With each recurring paroxysm;
The doctors made him live outdoors,
And that gave him the rheumatism.

The doctors cured his rheumatiz;
Of that there never was a question.
Strong acids stopped those pains of his,
But left him ill of indigestion.

Dyspepsia fled before a course
Of eating grain. It would delight us
To cheer this plan till we were hoarse—
But Hicks then had appendicitis.

He rallied from the surgeon's knife
And lay six weeks without a quiver;
The operation saved his life—
The loafing, though, knocked out his liver.

To cure his liver troubles he Tried muscle stunts—you know how they go.
From liver ails he then was free,
But all the strains gave him lumbago.

Lumbago is a painful thing;
A masseuse with a visage solemn
Rubbed the lumbago out by spring;
But twisted poor Bill's spinal column.

To rid his backbone of the twist
They used some braces. They were careless;
The padding for his head they missed;
This made him straight and left him hairless.

Drugs were prescribed to grow his hair.
They acted just as represented;
They put his scalp in good repair,
But soaked in and left Hicks demented.

Then to a sanitarium
They took Bill. He was wisely treated;
His brain with health began to hum—
Then asthma; ward was poorly heated.

"More open air," the doctors said.
Bill Hicks cried: "No, you shall not lure me.
I'll stay in peace upon my bed
And shoot the man that tries to cure me!"

'Tis Said.

"Watch out," warned the pickpocket as he palmed the gentleman's time-

The best product is that of well paid, contented workmen under congenial conditions and in cheerful surroundings.

Clothcraft Clothes are made in a model plant. There is light, air and every modern improvement.

There are separate dining rooms for men and women and hot tea and coffee are served each meal.

The toilet and dressing rooms are bright, attractive and amply large.

No philanthropy about it—just business. The Clothcrafters want the best work in the world in Clothcraft Clothes and that means that the best workers must make them. They want their people to be comfortable and in good health for their mutual good.

Every Clothcraft garment is made in the Clothcraft Plant. Nothing is "farmed out." Clothcraft quality cannot be produced by the sweat-shop method.

Clothcraft has a dozen distinct features not found in any other ready-for-service clothing and the big feature is that all the cloth used is wool, all wool and nothing but wool. And this is true of no other line on earth.

Oakland, March 7th, 1905.

THREE YEARS HENCE.

Certain zealous supporters of the Democratic cause have been diligent of late in showing, to their own satisfaction, that the indications of the present day all point toward the renomination of President Roosevelt in 1908, Mr. Roosevelt's own denial of the possibility of such a thing has been waived by these enthusiasts, and they are as hard at work as though there were no chance whatever for the developments of the next three years to have a bearing upon the case. A review of the political history of the United States would reveal the most conclusive evidence against the position they have taken, but they placidly shut their eyes to these exhibits and turn into grist everything that comes to their mill.

In this connection it is not going too far perhaps, to hazard the guess that if the Republican slate for 1908 is now being framed the name of William H. Taft is being writ large upon it. One might safely go farther and suggest that no less a person than the President himself is a party to this. Mr. Roosevelt is now in the wilds of Colorado and will be there for some weeks to come, as he has been away from his official duties for more than a week past. Mr. Hay, his secretary of state and in many ways the master of the administration, is in search of health in the Mediterranean country. Mr. Fairbanks, the Vice President of the United States, is not in a position to assume any authority under these unusual circumstances, but no crisis has arisen because of all this.

Mr. Taft is at once secretary of War, secretary of state and acting President of the Union. He has entered into this triple capacity at the President's own demand, just as he got under way the splendid work America is now doing in the Philippines and just as he straightened out so expediously and and effectivey the tangle that recently arose in Panama. He is "sitting on the lid" and he is meeting his responsibilities in mighty good shape. He may, in other words, be said to be in training for meeting these responsibilities by formal assignment. No one should be surprised, unless contingencies arise in the meantime, to see him the administration candidate three years hence.—Pittsburg Times.

Church News.

Revival services closed Monday night, April 17, at the M. E. church at Mt. Lake Park after continuing over four weeks including a week of cottage prayer meetings. The meetings were conducted by the pastor, P. W. Metheny, assisted by Revs. R. B. Ward, J. B. Workman and L. A. Rudisill. During the meetings the whole membership was revived and strengthened. There were ten conversions, sixteen joined on probation, seven by letter and one was received into full connection. The meeting as a whole was very encouraging and has been pronounced by several as the best meeting held at Mt. Lake Park for years.

Rev. R. A. Smith, who held a two weeks' revival at Deer Park in February has this to say about that place in the Maryland Baptist of April 15: "At Deer Park, in Garrett, on February 26, a Baptist church was organized with 23 members. Three deacons, a church clerk and a treasurer were elected and a pastor called. The same afternoon two souls were born into the Redeemer's Kingdom. On last Sunday as we are informed by the pastor, ten more were added, making 33. It is understood that eleven more have made up their minds and are coming in shortly. The church decided to enroll as charter members all who should come in within 30 days. So it is to be hoped these latter will come in before the time expires and the church go down with 44 constituent members. There is no doubt but we have the best church in Deer Park today. Now this is business! Born full grown. Well perhaps that is saying too much for we hope and expected to see it grow very rapidly. But it is not too much to say born a little giant, especially in view the fact that these forty-four people are as good as the best. These happy conditions are part of the results of the wise, earnest labors of Rev. W. H. Faust, who went to this field last June." M.

Gilbert Franklin Thrasher.

Gilbert Franklin Thrasher died in a hospital at Pittsburg, of typhoid fever on April 18, 1905, aged 20 years, 10 months and 20 days. He was in the employ of the Pittsburg Railways Co. as conductor of a street car. He had been ill for about four weeks. His friends have been assured that he had the best of attention and care while in the hospital. He was a fine young man, of excellent moral character and loved and respected by all who knew him. His death is made doubly sad to his relatives and friends because of the fact that his brother Lorenzo J. Thrasher died just one year before and his sister Mrs. Alice R. Nugent died Nov. 22, 1903. Thus three of the family died within 17 months.

Gilbert was the son of John E. Thrasher, of Blaine, W. Va. The funeral was preached in the M. E. church at Deer Park by the pastor, Rev. P. W. Metheny, assisted by Rev. Wm. H. Faust. Interment in Deer Park cemetery.

Those present from a distance were his father and sister Hallie Thrasher, of Blaine, W. Va., his only surviving brother, Joseph E. Thrasher, of Martinsburg W. Va; Howard Thrasher of College Park, Md.; Mrs. Kimmell, Mrs. Bartley and daughter Miss Laura, of Bavard W. Va.; his bother-in-law Lacy Nugent, of Friendsville, Md.; and Mrs. Mary Gilpin, of Loch Lynn Heights, Md., with whom Gilbert had made his home most of his life. There were many friends and acquaintances present from Mt. Lake Park. His four uncles of Deer Park, Lorenzo D., William, Frank and Benjamin Thrasher and their families were at the funeral. Besides those of special mention, there was a great host of friends from far and near who came to pay respect to the one whom they had learned to love.

Easter Service at the Park.

The Easter exercises at the M. E. church at Mt. Lake Park Sunday evening, April 23, were rendered very successfully indeed. Dr. J. W. Laughlin, the efficient superintendent, is to be congratulated in being able to secure the services of Mrs. Squires and those who assisted in training the children. The whole program moved off well, without a break from beginning to end. The children had their parts well in mind and rendered them beautifully, not one forgot or hesitated. There are some who deserve special mention. The duet by Misses Abbie and Edna Chance was excellent and these young ladies show good talent as vocalists. Also the solo by Miss Louise Sperry was highly appreciated as was the one she rendered a few weeks ago. The solo by little Louise Chance was one of the very best we ever heard from one so young, only about five or six years old. The recitation by little Gladys Squares also was fine to be from one so small. The Easter Missionary offering amounted to $11.18.

The church was crowded and attention excellent. M.

Pender.

Thought transferrence has become an accepted fact, and Pender with the assistance of Mlle Reva gives one of the most astounding illustrations of this power ever exhibited by two people. Indeed one becomes positively dumfounded at the severe tests the performers submit to.

Pender's performance is not that of the fake hypnotist and the ordinary second sight reading which as all the world knows is done by a mere code of language, Pender is absolutely silent in his work, thus setting aside all argument of code or sign work.

This act must be seen to be appreciated. Reva is indeed a twentieth century marvel and has baffled the minds of the most learned men of the day. The Pender Company will appear at Opera House May 3rd and 4th.

Letter to J. P. Helbig.

Oakland, Md.

Dear Sir: Here's something every painter and builder ought to know.

Mr. J. J. Hall, Sheffield, Pa, painted two houses, 5 years ago, lead-and-oil; took 40 gallons. Last year he painted Devoe; bought 40 gallons; had 10 left.

He is one of thousands. The knowledge is getting about pretty generally, that Devoe goes further than anything else.

Have you found it out in your own experience?

How much further?

Suppose a job amounts to 10,000 square feet; how much less Devoe could you buy?

Is it as easy to paint? Does it cost any more or less to put-on by the gallon than anything else? how much?

If it costs more to put-on Devoe by the gallon, it costs less by the foot, you know; for the gallon does more feet. How much less, do you find it, for wages?

Lasts, say, twice as long; that is the owner's gain; but perhaps you reckon it yours; some do. The time, when that comes-in, is when he gives-out the next job.

Who gets it?

Yours truly
F. W. DEVOE & Co.

RURAL ROUTE NO. 2

Orders Have Been Issued By the Department Establishing Second Route.

Monday morning Postmaster John M. Jarboe received orders from the Postoffice Department at Washington establishing rural route No. 2 which will run from Oakland south to the Lewis Bush farm over in Preston county, West Va., passing the Gortner, Sunnyside and Hauser postoffices, thence east on the Northwestern Pike to the Bowman farm, through the Beckman settlement and return to Oakland, a distance of about twenty-eight miles, the service to be daily except Sunday.

The establishment of this route will probably mean the discontinuing of the Sunnyside, Gortner and Hauser postoffices. Patrons of these offices will be served by the rural carrier. The carrier has not yet been appointed by the Department nor can he be until after an examination has been held and the appointee fill the required bond.

The "Reds" Will Be Entertained.

In the contest for new members of the Epworth League inaugurated along in the winter when the original members were divided into classes named the "Whites" and the "Reds," the latter won and in accordance with the rules of the contest the "Whites" will entertain the successful class on Friday night of next week at the residence of Dr. and Mrs. R. B. Ward, when a musical program will be rendered and refreshments served.

Throat Coughs

A tickling in the throat; hoarseness at times; a deep breath irritates it;—these are features of a throat cough. They're very deceptive and a cough mixture won't cure them. You want something that will heal the inflamed membranes, enrich the blood and tone up the system ∴ ∴ ∴ ∴ is just such a remedy. It has wonderful healing and nourishing power. Removes the cause of the cough and the whole system is given new strength and vigor ∴ ∴

PAINT TALK

By J. M. Davis & Sons

LABOR

The cost of Labor for putting on a Paint that is adulterated is the same as putting on a Pure Paint that lasts twice as long. Devoe Lead and Zinc is pure and lasts twice as long as adulterated paint.

CHEAP

A paint that contains adulteration costs less by the gallon but takes more gallons than Devoe Lead and Zinc. Devoe is cheap because it goes further.

Call at our store and get a sample of Devoe Lead and Zinc and let us tell you all about it and show you a great many houses that have been painted with it.

If a dealer can't show you a state chemist's certificate for the paint he is selling, then it is sure to be adulterated.

DON'T

Don't buy any paint whose maker is afraid to put his formula on the label. F. W. Devoe & Co. put the formula of Devoe Lead and Zinc on the label.

DON'T

Don't buy any Paint that is not guaranteed pure and certified to by the state chemist. Call at our store and read the state chemist's certificate on Devoe Lead and Zinc

MILK AND WATER

One gallon of water and one gallon of milk don't make two gallons of milk. Neither does one gallon of paint and one gallon of adulteration make two gallons of paint. Devoe Lead and Zinc is all paint guaranteed strictly pure.

DON'T

Don't buy Paint by the gallon, but by the house. The price of a gallon of Paint don't always tell you how much the Paint for a house will cost. Devoe Lead and Zinc costs less per house than adulterated Paint.

PRICES

White Lead and White Zinc costs about seven cents per pound—Clay and Whiting costs one-half cent per pound. Why buy Whiting and Clay for Paint. Devoe Lead and Zinc contains no Whiting or Clay.

HONESTY

Lead and Oil is honest Paint. But Lead is too soft—chalks off. Zinc is hard and tough, and when ground in with the lead, prevents chalking. But they must be ground fine to combine. Devoe Lead and Zinc is famous for fineness.

You can always buy Paint for less than Devoe Lead and Zinc. Don't save your money.

QUANTITY

300 square feet of surface will take one gallon Devoe Lead and Zinc for TWO coats. Figure the size of your house and see how much the Paint costs.

Mr. J. M. Burns, of Morgantown, passed through Oakland Tuesday evening with the Monongalia county delegation to the Keyser convention which met yesterday morning.

Postmaster L. A. Rudisill, of Mountain Lake Park, was a hurry-up visitor to Oakland yesterday morning. His busy season at the Park will begin shortly.

Peter L. Broderick has purchased from Browning Bros. their refrigerator and other fixtures and will open a meat store in the Hamill building opposite the old postoffice on Saturday of this week.

Mr. G. A. Bolden, of Grafton, was in Oakland Sunday afternoon for a few hours.

Clifton White, who spent the winter on the Pacific coast, returned to Oakland last Tuesday morning and will remain here during the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. John Johns, of the Park, who spent last winter with their son in Brooklyn and returned to Mt. Lake one day last week, were visitors to Oakland Tuesday.

Mr. James A. Enlow, representing the J. B. Williams Granite Company, Frostburg, was in Oakland Tuesday looking after some business matters for his firm.

FOR SALE.—Dwelling house and one acre land, east end town: good well and all necessary outbuildings. Terms reasonable. Apply to E. A. Shaffer, telegraph office, Oakland. 8 tf

Rev. E. Manges, pastor of the Oakland Lutheran congregation, will preach next Sunday as follows: Red House 10.30 a. m.; Texas, 2.30 p. m., and Eglon at 7.30 o'clock p. m. At each of these places an election will be held for pastor, which will be conducted by Rev. Manges.

County Commissioner Jacob Stump, of Bloomington, came up to Oakland Tuesday to superintend the clearing off of the lots recently purchased by the county for the site for the new jail and sheriff's residence. The ground is now practically cleared and in readiness for the contractor to begin work.

Ex-Sheriff Lloyd Shaffer, of near Aurora, was in Oakland Tuesday and yesterday, going from Oakland yesterday morning to Keyser where he attended the Republican Congressional convention as a delegate favorable to the nomination of Mr. James S. Lakin.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company is having new rails laid on the south track from the Shaffer place, a mile west of Oakland, to the Second street crossing in town. A large force of Italian workmen have beed engaged in the work for a number of days. New ties are also being place where necessary and the track put in prime condition.

Postmaster Jarboe is having the old postoffice building fitted up with shelves and counters and a new front built into it for the occupancy of Gene Baumgartner, who will take posession in a short time. Mr. Baumgartner will retain possession of the room he is now located in and with the additional floor space acquired he will greatly increase his stock of groceries, etc.

School Commissioner George E. Bishoff, of near Hoyes, was in Oakland Monday and Tuesday, having accompanied his son to this point who returned to school at Frostburg Monday afternoon, and his son-in-law, Mr. Miller, of Keyser's Ridge, who went to a point near Baltimore yesterday morning where he will take charge of the farm of Director of the State Institutes Amoss.

The papers tell of a young woman who followed a convict to the penitentiary and will work in Moundsville until his sentence has expired. This is hearlded as a most praiseworthy action on her part but the truth of the matter is that if the young man in question had been worthy of her he would not have committed a crime which makes it necessary to put him in the penitentiary.

The influence of newspaper advertising is wonderful. It makes small stores great. It turns the tide of business toward the advertising store as nothing else will. It places the name of the store so strongly in the minds of the people that they cannot think of dry goods, clothing, shoes or drugs without the name of the advertised store coming into their minds simultaneously. By a good, persistent advertising campaign any business house can push its way to the front. The very best medium to use in your community is your local news paper, as it goes to the minds of the people when their minds are easily impressed.—The Ad Writer.

A. D. NAYLOR & CO., will make a special low price on grain drills for one week.

Judge Thomas H. Cuppet, of near McHenry, was in Oakland last Saturday afternoon, when he made this office a brief visit. Mr. Cuppett, in recent years has been improving and enlarging his flock of sheep until now he has quite a large number of excellent animals. Recently he refused an offer of $13 per head for his ewes perferring to keep them until fall when the lambs alone are expected to bring $6 each on the open market. This price is at variance with that of a few years ago when sheep could be purchased at $1 to 2 each.

Rev. W. H. Osmond, of Baltimore, recently rector of St. Matthew's Parish of the Episcopal church in this county, is in Oakland visiting his many warm friends. After leaving Oakland Mr. Osmond became rector or a Connecticut parish and recently removed from New England to Baltimore where he is pastor of one of the larger churches of his faith in that city. Mr. Osmond has many friends in Oakland of all denominations and he was warmly greeted by them. He will conduct services in the church on Friday evening at 7.30 o'clock to which all are invited.

Mortgagee's Sale OF VALUABLE Real Estate.

Under and by virtue of a power of sale contained in a mortgage from Henry Brown and Rebecca Brown, his wife, to Gilmor S. Hamill, bearing date the 22nd day of September, 1892, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 21, follos 72 etc., one of the Mortgage Records of Garrett County, Maryland, by the said Gilmor S. Hamill assigned to Rebecca Brown, and by the said Rebecca Brown assigned to me for the purpose of foreclosure, default having been made under said mortgage, I will offer at public auction and sell to the highest bidder on the 29th Day of April, 1905,

at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., in front of the OPERA HOUSE, in the Town of Oakland, Maryland, all those two tracts or parcels of land which are called and known by the name of containing in the aggregate thirty-four and one-eighth acres of land, more or less; said tracts of land being situated in Garrett County, Maryland, about three-fourths of a mile Northeast of Friendsville, in said County, and being the same parcels of land that were conveyed to the late Henry Brown by deed from William H. Dawson, Trustee, dated the 6th day of September, 1892 and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 20, follos 119, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett County, Maryland, said parcels of land commonly known as the "Old Furnace Ground."

The LILIES OF PEACE

An Easter Story

By HOWARD FIELDING

Copyright, 1904, by Charles W. Hooke

UPON the steps of the church I paused to admire a remarkably brilliant and beautiful sunset. The west was ablaze with colors, and suddenly the full orb of the sun burst forth between cloud and hilltop with a blinding glare. Turning from that dazzling spectacle, I entered the dim vestibule, and my overstrained eyes filled this nook of shadows with imaginary rainbows. In the midst of the glittering illusion I beheld a very lovely reality—a young woman who came hastily out of the church and passed me by without a glance. I did not feel slighted, however, because she was evidently preoccupied. She was pale as a lily, yet replete with vital energy. Earth and heaven met in the expression of her face, as though she had attained a spiritual exaltation while bedecking the church for tomorrow's Easter services, yet had not for an instant lost her joy in mortal living—in youth and health and beauty.

She passed me with a light step, and I went on into the church. The work of decorating the sacred edifice was done, and the young people of the congregation who had had it in charge were all gone.

The Rev. Arthur Sherwood stood before the pulpit, presenting to my gaze as I came near to him the same view of the back of his head that grew so familiar to me in the old days when he was No. 5 and I was No. 4 in the varsity boat. Not even clerical dignity could smooth his unruly yellow hair nor ease of ample means destroy the suggestion of rugged, manly strength in those broad shoulders. I stood beside him before he was aware of my presence.

"Upon my word," said I, "those lilies are worth looking at! I never have seen any others quite equal to them."

Nothing startles Sherwood. He had not seen me in five years and was not expecting me to arrive that day, but he did not jump at the sound of my voice so close to his ear.

"You are right," said he, giving me his hand. "There are no other lilies like them; there are none so beautiful; there are none in all this world so fit to help me preach my Easter sermon."

"All flowers die and live again," said I.

"But not as these lilies died," he rejoined. "The grave from which they were summoned forth was exceptionally unpromising, I assure you. By the way, did you meet some one as you came in?"

"I met a stunning pretty girl," said I.

"Miss Enid Lawrence," said he. "These are her lilies—a new variety. She trained them in the way of beauty and brought them to the perfection which you now behold. There are not very many of them yet, which accounts for the small number on my pulpit. Next year there'll be a million of them."

"YOU ARE RIGHT," SAID HE.

Naturally I inquired about Miss Lawrence, and Sherwood was very ready to oblige me.

"She and her father are florists," said he, "and they love their work. I'll take you to see their home tomorrow. It's the most picturesque spot in this city. There used to be a big factory building that spoiled the effect, but that's all cleared away, along with a most unpleasant quarrel"—

He hesitated a moment.

"There's quite a story in that matter," he resumed. "Have I the time to tell it? It's the story of those lilies."

"Time and place serve," said I.

"It begins," he responded, smiling, "with a cantankerous old curmudgeon named Barton Hosmer, who owned a piece of land adjoining the Lawrence place. It used to be on the outskirts, but the city has grown far beyond it now. Fortunately the right sort of people got hold of the land thereabout, and some very pretty houses have been put up. Upon the whole, Mr. Lawrence was well satisfied with his neighbors except for Hosmer, whose land adjoins his upon the north.

"There were rumors that this unpleasant individual, who was not on good terms with some of the property owners in that neighborhood, had threatened to erect a factory on his ground, and the dread of it preyed on Mr. Lawrence's mind like one of those bad dreams which shadow the succeeding day. Mr. Hosmer relieved the strain at last by confiding to Mr. Lawrence that he intended to build a beautiful home. The only obstacle was that the architect's plans called for a little more land. Partly from good will and partly in fear that his neighbor would change his mind, Mr. Lawrence sold Mr. Hosmer a strip ten feet wide running directly behind the big greenhouse. It was understood that this was to be used as a driveway.

"Shortly after this purchase was completed Hosmer began the erection of a big factory on his land. Whether he had intended from the first to do this or had taken up the project as a result of renewed quarrels with his neighbors I cannot say with certainty. The general opinion is that he deliberately tricked Mr. Lawrence into the sale of that strip of ground. However this may be, the factory was built.

"There were protests and complaints beyond counting, beginning before the foundations were laid, but Hosmer seemed to have the law on his side. The only legal proceeding which seemed to have any validity was Mr. Lawrence's action to set aside the sale of his ten foot strip. The courts took a real interest in this, and the granting and dissolving of injunctions against Hosmer became a favorite pastime of judges hereabout. The building operations were made more expensive, and Mr. Lawrence's pocketbook grew leaner day by day. But only the lawyers gained anything by this litigation.

"The florist's pretty daughter bore these ills with angelic patience, as I am credibly informed. She even succeeded in convincing herself that the shelter of the factory wall was advantageous to the greenhouse, a very amiable delusion, as you'll admit.

"The Lawrences were members of my church, and I naturally took an interest in their troubles. Indeed, I endeavored to exercise moral suasion upon Mr. Hosmer in their behalf, and since my interview with him I have never been able to give Mr. Lawrence spiritual advice with a perfectly clear conscience, for if Mr. Hosmer had been ten years younger I think I might have forgotten the peaceful obligations of my calling. I tell you privately that that man's disposition positively cries out for a thrashing.

"This controversy extended over a period of five or six years, and in the midst of it, my friend, those lilies which you have admired were coming to the fullness of their beauty. There's a miracle for you! They should have turned to weeds in the midst of so much bitterness, but Enid's care sweetened the hearts of them, and ever they grew more close to her ideal.

"Now, there is, of course, a commercial aspect of this matter. A special variety of flower may be worth a good bit of money, and, though this has been a labor of love with Enid, she surely expected to repair her father's fortunes, which had suffered as a result of too much law. Her work had been kept secret and was conducted in a portion of the greenhouse to which the casual visitor was not invited. I consider it a great honor that I was admitted to see her 'lilies of peace,' as she called them, because of the effect which they produced upon her own spirit.

"It was a little more than a year ago that I was the recipient of this distinction, and I was exalted still more by the promise of one lily for my pulpit on Easter Sunday. It would have been the first, she told me, that had ever passed beyond her own care.

"It was about this time that Mr. Lawrence saw some sort of victory in his endless litigations. It was barren of good, but it exalted his heart. I remember his enthusiasm as he told me about it. I had been passing the house and had found him standing by the gate. Enid came out while the excited old man was in the midst of his tale, and I was deeply touched by her grief at this renewal of the strife. She had had some hope of a peaceful ending of the long struggle through the intervention of a son of Hosmer's who had come home for a visit. This young man and Enid had been friends in childhood, and, though Frank Hosmer was in some respects a 'chip of the old block,' he had not denied himself the pleasure of a meeting with his pretty playmate of former days.

"All Hosmers were alike to James Lawrence, however, and when Enid on that evening mentioned her hope that Frank might influence his father she received a warm paternal reproof for her folly in supposing that any good could come out of the Hosmer family. I was listening with the lesser half of one ear and staring across at the tall end of the factory, that looked particularly ugly in the moonlight, when I was conscious that a mysterious something was clamoring for my attention. In reality I was wondering whether Enid's reliance upon Frank Hosmer was based upon any sentimental interest in him and whether it could be possible that she had summoned him by letter, and I was so deeply immersed in these considerations that in abandoning them I felt the sensation of struggling out of sleep. It was a somewhat startling awakening, too, because the mysterious thing which had been striving to rouse me was no less than the knowledge that Barton Hosmer's factory was afire. I had seen the red glare in the windows upon the third floor.

"Well, we gave the alarm, and there was instant confusion, of course. Mr. Lawrence became wildly excited and required his daughter's most earnest attention, while I fluttered aimlessly about helping Enid and bothering the firemen. I remember having an animated interview with the chief of the fire department, whom I besought to assure Mr. Lawrence that his property was in no danger.

"'Not a bit,' said the chief. 'We'll have this blaze under control in less than no time.'

"The next minute there was a dull boom of an explosion inside the burning building, and the entire end wall fell with incredible slowness and precision directly on top of the greenhouse. The lilies of peace were buried under a mountain of rubbish.

"If ever a girl had a right to faint and leave the cares of the world to her friends for a few minutes Enid certainly had, and she availed herself of the chance immediately. I turned just in time to catch her as she fell. I carried her into the house of a neighbor and intrusted her to the care of more experienced hands than mine.

"A certain fascination drew me to the side of that rubbish mountain, and there I encountered a distracted young man who proved to be Frank Hosmer. His distress was all on Miss Lawrence's account, and we bewailed her misfortune together. He knew of her long labors with the lilies, and he declared that he would reimburse her in any sum which she should name. There's no doubt that he was sincere; but of course Miss Lawrence wouldn't and, indeed, couldn't be reimbursed. Her lilies all lay dead under tons of bricks and beams.

"Miss Lawrence, whom I saw once more that evening, was quite hopeless, though she kept up a splendid courage and was already planning to begin her work over again.

"When I left her I sent a telegram to a florist in Rochester whom I had heard Miss Lawrence speak of as a great expert. Probably my idea arose in some way from my conversation with young Hosmer, though neither of us could remember whence the suggestion came. At any rate, it was in his mind as well as mine, and he telegraphed for an expert from New York.

"When my man arrived I went to see Frank Hosmer in order to arrange about the removal of the wreckage that covered the greenhouse, and we agreed to divide the expense of having it done in the speediest and most careful manner. He was willing to assume the entire pecuniary responsibility, but I insisted upon standing my share, not because I was generous, but because I was selfishly unwilling to resign the control of this work into the hands of a rival—a rival for the honor of retrieving Miss Lawrence's lilies from the grave.

"My expert said that there was not more than one chance in a thousand that anything so buried would ever live again, but Hosmer's expert said that there was only one chance in a million, so you see that I had a right to be a thousand times as hopeful as Hosmer.

"It was a very pretty struggle, and my man won. He found the battered remains of something which, with Enid's infinite care and patience, became the ancestor of those lilies which adorn my pulpit today. Yes, my friend, there lived in that poor wreck of a flower the very soul and essence of the lilies of peace, and there they stand shimmering in the last gleam of twilight to prove that what seems dead may live again. Come, I have held you too long. Let us go home."

"Wait a bit," said I. "Was Mr. Hosmer's expert unsuccessful?"

"He was."

"It was fate," said I. "May I offer congratulations?"

"Why, my dear fellow, how did you guess? It was only this afternoon"—

"Just before I came in?"

"Yes. We stood here where you and I stand now in the sight of the lilies, and I said heaven knows what, and she replied—er—well, the exact words are of small comparative importance. I know that I may accept your congratulations and that my heart is full of happiness and high resolves."

Raisins.

Raisins are the dried fruit of the grapevine and are produced chiefly in Spain, although vines are cultivated in many other countries—Italy, California, Australia, Greece. They are usually partially dried on the vines, the stalk being twisted or broken to prevent moisture from reaching them, and the drying is completed in a warm room. They are packed for exportation either in bunches, like the muscatel raisins from Malaga, or loose, as in the case of the Valencia raisins. Sultanas are a small, seedless variety of grape exported from Smyrna, and currants a still smaller variety exported from the islands of the Grecian archipelago.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE EDUCATION FOR SIMPLICITY.

THE simple life being above all else the product of a direction of mind, it is natural that education should have much to do with it. In general, but two methods of rearing children are practiced. The first is to bring them up for ourselves the second to bring them up for themselves.

In the first case the child is looked upon as a complement of the parents; he is part of their property, occupies a place among their possessions. Sometimes this place is the highest, especially when the parents value the life of the affections. Again, where material interests rule, the child holds second, third or even the last place. In any case he is a nobody. While he is young he gravitates round his parents, not only by obedience, which is right, but by the subordination of all his originality, all his being. As he grows older this subordination becomes a veritable confiscation, extending to his ideas, his feelings, everything. His minority becomes perpetual. Instead of slowly evolving into independence the man advances into slavery. He is what he is permitted to be, what his father's business, religious beliefs, political opinions or aesthetic tastes require him to be. He will think, speak, act and marry according to the understanding and limits of the paternal absolutism. This family tyranny may be exercised by people with no strength of character. It is only necessary for them to be convinced that good order requires the child to be the property of the parents. In default of mental force, they possess themselves of him by other means —by sighs, supplications or base seductions. If they cannot fetter him they snare his feet in traps. But that he should live in them, through them, for them, is the only thing admissible.

Education of this sort is not the practice of families only, but also of great social organizations whose chief educational function consists in putting a strong hand on every newcomer, in order to fit him, in the most iron-bound fashion, into existing forms. It is the attenuation, pulverization and assimilation of the individual in a social body, be it theocratic, communistic or simply bureaucratic and routinary. Looked at from without, a like system seems the ideal of simplicity in education. Its processes, in fact, are absolutely simplistic, and if a man were not somebody, if he were only a sample of the race, this would be the perfect education. As all wild beasts, all fish and insects of the same genus and species have the same markings, so we should all be identical, having the same tastes, the same language, the same beliefs, the same tendencies. But man is not simply a specimen of the race, and for that reason this sort of education is far from being simple in its results. Men so vary from one another that numberless methods have to be invented to suppress, stupefy and extinguish individual thought. And one never arrives at it then but in part, a fact which is continually deranging everything. At each moment, by some fissure, ...ble for men of good intentions, of however diverse social standing, to collaborate without any friction arising from the conventional distance that separates them.

If the spirit of caste causes the loss of respect, partisanship, of whatever sort, is quite as productive of it. In certain quarters children are brought up in such fashion that they respect but one country—their own; one system of government—that of their parents and masters; one religion—that which they have been taught. Does any one suppose that in this way men can be shaped who shall respect country, religion and law? Is this a proper respect—this respect which does not extend beyond what touches and belongs to ourselves? Strange blindness of cliques and coteries, which arrogate to themselves with so much ingenuous complacence the title of schools of respect, and which, outside themselves, respect nothing. In reality they teach, "Country, religion, law—we are all these!" Such teaching fosters fanaticism, and if fanaticism is not the sole antisocial ferment it is surely one of the worst and most energetic.

If simplicity of heart is an essential condition of respect, simplicity of life is its best school. Whatever be the state of your fortune, avoid everything which could make your children think themselves more or better than others. Though your wealth would permit you ...dress them richly, remember the evil ...u might do in exciting their vanity. Preserve them from the evil of believing that to be elegantly dressed suffices for distinction, and, above all, do not carelessly increase by their clothes and their habits of life the distance which already separates them from other children. Dress them simply. And if, on the contrary, it should be necessary for you to economize to give your children the pleasure of fine clothes, I would that I might dispose you to reserve your spirit of sacrifice for a better cause. You risk seeing it illy recompensed. You dissipate your money when it would much better ...vail to save it for serious needs, and you prepare for yourself, later on, a harvest of ingratitude. How dangerous it is to accustom your sons and daughters to a style of living beyond your means and theirs! In the first place, it is very bad for your purse. In the second place, it develops a contemptuous spirit in the very bosom of the family. If you dress your children like little lords and give them to understand that they are superior to you, is it astonishing if they end by disdaining you? You will have nourished at your table the declassed—a product which costs dear and is worthless.

Any fashion of instructing children whose most evident result is to lead them to despise their parents and the customs and activities among which they have grown up is a calamity. It is effective for nothing but to produce a legion of malcontents, with hearts totally estranged from their origin, their race, their natural interests—everything, in short, that makes the fundamental fabric of a man. Once detached from the vigorous stock which produced them, the wind of their restless ambition drives them over the earth like dead leaves that will in the end be heaped up to ferment and rot together.

Nature does not proceed by leaps and bounds, but by an evolution slow and certain. In preparing a career for our children let us imitate her. Let us not confound progress and advancement with those violent exercises called somersaults; let us not so bring up our children that they will come to despise work and the aspirations and simple spirit of their fathers; let us not expose them to the temptation of being ashamed of our poverty if they themselves come to fortune. A society is indeed diseased when the sons of peasants begin to feel disgust for the fields, when the sons of sailors desert the sea, when the daughters of workingmen, in the hope of being taken for heiresses, prefer to walk the streets alone rather than beside their honest parents. A society is healthy, on the contrary, when each of its members applies himself to doing very nearly what his parents have done before him, but doing it better, and, looking to future elevation, is content first to fulfill conscientiously more modest duties.

Education should make independent men. If you wish to train your children for liberty, bring them up simply and do not for a moment fear that in so doing you are putting obstacles in the way of their happiness. It will be quite the contrary. The more costly toys a child has, the more feasts and curious entertainments, the less is he amused.

In this there is a sure sign. Let us be temperate in our methods of entertaining youth, and especially let us not thoughtlessly create for them artificial needs. Food, dress, nursery, amusements—let all these be as natural and simple as possible. With the idea of making life pleasant for their children some parents bring them up in habits of gormandizing and idleness, accustom them to sensations not meant for their age, multiply their parties and entertainments. Sorry gifts these! In place of a free man you are making a slave. Gorged with luxury, he tires of it in time, and yet when for one reason or another his pleasures fail him he will be miserable, and you with him, and, what is worse, perhaps in some capital encounter of life you will be ready—you and he together—to sacrifice manly dignity, truth and duty from sheer sloth.

Let us bring up our children simply—I had almost said rudely. Let us entice them to exercise that gives them endurance, even to privations. Let them belong to those who are better trained to fatigue and the earth for a bed than to the comforts of the table and couches of luxury. So we shall make men of them, independent and stanch, who may be counted on, who will not sell themselves for pottage and who will have withal the faculty of being happy.

A too easy life brings with it a sort of lassitude in vital energy. One becomes blase, disillusioned, an old young man, past being diverted. How many young people are in this state! Upon them have been deposited, like a sort of mold, the traces of our decrepitude, our skepticism, our vices and the bad habits they have contracted in our company. What reflections upon ourselves these youths weary of life force us to make! What announcements are graven on their brows!

These shadows say to us by contrast that happiness lies in a life true, active, spontaneous, ungalled by the yoke of the passions, of unnatural needs, of unhealthy stimulus, keeping intact the physical faculty of enjoying the light of day and the air we breathe and in the heart the capacity to thrill with the love of all that is generous, simple and fine.

The artificial life engenders artificial thought and a speech little sure of itself. Normal habits, deep impressions, the ordinary contact with reality, bring frankness with them. Falsehood is the vice of a slave, the refuge of the cowardly and weak. He who is free and strong is unflinching in speech. We should encourage in our children the hardihood to speak frankly. What do we ordinarily do? We trample on natural disposition, level it down to the uniformity which for the crowd is synonymous with good form. To think with one's own mind, feel with one's own heart, express one's own personality—how unconventional, how rustic! Oh, the atrocity of an education which consists in the perpetual muzzling of the only thing that gives any of us his reason for being! Of how many soul murders do we become guilty! Some are struck down with bludgeons, others gently smothered with pillows! Everything conspires against independence of character. When we are little, people wish us to be dolls or graven images; when we grow up they approve of us on condition that we are like all the rest of the world—automatons; when you have seen one of them you've seen them all. So the lack of originality and initiative is upon us, and platitude and monotony are the distinctions of today. Truth can free us from this bondage. Let our children be taught to be themselves, to ring clear, without crack or muffle. Make loyalty a need to them, and in their gravest failures, if only they acknowledge them, account it for merit that they have not covered their sin.

To frankness let us add ingenuousness in our solicitude as educators. Let us have for this comrade of childhood—a trifle uncivilized, it is true, but so gracious and friendly—all possible regard. We must not frighten it away. When it has once fled it so rarely comes back! Ingenuousness is not simply the sister of truth, the guardian of the individual qualities of each of us; it is besides a great informing and educating force. I see among us too many practical people, so called, who go about armed with terrifying spectacles and huge shears to ferret out naive things and clip their wings. They uproot ingenuousness from life, from thought, from education, and pursue it even to the region of dreams. Under pretext of making men of their children they prevent their being children at all; as if before the ripe fruit of autumn, flowers did not have to be, and perfumes, and songs of birds, and all the fairy springtime.

I ask indulgence for everything naive and simple—not alone for the innocent conceits that flutter round the curly heads of children, but also for the legend, the folk song, the tales of the world of marvel and mystery. The sense of the marvelous is in the child the first form of that sense of the infinite without which a man is like a bird deprived of wings. Let us not wean the child from it, but let us guard in him the faculty of rising above what is earthy, so that he may appreciate later on those pure and moving symbols of vanished ages wherein human truth has found forms of expression that our arid logic will never replace.

CHAPTER XIV.

CONCLUSION.

I THINK I have said enough of the spirit and manifestations of the simple life to make it evident that there is here a whole forgotten world of strength and beauty. He can make conquest of it who has sufficient energy to detach himself from the fatal rubbish that trammels our days. It will not take him long to perceive that in renouncing some surface satisfactions and childish ambitions he increases his faculty of happiness and his possibilities of right judgment.

These results concern as much the private as the public life. It is incontestable that in striving against the feverish will to shine, in ceasing to make the satisfaction of our desires the end of our activity, in returning to modest tastes, to the true life, we shall labor for the unity of the family. Another spirit will breathe in our homes, creating new customs and an atmosphere more favorable to the education of children. Little by little our boys and girls will feel the enticement of ideals at once higher and more realizable, and transformation of the home will in time exercise its influence on public spirit.

As the solidity of a wall depends upon the grain of the stones and the consistence of the cement which binds them together, so also the energy of public life depends upon the individual value of men and their power of cohesion. The great desideratum of our time is the culture of the component parts of society, of the individual man. Everything in the present social organism leads us back to this element. In neglecting it we expose ourselves to the loss of the benefits of progress, even to making our most persistent efforts turn to our own hurt. If in the midst of means continually more and more perfected the workman diminishes in value, of what use are these fine tools at his disposal? By their very excellence to make more evident the faults of him who uses them without discernment or without conscience. The wheelwork of the great modern machine is infinitely delicate. Carelessness, incompetence or corruption may produce here disturbances of far greater gravity than would have threatened the more or less rudimentary organism of the society of the past. There is need, then, of looking to the quality of the individual called upon to contribute in any measure to the workings of this mechanism. This individual should be at once solid and pliable, inspired with the central law of life to be oneself and fraternal. Everything within us and without us becomes simplified and unified under the influence of this law, which is the same for everybody and by which each one should guide his actions, for our essential interests are not opposing; they are identical. In cultivating the spirit of simplicity we should arrive, then, at giving to public life a stronger cohesion.

The phenomena of decomposition and destruction that we see there may all be attributed to the same cause—lack of solidity and cohesion. It will never be possible to say how contrary to social good are the trifling interests of caste, of coterie, of church, the bitter ...sure for personal welfare, and, by a fatal consequence, how destructive these things are of individual happiness. A society in which each member is preoccupied with his own well being is organized disorder. This is all that we learn from the irreconcilable conflicts of our uncompromising egoism.

We too much resemble those people who claim the rights of ...ly only to gain advantage from th... not to do honor to the connection. On all rounds of the social ladder we are forever putting forth claims. We all take the ground that we are creditors; no one recognizes the fact that he is a debtor, and our dealings with our fellows consist in inviting them, in tones sometimes amiable, sometimes arrogant, to discharge their indebtedness to us. No good thing is attained in this spirit. For, in fact, it is the spirit of privilege, that eternal enemy of universal law, that obstacle to brotherly understanding, which is ever presenting itself anew.

In a lecture delivered in 1882 M. Renan said that a nation is "a spiritual family," and he added, "The essential of a nation is that all the individuals should have many things in common; and also that all should have forgotten much." It is important to know what to forget and what to remember, not only in the past, but also in our daily life. Our memories are lumbered with the things that divide us; the things which unite us slip away. Each of us keeps at the most luminous point of his souvenirs a lively sense of his secondary quality, his part of agriculturist, day laborer, man of letters, public officer, proletary, bourgeois, or political or religious sectarian, but his essential quality, which is to be a son of his country and a man, is relegated to the shade. Scarcely does he keep even a theoretic notion of it. So that what occupies us and determines our actions is precisely the thing that separates us from others, and there is hardly place for that spirit of unity which is as the soul of a people.

So, too, do we foster bad feeling in our brothers. Men animated by a spirit of particularism, exclusiveness and pride are continually clashing. They cannot meet without rousing afresh the sentiment of division and rivalry. And so there slowly heaps up in their remembrance a stock of reciprocal ill will, of mistrust, of rancor. All this is bad feeling with its consequences.

It must be rooted out of our midst. Remember, forget! This we should say to ourselves every morning, in all our relations and affairs. Remember the essential, forget the accessory! How much better should we discharge our duties as citizens if high and low were nourished from this spirit! How easy to cultivate pleasant remembrances in the mind of one's neighbor by sowing it with kind deeds and refraining from procedures of which in spite of himself he is forced to say, with hatred in his heart, "Never in the world will I forget!"

The spirit of simplicity is a great magician. It softens asperities, bridges chasms, draws together hands and hearts. The forms which it takes in the world are infinite in number, but never does it seem to us more admirable than when it shows itself across the fatal barrier of position, interest or prejudice, overcoming the greatest obstacles, permitting those whom everything seems to separate to understand one another, esteem one another, love one another. This is the true social cement that goes into the building of a people.

FRIENSVILLE CIRCUIT.

The service in the Friendsville church next Sunday will consist of class meeting at 10 o'clock in the morning, Sunday school at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and Epworth League meeting in the evening at 7:45.

Sunday school will be held at the regular hours in the morning at Selbysport, Kendall and Blooming Rose. Frank Friend, one of our efficient exhorters, will hold service at Kendall at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Rev. Henry Friend will preach at Kendall at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, Sunday May 7th, and the pastor will preach at the same hour Sunday May 14th.

The third quarterly conference will be held in the church at Hoyes 10:30 next Saturday morning by Presiding Elder R. B. Ward. The quarterly meeting services will start on Saturday evening when there will be preaching at 8 o'clock, class meeting and love feast at 9:30 Sunday morning, preaching at 10:30 and Epworth League meeting at 7:30 and 8 o'clock by Doctor R. B. Wesd. All members are requested to be in attendance at the quarterly conference with their usual reports.

A very beautiful and interesting Easter programme was rendered in the Friendsville church on Easter Sunday evening to a crowded house. The church was filled early in the evening and many were compelled to leave, not being able to find standing room. The large platform in the front of the church was both artistically and tastefully arranged and trimmed with potted flowers. The musical part of the occasion was in charge of the choir assisted by members of the choirs of the two other churches of our town, some noteworthy features of which were the anthem, quartette and duets. Professor James Griffin assisted the instrumental music by his skilful use of the violin. The literary part of the exercises consisted of recitations, dialogues, marches and many other interesting parts, all of which were performed in perfect manner. While the names of those who helped to make this a most successful service are too numerous to mention, we wish to make special mention of Clarance V. Guard, superintenden, Miss Ida Mason, chairman of the literary committee and Mrs. (Rev) Friend, chairman of the decorating committee. We also wish to express our appreciation and thanks to all who took part and for the presence of the large congregation.

W. M. LISTER, Pastor.

BAPTIST.

Services at Deer Park Sunday at 11 o'clock; subject, "God's Providential Dealings." Thayerville, 3 o'clock, "Christ's Last Charge." Sunday school at Thayerville at 10 o'clock. Prayer meeting at Deer Park every Wednesday at 7.30 p. m.

EPISCOPAL.

Rev. L. E. Goodwin, rector, will preach in St. Matthew's church, Oakland, Sunday, May 14th, at 11 o'clock in the morning and 7 o'clock in the evening. The morning services will consist of morning prayer, sermon and the Holy Communion. The evening services will consist of evening prayer and sermon.

For Sale—Tread Power.

Can use one, two or three horses, suitable for grinding corn on cob, sawing wood, shredding fodder, chopping hay or straw—in fact anything power may be attached to. The machine is almost new, in thorough repair and will be sold at a bargain. Farm work requiring use of horses operating it and the installation of a gas engine to take its place is our reason for offering it for sale.

To pay this amount it was ascertained that the taxable property as shown by the assessment books amounts to $7,742,032.00 which at $1.37 on the $100, will make the above amount for county purposes, $106,065.84. Deducting $508,387.00 for corporations paying direct to the State Treasurer leaves the basis $7,233,645.00 at 23⅓ cents on each $100.00 make $16,999.07 and this added makes the taxes for State and County purposes, $123,064.91.

JUDGE DANIEL WILSON'S RESIDENCE BURNED.

Fire Destroyed House and Other Buildings on Farm Sunday Night.

MOENTARY LOSS IS ABOUT $2000

All the Buildings on the Place With the Exception of Barn and Milk House Destroyed—Insurance Was $750—Will Rebuild at Once.

Last Sunday night about 11:15 o'clock Judge of the Orphan's Court Daniel Wilson, who resides on his farm near Kitzmillersville, discovered his residence to be on fire and owing to the high wind prevailing at the time which scattered the burning embers to other buildings on the farm, the dwelling, which Judge Wilson and his family occupied, a vacant log house used as dwelling many years ago, the granary and the smoke house, were entirely consumed, along with a portion of the furniture, grain and meat in process of curing, entailing a loss above insurance of about $2000. The insurance carried on the property by the owner was but $750.

Mr. Wilson and his family had retired some time before the fire was discovered, they being awaken by the smell of smoke and upon making an investigation the fire was discovered in a portion of the house where no artificial means of heating had been used for sometime, which leads Mr. Wilson to think that mice had caused the fire by chewing and exploding some parlor matches.

Mr. Wilson and his family used every endeavor to extinguish the fire but were unable to make any headway against it.

Preparations are being made by Mr. Wilson to rebuild his house and other structures at once.

Right of Way Marked.

Since the fire which destroyed the block of buildings near the Second street crossing a corps of Baltimore and Ohio civil engineers surveyed the right of way of the railroad company at that point and on Tuesday the trackmen planted large iron posts at the points designated by the engineers. The right of way as marked takes from a foot to three feet from the property owners on the south side of the alleyway which includes the Hessen, Loar and Hamill properties. The action of the railroad company in thus cutting down the depth of the property makes the lots very shallow and almost entirely too small for building purposes.

FIRE AT HUTTON.

Dwelling Burned at That Place Tuesday Night.

Tuesday night about ten o'clock the dwelling house at Hutton owned by Mrs. Dennis Glover and occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Biggs, was discovered to be on fire. An alarm was sounded by the tannery whistle, which wrs audible to many persons in Oakland, and brought quite a large crowd to the scene of the fire, who did all they could to save the property, but nothing being at hand except buckets, the fight was useless and the building burned to the ground. Much of Mr. Briggs' furniture was saved.

Mr. Biggs was recently married and is employed at Hutton as night Baltimore and Ohio telegraph operator.

DIED.

FIKE—At his home, near Red House on April 23 1605, David Fike, aged 82 years, 1 month and 22 days. He was born in Somerset county, Pa., and was married to Elizabeth Snyder, of Fayette county, Pa., in the year 1841. He was the father of ten children of whom six are living, namely, Mrs. Haun, Mrs. Jas. Liller, Mrs. Henry Sisler, Mrs. M. S. Wolf, Mrs. Peter Martin and Solomon Fike. The deceased had sixty-eight grandchildren and eighty-one great grand children. He became a bember of the German Baptist church in his youth and lived a faithful member until death. His life was that of a devout examplary christian, and he died trusting fully in the Promises of his Savior. A long, calm, charitable and generous life is a testimony left behind that it is well with his soul. His remains were buried in the home buryground on his farm beside those of his wife who preceded him a few years ago. Rev. I. W. Abernathy officiated at the funeral, and delivered an excellent sermon.

Sheep Killing Dogs.

A number of worthless cur dogs have been going about town and the adjacent country for a week or two, traveling in a pack. Sunday there were at least a dozen of them together running over yards, gardens and in one instance they tried hard to force entrance into the back door of a residence on Second street. Monday morning at an early hour a farmer residing near town heard some of his neighbor's sheep bleating and suspecting that they were being run by a dog got his shotgun ready for business. Just above his house acro the road he saw two dogs after the flock. They had crippled one lamb and were about to kill it outright when he fired, killing one of the dogs, a mangy white and yellow, half-blooded hound. The sheep belonged to Mr. T. W. Casteel.

An organized war on the curs would tend to rid the community of some worthless rubbish.

JAIL CONTRACTORS ON HAND.

Car Load of Tools Being Unloaded and Work to Begin on Building at Once.

The Brady Construction Company, of Fairmont, West Va., to which corporation the contract was awarded by the Board of County Commissioners for the erection of the new jail in Oakland, have shipped here a car load of tools and machinery to be utilized in the construction of the building.

The land purchased by the Commissioners and the citizens of Oakland as a site for the structure, has been entirely cleared of the old houses which stood upon it and work upon the foundation and excavations for cellars, furnace rooms, etc., will begin this morning.

Two members of the construction company are here superintending the operations.

The jail and sheriff's residence will be erected on Fourth street opposite the Catholic church, and will be located about twenty feet back of the property line, thus leaving a plot of ground which can be utilized for a lawn and the planting of shrubbery.

Church Matters.

The special services in the Lutheran church at Friendsville last Sunday evening were well attended and were quite interesting. The special music by the choir, consisting of two anthems was rendered. Mr. F. G. Fox read the scripture lesson and Mr. George Kolb offered the opening prayer, after which three children were baptised. A special sermon by the pastor was preached to the class recently received into membership when Mr. W. F. East presented the certificate of confirmation to Mrs. Theresa B. Mason, the other members of the class being detained at home.

Catechetical classes have been organized at Cove and Accident. The former numbers 17 and the latter 14 members. The officers of the Cove class are, John Frazee, president; John Hetz, vice pres't; Maggie Frazee, sec'y; Vinnie Kamp, asst. sec'y; Louis Diehl, treas. At Accident the class officers are as follows: Earl Ault, pres't; Lawrence Speicher, vice pres't; Emma Margroff, sec'y; Mary Bowman, asst.; Chas. Bowmaa, treas.

In the Accident Lutheran charge services have been announced as follows: Accident, Saturday, 2:30 p. m., catechize; Sunday, 10 a. m., preaching. At this service an election for church officials will take place. Cove, Sunday school at 10 a. m. Friendsville, Sunday school at 10 a. m.; 7:30 p. m., a special sermon to the Odd Fellows will be preached by the pastor, followed by the organization of a catechetical class.

H. C. SALEM, Pastor.

LUTHERAN.

Services will be conducted in the Garrett Memorial church, Oakland on Sunday as follows: Sunday school at 9:30 a. m., and preaching at 10:30 a. m. At Hutton preaching service on Thursday evening, May 11th, at 7:30 o'clock, preceded at 6:30 by catechise.

E. MANGES, Pastor.

Baptist services were held on last Sunday morning at Deer Park, Rev. W. H. Faust preaching to a large congregation on "God's Providential Dealings."

Mr. Faust is a strong adherent of the doctrine that God controls and cares for all His creatures, even the lowliest. A great massive oak, he said, looked down with contempt on a tiny little violet at its side. "I have been living here for hundreds and hundreds of years," said the oak, "and you are growing down there beside me as though you were of some importance. Nobody cares anything about you; you have no aim in the world, while I live here year in and year out, at last when I tumble down in decay, there will be a great mound to show where I have lived."

The little violet said, "God in His plans made it so that you had to be strong, and He also saw that I had a purpose in the world and that purpose was to be fragrant and sweet, and as long as I am sweet and beautiful I am just as important in the world."

God controls everything, great events are in His keeping, and indeed everything receives His watchful care. Whether we are on the sea or the land, we are under His guidance and shelter. Even the hairs of our head are numbered.

Butter and Eggs at Garthright's.

Until further notice Garthright, Mountain Lake Park, will pay in cash 16 per dozen for all the fresh eggs he can get and 20 cents per pound for first-class fresh butter.

FORMER PREACHER OF OAKLAND

And Father of Senator J. P. Dolliver Passes Away.

A special telegram from Washington dated last Saturday says that Rev. James P. Dolliver, father of Senator Jonathan P. Dolliver, of Iowa, died at the home of his son on Massachusetts avenue in that city.

Mr. Dolliver was 90 years old and was in Washington on a visit. Four or five days before his death he caught a severe cold, which developed into pneumonia and this, augmented by physical weakness, caused his death.

Mr. Dolliver was born November 28, 1816, in Saratoga county, N. Y. The family moved to New Jersey in 1820. During the next seventeen years Mr. Dolliver remained at home, working and getting an education, teaching several terms before he was 21. In 1838 he got passage to Columbus, Ohio, by driving a team. He clerked in a store, then became proprietor and prospered greatly until 1843, when he became converted, joined the Methodist church, retired from business and entered the Ohio conference as a circuit rider. He was assigned to a circuit carrying him into Virginia, and when the general conference for Virginia, now West Virginia, was formed he became a charter member, settling at Kingwood, and preaching in all places within a radius of fifty miles of that town, including Oakland where he is well remembered by many of the old residents. He labored forty years and the story of his rides on horseback great distances, preaching three times a day, his prodigious efforts to arouse people, exhortation, prayer and personal efforts, would fill volumes. During a terrific blizzard he became lost, his leg was frozen and had to be amputated. In 1854 he was married, his wife dying 30 years ago.

In Memorian.

In memory of Effie May Stephens, wife of James Stephens and daughter of ex-Judge Elias and Barbara Merrill, who died in Merrill, Garrett county, Md., April 3rd, aged 28 years, 10 months and 16 days, after an illness of about five weeks. Deceased was a lady of sterling character, and enjoyed the respect of everyone with whom she came in contact.

She was post-mistress at Merrill, and gave out the first mail at that place. While young in years she united with the Brethren church and esteemed it a grand privilege to go to the house of the Lord. In Sunday school and in preaching services her place was seldom vacant, possessing fine vocal talent coupled with her untiring effort to do "what she could."

The church lost one of the sweetest singers it ever had. The last services and perhaps the last hymn she sang in the church was:

"In the Rifted Rock I'm Resting,
Safely sheltered I abide,
There no foes or storms molest me
While within the cleft I hide.

"In the rifted rock I'll hide me,
Till the storms of life are past,
All secure in this blest refuge,
Heeding not the fiercest blast."

Before she passed away, she called for the elders of the church and was anointed according to James, 5:14. Declaring her sympathy for the church, she died in the hope of a glorious immortality. We believe she safely rests in the Shadow of the Rock, though her voice is hushed in death and an ever vacant seat, yet the knowledge of her christian traits of character will live in the hearts of those who knew her. O may the kind words and deeds done, be an inspiration to those who knew and associated with her, to a higher plane of existence and like Effie unite that life of holiness without which no man shall see the Lord.

Funeral services were conducted at the home by Elder S. L. Fike.

The last look was very impressive indeed especially of her aged father and mother bending over the beautiful casket and lingering, loth to part with a fond daughter, so near and dear to them by the ties of nature.

She was laid to rest in the cemetery in sight of home over which no doubt she had often gazed and meditated over man's future destiny. She leaves a husband and one little son, Harry O., three brothers and two sisters. The funeral was largely attended by about 300 people.

"Quietly sleep beloved one,
Rest from thy toil thy labor's done,
Rest till the trump from the opening skies,
Bids thee from dust to glory arise.

Postmaster John Englehart of Accident, Taken South for His Health.

The many friends of Postmaster and Merchant John Englehart, of Accident, will be sorry to learn of his extreme critical condition and his hurried departure for the South where he hopes to recuperate his health.

Mr. Englehart recently suffered an attack of grip which left him with his lungs very much affected. A visit to a specialist in Pittsburg revealed the fact that he was suffering with consumption and advised his removal at once to a warmer climate than this. On Thursday in company with Mrs. Englehart he left his home for Asheville, N. C., where he will remain for some weeks or until a change for the better occurs.

LIBERTY STREET WILL BE GRADED

City Council Adopts Resolution to Improve Three Squares of that Street.

JERRY BROWNING NIGHT OFFICER.

The Rate of Taxation Fixed at 65 Cents on the $100 Being the Same as Last Year.—Other Business Transacted.

At the meeting of the Town Council Monday night, when all members of the body and Mayor McComas were present, considerable business of public importance was transacted.

The monthly bills were read and ordered paid, which included work done on streets, weigh master's commissions, electric light, etc.

A survey of Liberty street from Wilson to Gilmor street having been previously made a plat showing the present grade of that street was submitted by ex-Mayor Frear to the Council. A motion was made by Councilman Legge to have the street graded in conformity with the grade lines established by the survey and the clerk instructed to prepare a notice advertising for bids to carry out the instructions of the Council.

Mayor McComas recommended Mr. J. O. Browning for appointment as night policeman which appointment was confirmed.

The rate of taxation for municipal purposes was fixed at 65 cents on the $100, divided as follows: For general purposes, 45 cents; for redemption of bonds and payment of interest bearing coupons, 20 cents. The rate is the same as last year.

The water question, owing to the absence of some interested persons from town, was not discussed. There is some likelihood, however, of something being done along this line before summer begins.

The proposed new city building was discussed to some length and it was finally decided to begin operations upon its construction at once, a special meeting to consider bids for the excavating and foundation work being fixed for last night, after which Council adjourned.

In the special session last night the contract for making the proper excavations for the new municipal building was let to Mr. J. W. Whorton; the foundation work was awarded to Mr. Joseph Cogley at his bid of $3.50 per perch. One other bid of $3.75 per perch was submitted by Mr. Wm. J. Nair. The building will be constructed of concrete stone which is considered much better than brick and is superior in many respects.

The Vine and the Branches

Here is another example of how Jesus loved His disciples to the end. He was within an hour of his betrayal, but His thoughts were upon His followers, not upon Himself. He knows how soon and cruelly His enemies will close in upon Himself, but He uses the last hour to confirm His apostles. The parable of the Vine is one means. It is the affirmation of a perpetual and close union, in spite of impending and violent separation.

There are some who believe that after the supper and before the agony in the garden, Jesus spent some hours of the night with His disciples in the temple. If so, the figure of the vine may have been suggested by the golden vine which Herod the Great had placed there above the golden gate; or some vineyard on the road may have given the hint. It is not necessary, however, to imagine any immediate suggestion, as the vine was the national emblem, woven everywhere into prophecy, song, and other literature of Israel. It was also one of the most familiar and beautiful of natural objects, the king of fruits in Palestine, source of wealth, joy, and strength to the people. In every respect it was worthy of the dignified and emblematic use Jesus made of it on this occasion.

Jesus opened His parable with a majestic ego, "I am the Vine, ye are the branches." It is as if He had said, "As you surround Me now and hang upon Me, so shall it be and much more so, even when I am bodily absent from you." But His language has a much wider sweep than that which would embrace the little company of His disciples then present.

In this figure of speech, asserts in the strongest possible manner His fundamental relation to humanity. He is sole Source of spiritual life and fruitfulness. Abiding in the stock (Jesus) and pruned by the husbandman (the Father), the branches (the disciples) live and bear fruit. (Verse. 1.) Apart from the stock the branches wither. (Verse 5, 6.) The words of Jesus are the instrument by means of which the branch is pruned. His example and ideals of character and duty apprehended, admired, and realized make genuine disciples, whose lives honor and commend the God they serve. (Verse 8.) He whose deliberate and perpetual choice is to maintain a vital union with Christ, and who to this end treasures His words in memory, is in the way of securing the things that are needful for his growth, comfort, and usefulness. (Verse 9.) The love of Christ for His disciples in analagous in greatness, fervency, and constancy to the love which the Father has for the Son. A measurement great beyond all finite comprehension. (Verse 10.) In conclusion Jesus defines His object in speaking these words to His disciples. It is that His joy may remain in them. As the fellowship of the Son with the Father gives Him infinite delight, so the conscious union of the disciple with the Master is source of blissful content. Up to the measurement of the disciple's capacity it can fill him with joy. (Verse 11.)

It would be difficult to conceive of figurative language used more skillfully or powerfully. The figure is extended in every possible way. The analogy being drawn out at every practicable point. The substance of it is the assertion of the spiritual oneness of Jesus and His followers, and His relation to them as Source of spiritual life and fruitfulness.

The Teacher's Lantern.

At the very moment of impending separation, Jesus speaks to His disciples of a union which they might maintain with Him as intimate and persistent as that which maintains between branches and vine. It was another way of saying to them, "Let not your heart be troubled."

* * * * *

Men are joined to Christ, not as branches which shoot from the vine, but as those which are grafted into it. Grafts must be so joined to the stock as to make a vital union. Mere mechanical union is insufficient. In nature good scions are grafted into poorer stocks. In grace the poor, sinful scions are grafted into Christ, the true and good stock.

* * * * *

No one must be contented with being merely grafted into Christ. There must be the ambition for abundant fruitfulness. Failure in this point insures ultimate separation from Christ.

* * * * *

Jesus' word is the pruning-knife. "Now ye are pruned through the Word which I have spoken unto you."

* * * * *

The figure from nature indicates the naturalness of the believer's relation to Jesus. Here is nothing arbitrary or fictitious. He who chooses to be a disciple, treasures the Master's teachings in his heart, actualizes them in life and deed, keeps himself open to the infinite life, such an one will have a wholesome and fruitful life.

* * * * *

Jesus spoke of His joy an hour before His agony. That joy was full and unimpaired, even by the shame and suffering of the cross.

* * * * *

Fancy has fairly spent itself in imagining how the figure of the vine suggested itself to Jesus' mind. One says that a vine draped the window where He was sitting as He talked. Another that they passed a vineyard while He was discoursing, and that a fire was kindled in it to destroy the dead branches. These suggestions are based upon the supposition that Jesus got His similitudes from what met His eye at the time. All this is artificial and unnecessary. John is so intent upon the subject-matter of Jesus' discourse that He forgets to give us the environment and scenery, if, indeed, there was any of significance.

* * * * *

The substance of this figurative and hortatory sermon is the necessity of vital union with Jesus, and the blessed results of the union.

Life in California.

Not only does California's beauty and climate aid to the pleasure of life there but living is cheap also. Fruit and vegetables in abundance. Low rates via Rock Island System March 1 to May 15. A quicker trip in tourist sleeper than by any other line. Cost as low as the lowest—service the best. Tourist folder, with complete information, from John Sebastian, Passenger Traffic Manager, Rock Island System, Chicago.

Editor Marsh Wants a Hell.

If there is no hell there is an abundance of evidence that there ought to be a place answering that description. The poor excuse of a genus homo who would sell rotgut whiskey to a boy, and when the boy was summoned before the grand jury would give him whiskey and have him too drunk to answer questions and after being the means of the boy's being sent to jail would deliberately attempt to slip him whiskey through the prison bars in order that he might be further incapacitated from testifying before the grand jury, certainly was not intended for heaven and the angels. There are a great many different shades of vice but who willfully betrays the unsuspecting youth to lead a life of depredation is guilty of them all. This is certainly the speakeasy business to the limit, notwithstanding the laws of our country say that such things shall not and must not be done.—Glenville Pathfinder, W. Va.

MANY RAILROAD RUMORS.

Is The Wabash After The George's Creek Road.

The presence of Mr. W. L. DeWalbridge, of New York, president of the Maryland Coal Company, in the city in connection with rumors that have been heard for some time that the Wabash was endeavoring to secure the George's Creek railroad, has created considerable speculation as to the plans of the Wabash after the completion of the Cumberland extension.

About the time work began on the Cumberland extension, the building of the link from Elkins to Pittsburg was started. For some reasons work on the Pittsburg link ended suddenly and for almost two years nothing has been done.

Now it is claimed the Wabash has been searching for a route from Cumberland to Pittsburg that will be shorter and have an easier grade than that by way of the West Virginia Central.

It is claimed a road can be built from the George's Creek railroad northwest through Savage mountain coming out in the Casselman river valley. Once over the Savage mountain it would be an easy matter to reach Pittsburg by way of Uniontown, paralleling the route of the old National road.

Whether the Wabash desires the George's creek railroad for this extension or whether it is for the purpose of securing coal from the creek region or for both reasons it would prove a valuable acquisiion to the Gould properties and result in an increase in business on the road.

There seems to be no doubt that the Baltimore and Ohio intends to build a line from the coal fields of Somerset county to Mann's Choice, there connecting with the Bedford division of the P. R. R. over which the coal will be hauled to the B. & O., at Hyndman. It is claimed the Wabash has also surveyed in this region in an endeavor to find a route over the Allegheny mountains without the tremendous grades with which the existing roads have to contend.—Cumberland Times.

Letter to Mr. E. H. Sincell.

Oakland, Md.

Dear Sir: What would be the result of selling poor paint with this guarantee?

"If you have any fault to find with this paint, either now in putting it on, or hereafter in the wear, tell your dealer about it.

"We authorize him to do what is right at our expense."

That means pay damages, don't it? Here's another guarantee:

"If your state chemist finds this paint adulterated, we will pay his bill, and send you $1000."

We stand by both of these guarantees; as we are the maker, we know all about it.

Yours truly

Bowser Plays Cards

Brings Home New Pack and Induces Wife to Join In Few "Lively Games" of Euchre—Her Luck Angers Him. Accuses Her of Cheating and Defies Hoyle.

[Copyright, 1905, by T. C. McClure.]

MR. BOWSER had been reading and smoking for half an hour after dinner when he seemed to suddenly think of something and rose up and went down the hall to his overcoat. When he returned he had a fancy deck of cards in his hand and said to Mrs. Bowser:

"I'd almost forgotten these. They were given me by an agent who happened into the office today."

Mrs. Bowser had a word of praise for the deck, and then Mr. Bowser continued:

"I've finished with the paper, and I don't believe you care much for your book, and suppose we have a few games of euchre to initiate this deck?"

"I—I don't feel much like playing tonight," she replied, remembering previous experiences and wondering how she could turn his mind into another channel.

"Nonsense! Just put away your old book, and we'll have a few lively games. I think I heard you bragging around a few weeks ago that you could beat me all hollow."

"Can't we let it go until tomorrow night? Mrs. Green is making a dress, and she may send in for me at any minute."

"When she sends you can go, but we'll probably have time to play a dozen games first."

Mrs. Bowser saw that there was no way out of it, and she laid aside her book and said:

"The last time we played you said I cheated and raised a great row about it. If you get mad this time"—

"My dear woman, I have no recollection of raising a row, and if you can cheat me you are welcome to."

"But I don't want to cheat. I want to play fair, and I want you to do the same."

"Certainly I will. Only if a man beats a woman at cards she always squeals about it. I shall beat you four games out of five, and if there is any getting mad you will be the one."

"You'll hear no squealing from me, as you call it. I've got the book of Hoyle right here, and we shall be guided by it in our play."

Mr. Bowser agreed and began to chuckle. The cards were cut and the deal fell to him.

"No squealing now," he said as he shuffled off the cards. "I propose to show you that"— "I order up your hand," interrupted Mrs. Bowser.

"What! Order up the very first hand? I never heard of such a thing, but I was going to take it up, anyhow. Lead away, and if I don't make you a tired woman before you get through then you may call me a goat."

Mrs. Bowser led and continued to lead until every trick was taken, and as she scored two Mr. Bowser forced a laugh and said:

"All right for you. I am just leading you on. Don't try to stack those cards, for I have my eye on you."

"You know I can't stack cards."

"Well, don't try to learn. There was something very funny about your taking all those tricks. Play to that."

Mrs. Bowser happened to have the better hand and she covered his lead and took three tricks and scored another point.

"You are having bullhead luck," he sneered, "but wait until the cards begin to run and you won't know you are in the game. It's my deal."

The luck was still with Mrs. Bowser and she scored two points and made a "Chicago." Womanlike she could not conceal her exultation, and Mr. Bowser turned red clear around to the back of his neck and answered:

"You can blow your horn now, but wait a few minutes longer. Remember, if there is any cheating, out of the game I go."

Five more hands were played and Mrs. Bowser won by two points. Fearing an outbreak, she said nothing, but the cat looked out from under the lounge and caught her eye and winked at her to go slow and let Mr. Bowser win a game. She tried to do so, but it happened that the cards were running her way and she couldn't help but take the tricks. It was another "Chicago" for Mr. Bowser, and he shoved back from the table and queried:

"Have you had an old gambler up here teaching you how to palm the cards?"

"Of course I haven't!" she indignantly replied. "Luck is simply running my way, or else"—

"Or else what?"

"Never mind."

"But I do mind. I want to know what you mean by your 'or else.'"

"Well, maybe you are not a good card player."

"What? What's that? Woman, have you got the cheek to sit there and tell me such a thing as that—I, who was playing cards and beating everybody for ten miles around when you were still at the nursing bottle? By the great horn spoon, but that is unadulterated gall! I will now show you whether I know an ace from a ten spot."

But he failed to keep his word. The cards still continued to run to Mrs. Bowser, and the result was that she was a winner again. The last trick was taken with an ace, and Mr. Bowser grabbed the cards and shouted:

"No, you don't! I played a king there."

"And I played an ace."

"I know you did, but if you think an ace takes a king then you'd better learn the game of euchre."

"But of course it does."

"But of course it don't."

"Here is Hoyle, and he says the value of cards is"—

"What have I got to do with Hoyle?" demanded Mr. Bowser.

"He's an authority on games, as everybody knows, and he puts the value of an ace above a king."

"I don't care a peanut what he does. I say a king takes an ace every time, and I can go out and find you fifty men to say so. I asked you to have a few friendly games of euchre with me, and what do you do the very first thing? You stack the cards on me."

"Mr. Bowser!"

"Oh, you can pretend innocence, but I know all about it. On the very first hand out you stole a trick from me, and on the second game you cheated like blazes. Yes, you did, and now you have the cheek to tell me that an ace takes a king!"

"Of course it does."

"What? You still stick to it? By the Lord Harry, woman, but I'll go out and get testimony to mash you flatter than a pancake, and when I have mashed you I will see you on the train for your mother's!"

"How silly to run out and let folks know that we can't agree on a game of cards!" she replied.

"Silly or not, I'm going, and you sit right here and I'll bring in a whole house full of witnesses. Where in blazes is that old yaller eyed cat?"

"In the back yard, maybe."

"And it's a blamed good thing for him that he is. Don't try to sneak out of this thing by running away."

Mr. Bowser knew that his family butcher was a card player, and he made for his shop and put the question.

"Does an ace take a king?" repeated the butcher. "Let me ask you if a dollar is more than 75 cents?"

"But does it?"

"Always and forever, and if you don't know the value of cards you had better quit playing."

Mr. Bowser called the butcher a liar and passed on to the druggist. The man of bottles was busy, but he found time to whisper in reply:

"Ask Mrs. Bowser. She knows more about cards than you can ever learn in all your born days!"

The shoemaker and the plumber told him about the same, and he gave it up and started for home. In front of his house he met a pedestrian, and as a last hope he accosted him.

"Are you drunk or a fool to ask such a question as that?" exclaimed the stranger.

"Don't you insult me, sir!"

"I don't believe I could, you old rip! What sort of a game is this, anyhow?"

The next instant Mr. Bowser tackled him, and five minutes later a snow burdened and dilapidated figure softly opened the front door and sneaked upstairs.

"Have you got fifty men to say that an ace won't take a king?" called Mrs. Bowser.

But only echo answered.

To pay this amount it was ascertained that the taxable property as shown by the assssment books amounts to $7,742,032.00 which at $1.37 on the $100, will make the above amount for county purposes, $106,065.84. Deducting $508,387.00 for corporations paying direct to the State Treasurer leaves the basis $7,233,645.00 at 23½ cents on each $100.00 make $16,999.07 and this added makes the taxes for State and County purposes, $123,064.91.

As the coat shrinks the wearer's profanity expands. Why waste workmanship on unshrunk cloth?

Saves time in the factory, and time of course is money—but the wearer gets "the short end" and wears the short coat.

That is not the "Clothcraft" way. There is a patented Clothcraft machine that shrinks the cloth in the piece before it is made up. Does exactly what the high priced tailor does with wet cloth and hot iron, but does it quickly by wholesale.

This is only one point of Clothcraft excellence, but it shows the intent of the Clothcrafters and the thoroughness of their work.

No other concern does or can use our shrinking machine. It's a Clothcraft patent. Without it no cloth is likely to be properly shrunk in a factory except at very great expense.

The style and fit of Clothcraft Clothes and cloth are self evident. You can see and judge them for yourself—but it is well for you to know that behind the perfection of fit and finish is the solid honesty of wearful cloth and workmanship.

Notice To Tax Payers!

This is to notify the tax payers of Garrett county that the Annual Levy for 1905 has been made and published, and to call their attention to the following abstract, Section 45, Chapter 566, Acts of 1896, relating to the discount to be allowed and the interest to be charged on all tax bills:

"All county taxes shall be due and payable on the first day of September next succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and all county taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed, and after the first day of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid. The treasurer shall taxe the discount from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes regularly in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon his books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid. But the discount shall not be allowed unless the whole amount of State and county taxes are paid when same is made.

Make Money In California

If you are industrious and capable you can make money there. The big ranches are breaking up into small farms that need more workers to care for the increased product. The towns and cities are prosperous because the country is prosperous.

There are great valleys of the richest soil in America waiting for you. If you have a little capital you can own one of these small farms yourself, or you can rent one on shares and pay for it out of the product in a few years. We will send you descriptive booklets and folders giving full information about the money-making opportunities for every member of the family.

You want to see what the country is really like; you can go there, work a few months, enjoy the delightful climate, the flowers, fruit and scenery, and earn enough to pay your expenses both ways by taking advantage of the

Deducting $508,387.00 for corporations paying direct to the State Treasurer leaves the basis $7,233,645.00 at 23½ cents on each $100.00 make $16,969.07 and this added makes the taxes for State and County purposes, $123,064.91.

As the coat shrinks the wearer's profanity expands. Why waste workmanship on unshrunk cloth?

Saves time in the factory, and time of course is money—but the wearer gets "the short end" and wears the short coat.

That is not the "Clothcraft" way. There is a patented Clothcraft machine that shrinks the cloth in the piece before it is made up. Does exactly what the high priced tailor does with wet cloth and hot iron, but does it quickly by wholesale.

This is only one point of Clothcraft excellence, but it shows the intent of the Clothcrafters and the thoroughness of their work.

No other concern does or can use our shrinking machine. It's a Clothcraft patent. Without it no cloth is likely to be properly shrunk in a factory except at very great expense.

The style and fit of Clothcraft Clothes and cloth are self evident. You can see and judge them for yourself—but it is well for you to know that behind the perfection of fit and finish is the solid honesty of wearful cloth and workmanship.

Notice To Tax Payers!

This is to notify the tax payers of Garrett county that the Annual Levy for 1905 has been made and published, and to call their attention to the following abstract, Section 45, Chapter 506, Acts of 1896, relating to the discount to be allowed and the interest to be charged on all tax bills:

"All county taxes shall be due and payable on the first day of September next succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and all county taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed, and after the first day of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid. The treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes regularly in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon his books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid. But the discount shall not be allowed unless the whole amount of State and county taxes are paid when same is made.

Make Money In California

If you are industrious and capable you can make money there. The big ranches are breaking up into small farms that need more workers to care for the increased product. The towns and cities are prosperous because the country is prosperous.

There are great valleys of the richest soil in America waiting for you. If you have a little capital you can own one of these small farms yourself, or you can rent one on shares and pay for it out of the product in a few years. We will send you descriptive booklets and folders giving full information about the money-making opportunities for every member of the family.

You want to see what the country is really like; you can go there, work a few months, enjoy the delightful climate, the flowers, fruit and scenery, and earn enough to pay your expenses both ways by taking advantage of the

AUSTIN BROWN.

Oakland, Md., May 2, 1905.

DEMOCRATIC newspapers are publishing lengthy editorials showing, from their standpoint, what a beautiful arrangement the proposed Constitutional Amendment would be. But, happily for the people and the State, a majority of the voters are more than likely to take an entirely different view of the matter. They are not willing to see worthy whites and blacks robbed of the privilege of voting, because of the whims and partisan zeal of the registration officers, or, as Governor Warfield said: "The fundamental right of a citizen to exercise the privilege of suffrage should not depend upon the opinion of any set of election officers as to the reasonableness of his interpretation of any clause of the Constitution."

MR. AUSTIN BROWN, of Oakland, announces his candidacy in this issue of THE REPUBLICAN for the nomination of Sheriff, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention which is to meet in Oakland within a short time. Mr. Brown once before filled the office of Sheriff and his administration of the multitudinous duties of the position were satisfactory to all the people He was painstaking, efficient and more than once was commended by the Court for his aggressiveness in executing the orders and mandates of the law. Mr. Brown's previous experience as an officer will stand him well in hand if he should be nominated and elected for another term. He has many warm friends in every part of the county who will be glad to learn of his candidacy and will unite in his support.

COMPELS HIS DISAPPROVAL.

"I would not be faithful to the duties of the high executive office to which I have been elected by the people if I permitted, without protest, any of its constitutional powers and prerogatives to be impaired. It is with regret that I am compelled by a sense of duty and in obedience to my deep-seated convictions as to what is best for people to officially declare that the said bill, designated as Chapter 97, entitled 'An act to amend Section 1 of article 1 of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection,' has not my approval." So said Governor Warfield, in his famous message defining his attitude as to the proposed amendment, and which bill he vetoed, because he believes in a "fair-suffrage fight."

Among the orders issued by the War Department at Washington on last Friday was one granting a leave of absence of two months to Chaplain Oliver C. Miller, of the Thirteenth Cavalry, now stationed in the Philippines. Mr. Miller has been in the regular service for upward of three years. He is remembered by the citizens of Oakland as a former pastor of the Lutheran church here and as the minister who preached the sermon when the recently burned Lutheran church was dedicated.

THE PRODUCTION OF MAPLE SUGAR.

The Bureau of Forestry Seeks to Develop and Extend the Industry.

The Bureau of Forestry has been studying the maple sugar industry with the view of securing a large use of the maple forests. Since 1850 the area of maple sugar farming has greatly changed and shrunk. In early days maple sugar was commonly made, even in many parts of the South, because cane sugar was virtually unobtainable. No longer is there even a limited production in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas. This is because cane sugar can now be bought everywhere at a low price, and is preferred to maple sugar for sweetening. In Indiana, Michigan and Illinois the maple trees have been extensively cut for lumber, thus reducing the opportunity for tree tapping. In those States also the markets are glutted with imitations, which removes the incentive to extending the industry. In other States, as in western Maryland, West Virginia, Ohio, New York, and in New England, the maple sugar industry has held its own or been increased.

The best sap flow is secured in the cooler northern States, yet good results can be expected in most of Pennsylvania and West Virginia, in Western Maryland, all of Indiana and Kentucky, eastern Tennessee, and western North Carolina. At present the largest producers of sugar maple products are Ohio, Vermont, and New York. The sugar and black maples yield the most and the best sap, although some other species of maple may be worked to advantage when neither of these is available.

The maple is a hardy and vigorous tree and readily reproduces itself, so there need be no fear of failure of sap supply. For sap production the all important consideration is for the tree to have a full and heavy crown. Yet it should also grow under forest conditions which maintain a ground cover of litter and humus.

As a result of the study recently made, definite directions for the management and improvement of existing groves, and for the establishment of new ones in suitable localities and under different conditions, have been prepared and will soon be published. Many valuable data regarding the profit in making maple sugar were also collected. From these it appears that a farmer can easily clear about $3 an acre from sugar grove. The expenses in this estimate are placed at a maximum; all the labor and hauling are charged in at market rates, though as a matter of fact the sugar season falls at a time when the farmer has little other employment for himself or his horses. In actual practice, for the farmer who can do, most of his own work the profit should be considerably larger. And the land thus utilized will yield little or nothing under any other use.

The old method of collecting the sap by making a diagonal cut in the tree was abandoned long ago because it injured the tree so that it could be worked for but a few years. The approved practice now is to bore a hole one inch deep and three-eighths of an inch in diameter into the sunny side of trees over 12 inches in diameter, and to make but one hole in each tree, except possibly where the trees are especially large and productive. Vast improvements have also been made in appliances for handling the sap and boiling it down to sugar and syrup.

Maple trees now furnish but a small per cent. of the commercial maple syrup and sugar. While the demand for both these commodities has constantly increased, the output from maple trees has decreased during the last twenty years. The trade has been supplied only by radically adulterating the pure goods, or by manufacturing a product entirely from foreign materials. It is conservatively estimated that seven-eighths of what is sold as maple syrup and sugar is a spurious article. Most of the fabrications are entirely harmless, but they are not the real thing. Those fortunate enough to have eaten the genuine article will always demand it, and conditions should be such that they may get it, if they are willing to pay the price.

The fault does not lie with the producers, those who tap the trees and duced the sap to syrup and sugar but with the middlemen who buy the sugar and mix and adulterate it most profitably for themselves. The extent of this adulteration is illustrated by the fact that while the amount of the raw product has decreased, the whole quantity sold has largely increased and its market price has been reduced. Of late years the price has fallen in direct relation to the decrease in the price of cane sugar.

The most common substitutes used in the adulteration of maple sugar and syrup are other sugar and glucose. Much of the so-called maple syrup on the market is nothing but a combination of sweets with a little maple molasses added to give the maple flavor. There is also a maple syrup which contains no maple at all, but the flavor is obtained by adding to the compound an extract of hickory bark. This extensive adulteration forces the producers of pure maple sugar to compete with the cheap imitations. The price of their raw product is kept down, and the forests of maple are not as profitable to their owners as they otherwise might be.

The consumer is entitled to pure goods, and the producer is entitled to have his syrup and sugar bought and used for what it is. The remedy is in the hands of the producers, and they can effect a change for the better in two ways. They can associate themselves in State and large local companies, and, by selling direct to consumers, cut out the middle-men; and they can also put their product on the market in the form not of sugar, but of syrup, which is the most in demand. The public will not object to paying a little higher price for guaranteed pure goods. The cost of making and handling syrup might be a little more than that of sugar, but the net returns would be larger the public better served, and the maple sugar industry profitably extended. The association plan has been adopted in Vermont with excellent results. Annual meetings are held, through whose influence improved methods of production have been adopted, a central market established, and a registered trade-mark created which is a guarantee of absolute purity. In this way a trade of good proportions has been built up.

BITTINGER.

Cupid seems to have gone abroad with unwonton energy, and whilst nature's flower fairies have but begun to strew their sweet fragrant tributes over all the earth, love's sweet pinions have flown swiftly, wooing young to the wedding place, whilst at the bridal altar they breath the sacred vow. The merry chimes told of the marriage on last Sunday at Accident of Mr. Alexander George and Miss Katherine Bitzell, and it is rumored that Mr. John Bitzell and Miss Rosa Stark were married at the same time. This report, however, is yet to be confirmed.

For Sale—Tread Power.

Can use one, two or three horses, suitable for grinding corn on cob, sawing wood, shredding fodder, chopping hay or straw—in fact anything power may be attached to. The machine is almost new, in thorough repair and will be sold at a bargain. Farm work requiring use of horses operating it and the installation of a gas engine to take its place is our reason for offering it for sale.

Get SCOTT'S Emulsion

When you go to a drug store and ask for Scott's Emulsion you know what you want; the man knows you ought to have it. Don't be surprised, though, if you are offered something else. Wines, cordials, extracts, etc., of cod liver oil are plentiful but don't imagine you are getting cod liver oil when you take them. Every year for thirty years we've been increasing the sales of Scott's Emulsion. Why? Because it has always been better than any substitute for it.

EV. LUTHERAN CHURCH MEETING.

Members To Select Site for Proposed New Church Monday Evening.

The official board of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran congregation has appointed next Monday night for a meeting of the congregation at the Garrett Memorial church for the purpose of considering a site for the location of the proposed new church edifice.

We understand that a number of eligible loaation will be brought to the attention of the members, among them being the McComas lot on the east side of Second street; the Delawder lot adjoining the public school building; the Yelboly property at the corner of Alder and Fourth streets; the Reynolds property, corner Oak and Fifth streets, and possibly some others. Any of the locations above mentionod will meet with the requirements of the church people and all of them are exceptionally good.

RAIN.HAIL.WIND.THUNEDR STORMS

This is Only Part of the Weather Conglomeration Promised For May.

Rev. Irl Hicks, the weather prophet of St. Louis, issues the following predictions for May:

"Reactionary storms conditions will prevail during the last two days of April and the first of May. By the 1st, disturbances will have passed to eastern parts of the country, with cooler clearing weather and rising barometer following from the West.

"A regular storm period is central on the 6th. This storm period begins at the full moon on the 4th.

"The storm period, 4th to 9th, will be ushered in as early as the 4th, with decided and rapid change to warmer in all parts westward. The barometer will show marked atmosphere depressions in the same regions, and as these conditions increase and move eastward over the country, a series of decided rain, hail, wind and thunder storms will begin, repeating themselves in many localities for several successive days, leading up to the 8th or 9th. No sane, unbiased person will consider it 'sensation' to say that danger will probably attend some of these storms, and those who calmly and wisely weigh these probabilties, will suffer the least anxiety, and most surely escape bodily harm and material loss. Along with the rising barometer and clearing weather at the cessation of this storm period, frost may be looked for in many central to northern sections, say from about the 9th to the 12th. A maximum of earthquake and seismic disturbances will almost certainly be felt in many parts of the globe within and near the limits of this period.

"Centering on the 12th, 13th and 14th, reactionary storm conditions will reappear and make their regular, progressive transition from West to East across the country. These disturbances will culminate in many thunder and rain storms on and touching the 14th, following which, the barometer will rise, winds will shift to the west and north, with change to much cooler weather.

A RHEUMATIC CURE.

Rev. Shoup Presents One For Suffering Humanity.

To the Editor of THE REPUBLICAN:

In view of the fact that I am constantly meeting with distressing cases of rheumatic suffering in this section, I am moved to communicate to your readers a singular but effective cure for this malady.

In 1876-7, while living in Alabama, we employed at intervals in our family a negro "auntie," hale and sprightly at 80. This aged ex-slave had been "field-woman" on Gov Clay's plantation for a half century, and her young "Marse," ex-Senator C. C. Clay, was then living to vouch for the truthfulness of old Daphnie's statement. Her story:

"At fouty yeah I was helplis', jus lik a leetel chile, and I don all my ovehseein' goin' on my hans and knees. Dat a-way I was in de field one day when I see a mighty fine-lookin' gen'lam riden by hos-back on de ole Chattanooga road, wat in de time befo' de wah, pass middle-ways trough dis yar plantation. W'en dis gen'lam wat I speakin' uv, cam whar I was a crawlin' jus' inside de fence, he dun see me, an stop, sayin': 'How'dy, Auntie, for wat you go dat-a-way on de groun, wen you a middle-age 'oman?' I says, respecful lik', 'cause o' de rumatis, wat keep me so dese fibe yeah'. Den he look feshinol, an' say dis me: 'You lik to be healed o' dat trubbel'.' An' I say: 'Land-a-Massy! would'nt I, doo.' Den he gib de ordes: 'Tell yo Massa send some boys in de woods to fine hoss-bones wat has ben lyin out two yeah, an bring a big sackful home. Put dem in de bigges' wash-kittel on de place, and bile dem hard two day an' night, den put de licker in a deep tub, wot you can sot in an fill wid moh hot watter up to yo neck, so wahm till it mos bile yo, den yo sot in dat tub, wid a wool-blankit roun' unda' yo chin an yo stay dar 'till yo abel craul out yo'self.' So I don jus' lik he tell me, an I got no moh rumatis dese fauty yeah."

On returning from Alabama in the autumn of 1877, my left elbow was so affected by rheumatism as to render it impossible to bring the hand to my chin. A bath of some four hours in a liquor prepared after Aunt Daphnies method affected a cure that has held to this day.

Dr. Wilbur F. Davidson, superintendent of the Mountain Chautauqua, is now engaged closing up contracts with the talent to appear on the platform at the Chautauqua this season, and as soon as some of the preliminary work connected with the publication of the program has been arranged, the copy will be placed in the hands of the printer and the work of printing will be commemced in earnest. The program will be one of the largest in the history of the Chautauqua and the talent to be seen on the platform will be unequalled in brilliancy and intellect.

The form of the printed program will be quite different from that of former years, when a ten page cumbersome publication was issued. This year it will be in the form of a thirty-two page booklet with cover. The entire program with illustrations will be contained therein. Of the 32 pages sixteen will be used for the announcements and program proper, while the other sixteen pages and cover will be at the disposal of hotel proprietors, merchants and other desiring to utilize them for advertising purposes. Already some ten pages have been purchased by the business men of Oakland and the Park. The program will be printed at this office. Those desiring to buy space can secure rates by making application to THE REPUBLICAN either by mail, in person or by telephone.

The edition of the program will be 15,000 copies.

SUNNYSIDE

Rev. Manges, of Oakland, on last Sunday morning preached to the Red House congregation. The congregation was unusally large and gave the best attention to this able divine, while he delivered a very instructive and impressive discourse. We are always delighted when Rev. Manges preaches for us, which he occasionally does in the absence of the regular pastor.

We are very much grieved that Rev. Rose, owing to illness, couldn't return to this charge. He has very acceptably ministered unto us for a part of the last two years, and we all like him, his make-up being such that our young people were easily influenced by him. Under his ministry the church was strengthened, many being added to its membership, with bright prospects for more to follow.

Some of us who have daughters of marriageable ages were grievously disappointed to recently learn that Rev. Rose will, in the "leafy June" marry one of Pennsylvania's fairest daughters. "It might have been otherwise.

Very recently Rev. Koser, a young minister of near Philadelphia, Pa., was chosen pastor for the Red House, Eglon, and Texas congregations. The young man comes to us well recommended and we feel certain that his labors will be appreciated bya people who will give him a hearty welcome and a hearty support.

As Charles Broadway Rouss used to say: "It isn't the man who makes the most fuss in bizness, but it is the man who advertises in his home paper who in the end gets the trade and who plezes his patrons. Sho me a man who advertizes and ill sho you the man who is successful."

Mr. J. L. Echart, of Mountain Lake Park, has been at work on the streets of Oakland for several days past with a road machine and six horses, cleaning out the gutters and rounding the roadways up in a systematic manner. The work done by Mr. Echart is satisfactory in every respect.

Rev. J. B. Shoup, of Bittinger, was the guest on Monday of Rev. and Mrs. E. Manges. On the day previous Mr. Shoup had conducted religious services at a point located north of Swanton when several young men became engaged in a wrangle, resulting in a number of blows being struck. The matter has been laid before the State's officers here and arrests are likely to follow.

The Ravenscroft Lumber and Manufacturing Company, which was recently organized by some local people, will open offices in the new Ravenscroft building on or abont the 10th inst. The services of Mr. "Jack" Moore, now in the employ of W. A. Liller at Keyser, have been secured and he will take active charge of the clerical work of the new company upon the above date.

Capt. Robert H. Gordon, of Cumberland, who has been quite ill for the past two weeks suffering with an attack of the grip in an aggravated form, came up to Oakland Monday evening and will remain here for a period extending well into the present month for the purpose of recuperating his health. He was accompanied to Oakland by Mrs. Gordon, who will remain here until this afternoon, when she expects to return home.

Mr. Charles Liller, the tonsorialist, is the owner of a bearing lemon tree upon which at present these are some fifty or more lemons in various stages of development, ranging from the buds to fruit nearing ripeness. One of the large lemons was accidentally knocked from the tree on Tuesday by a passer-by. This specimen measures thirteen inches in circumference and weighs 17¼ ounces. It is perfectly formed and almost ripe. The numerous blooms on the tree exhale a delightful fragrance which may be detected in all part of his establishment.

Messrs. Eckles & Devries, lessees o the Oakland Hotel, have a large force of hands at work cleaning up the hotel and grounds. The work will be prosecuted right along until the house is open for guests, which will be June 15th. Mr. Devries, with his wife, are now here and will superintend the improvements being made. A portion of the electric light equipment belonging to the property has been shipped to Baltimore for repairs and as soon as it is returned the electric lighting apparatus will be tested thoroughly so that all other alterations necessary along this line may be made before the season begins.

At the offices of the trainmasters on all of the divisions of the Baltimore and Ohio railroads, the forces are busy making up the division time cards for the spring and summer schedule. It is one of the most difficult tasks that the men in this department have to contend with during the entire year and the time for getting to work on it is not looked to with any degree of pleasure. It is expected that the new schedule now being arranged will become effective on May 24. It is understood that there will be but few changes from the present arrangement and that the time of the trains arriving at and departing from Oakland will not be materially changed.

TRUSTEES' SALE OF VALUABLE
Mineral Lands
In Garrett County, Md.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Garrett County, sitting in Equity, bearing date the 3rd day of May, 1905, and passed in a cause standing as No. 1328 Equity on the docket of said court, wherein Gertrude C. Jeffers and others are plaintiffs, and George Warnick and others are defendants, the undersigned Trustees appointed by said decree hereby give notice that they will offer at public auction to the highest bidder on FRIDAY,

The 26th Day of May,

1905, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., in front of the store house of Andrew Mullin, in the town of Bloomington, Garrett county, Maryland, the property mentioned in and directed to be sold by said decree consisting of

Military Lots Nos. 96 and 97,

containing 50 acres each, situated, lying and being near said town of Bloomington, Garrett county, Maryland, and commonly known as

"The Henry Warnick Upper Place,"

About one-half of said land is cleared and under cultivation: the balance is in timber, and said property is underlaid with valuable veins of coal and is convenient to the West Virginia, Central and Pittsburg Railroad.

The surface of the said land will be offered separately from the minerals underlying the same, but the trustees reserve the right to sell both minerals and surface together, whichever will result in the greater benefit to the parties in interest.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by the decree, one-third cash on the day of sale, one-third in six months and one-third in twelve months from the day of sale, the deferred payments to bear interest from the day of sale, and to be secured to the satisfaction of the trustees, or the entire purchase money may be paid in cash, at the option of the purchaser or purchasers.

The Judiciary Is the Balance Wheel of American Government

By Justice JOHN M. HARLAN of the United States Supreme Court - - -

THE judiciary, it is safe to say, is the balance wheel in the complex machinery by which the American government system is operated. It is well for liberty that our American government rests upon the consent OF THE GOVERNED, a principle which is the foundation rock upon which our free institutions MUST rest.

But, vital as this principle is, equally fundamental and vital is the doctrine that the judicial department must IN ALL ESSENTIAL RESPECTS be separate from, coequal with AND INDEPENDENT OF the other departments of government. Our fathers recognized the fact that the accumulation of all powers in the hands of one branch of government or in the hands of one set of men was of the very essence of despotic government; hence by the constitution, with a few unimportant exceptions, the legislative power of the United States is distinctly vested in congress; the executive power with equal distinctness is vested in the president of the United States, and, with like distinctness, the judicial power is vested in the supreme court and such inferior courts as congress may from time to time establish.

The duty to enforce the constitution rests equally upon the courts of the several states and the courts of the Union. In NO OTHER country do the courts hold any such relations to government as exist under the American system.

In Philadelphia, in 1775, the Presbyterian synod, then the highest court of the church, convened and in a pastoral letter addressed to the church, which was read from every Presbyterian pulpit in the colonies, urged its members to stand by the rights of the people and AID IN VINDICATING those rights against the aggressions of the British government.

Turning to the American constitution and to the statutes enacted for the purpose of giving effect to the judicial powers of the United States, we find that the HUMBLEST citizen can be protected in EVERY RIGHT given to him by the supreme law of the land. It is a government by representatives, although the people are the source of its power. The court stands, and, we may hope, will forever stand, as an insuperable barrier against arbitrary power IN WHATEVER FORM EXERTED and remain as it is now, the final judge as to the scope and effect of the constitution.

HERE, AND HERE ALONE AMONG ALL THE NATIONS, IS THERE THE FULLEST GOVERNMENTAL RECOGNITION OF THE RIGHTS OF MAN AS MAN. THE CONSTITUTION IS RACE BLIND AND COLOR BLIND WHEN IT DEALS WITH THE INHERENT RIGHTS OF MAN.

"I might swim for it," suggested Tucker with the accent of one who knows the impracticability of what he suggests.

"You might fly for it," retorted Nan Carroll, "for all the good it would do. You should have tied the boat."

"You forget," he pleaded, "that I only came last night and have not yet had opportunity to become familiar with the tide here. How was I to know that you had a regular Bay of Fundy tide here?"

"If you knew as much about geography as you do about some things," she hinted darkly, "you would know that this is the Bay of Fundy tide. It doesn't come in as a tidal wave, but it rises as high."

"If I ever get back to Lubec," he groaned, "I'll get a coast survey map and won't go for a row without it."

"If," she quoted. "Why, we've simply got to get back to Lubec. What will they think at the hotel if we don't?"

"They'll think we have eloped," he responded cheerfully. "It wouldn't be such a bad fate."

"Each for himself," she cried angrily, stamping a tiny foot. "I believe you did it on purpose."

"If you were as hungry as I am," he pleaded, "you'd never believe that."

Suddenly reminded that she herself was famished, Miss Carroll sat down on a convenient rock and began to cry softly, a proceeding which served to intensify Tucker's discomfort.

He glanced ruefully at the canoe fast disappearing on the tide and scanned the shore to see if it offered any hope. Apparently they were as thoroughly lost as though they were on an island in the Pacific instead of three miles from a summer resort. It was Tucker's first experience with a land where they built steamship docks two stories high because of the fall of the tide from the Bay of Fundy, and he had supposed that when he had drawn the canoe well up on the shelving bank the long rope in the bow could not possibly be needed.

Now that the damage was done, it was useless to worry about it. The next thing to do was to seek some means of escape. He turned to Nan, who was still sobbing, though every moment anger at Dave's apparent neglect replaced her tearful thoughts. Having got her into all this trouble, the least he could do would be to try and comfort her.

He threw himself down beside her. "Nan, dear," he cried, "don't take it so to heart! It will come out all right if I have to swim over to the mainland and steal a boat."

She rose in all her five feet five of injured dignity. "I do not see, Mr. Tucker," she said coldly, "that the situation should permit the levity you assume. It may be all right for you, but a woman's fair name"— Her sobbing broke forth afresh at the thought of what might be said.

Tucker but added fuel to the flame when he protested. "We are as good as engaged, Nan. I don't see what there is to worry so much about. We can attract some boat's attention before it gets too dark anyway."

"We are as good as engaged," she protested. "We never will be engaged. I don't care what happens, I'll never marry you."

"What's the use of taking on so?" he demanded. "You told me last winter that at the end of the season you thought"—

"Do you suppose I thought then that I'd think what I think now?" she cried hysterically. "Do you suppose that I imagined that you would abduct me to a desert island to force me to marry you? Never!"

Wisdom coming to him, Tucker said never a word, but let the fit of hysterics wear away. In the meantime he improvised a signal with his white flannel coat and a branch. This looked more promising to Miss Carroll, and she was even smiling as she came toward him. "It's all right, Dave," she said as she stood beside the signal.

"And you will marry me?" he asked eagerly, his hand reverting to her last hysterical declaration.

"I knew that was what it was," she blazed forth. "Don't you dare come near me." She seated herself a hundred yards away, and for another twenty minutes Dave reflected upon the uncertainty of women in general and of the woman he loved in particular.

"ARE YOU MAN FRIDAY?" DEMANDED NAN.

Old Phil Knew a Hog.

P. D. Armour the first never bothered himself over the selection of Christmas presents for men in his employ. His invariable expression of good will was a suit of clothes, and some of his men had new suits every Christmas. One year he asked all the men in the office of one branch of his business to order suits and send the bills to him. Most of them contented themselves with good business clothes, but one young man decided to adorn himself sumptuously at Mr. Armour's expense. He ordered himself a frock coat, waistcoat and trousers that set his employer back near a hundred dollars. Mr. Armour paid the bill, and then he sent for the brash Solomon in all his glory.

"I have decided to dispense with your services," he said. "You have evidently misjudged me. I should think you would have known that I've been in the packing business too long not to know a hog when I see one."—Washington Post.

The Evolution of a Name.

Two men who happened to be journeying across a western state in the same railway train became so well acquainted with each other that when they neared the station where one of them was to get off they expressed their mutual pleasure at having met and exchanged business cards.

One of the cards bore this inscription: "Geoffrey D'Arneille, Attorney at Law, Williamville, O."

"Williamville?" said the other man. "Why, I lived in that town when I was a boy!"

"Well, that is a coincidence! I was born there and have lived there all my life."

"I used to play with a boy named Jeff Darnell. Maybe you know him."

"Why—er—I ought to know him," said the other, looking somewhat confused. "That was my name. Sorry I can't talk to you longer. This is my destination. Goodby."

Too Much Exercise.

A man may exercise himself into uselessness. So much has been said in recent years of the importance of exercise that every one admits it save now and then a wag, like Senator Evarts of New York, who once said that he owed his long life and good health to the fact that he never took any exercise. Many a youth in taking the exercise that pleases him discovers that he has great skill at tennis or baseball, bicycle racing or foot racing, hurdle jumping or handsprings, and the temptation is strong to neglect other matters for the development of the particular physical facility with which he may be endowed. When he yields he usually degenerates into a professional athlete. Physical development becomes the end of his endeavor, when it should be merely a help in fitting him to do his work in the world.—Youth's Companion.

The Man Who Makes
A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

Lee Turns on His Pursuers

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

April 6-8, 1865

[Copyright, 1905, by G. L. Kilmer.]

AFTER evacuating Richmond and Petersburg the night of April 2 and 3, 1865, Lee marched with the troops under his immediate command in the Petersburg lines westward along the railroad running to Danville, Va., the point which President Davis had selected as the new capital of the Confederacy. General John B. Gordon's corps formed the Confederate rear guard, and General R. S. Ewell's corps was the last in Lee's regular column. General Longstreet led the vanguard.

General Grant and General Meade set out from Petersburg on April 5 to follow upon Lee's heels with three army corps, the Second, Fifth and Sixth, led respectively by General Humphreys, General Griffin and General Wright. The Federal Army of the James, under command of General Ord, marched westward on a more southerly route than that followed by Lee and Grant, hoping to intercept the Confederate retreat. Meanwhile Sheridan, with the cavalry column, struck out still farther west to get between Lee and Danville.

General Gordon's men kept up a running fight with the pursuing Federals, particularly at the crossings of streams and the passes over ridges, but the march was continuous, Grant's advance moving rapidly with skirmishers and artillery. This pursuit by the Grant column lasted all day the 6th, ending at night at Sailor's creek, fourteen miles ahead, where an important action closed the heavy fighting of the campaign. The operations on the front of the line began on the morning of the 6th. General Longstreet's corps had been pushed on in advance of Lee's army and during the night of the 5th had reached Rice's Station, on the South Side railroad, between Burkeville and Farmville. This brought him in front of Ord's Army of the James at Burkeville. Fitz Lee's Confederate cavalry was close up with Longstreet's. Sheridan was in the vicinity.

General Ord, who believed that Lee was marching down the Danville road on Burkeville, sent out a detachment of two regiments of about 500 men and his headquarters cavalry, eighty strong, under Colonel Francis Washburn, to intercept Longstreet's column. Colonel Theodore B. Read of Ord's staff led the enterprise. The Confederates were the command of General T. L. Rosser and numbered about 1,500. When Rosser saw Read's column moving around Longstreet's flank he started in pursuit and overtook it about midway between Rice's Station and Farmville, some distance west of the railroad. Read had posted his infantry along the edge of an oak forest. Rosser sent a dismounted column led by General Munford against Read's front and a column in saddle, led by General Dearing, to make a flank attack. General Washburn then led out the eighty cavalrymen and charged Dearing and engaged him in a hand to hand fight. According to Rosser, all of the Federal troopers were killed, wounded or captured. Rosser charged upon the infantry and drove them through the woods, killing Read in the fight. The infantry then raised the white flag. Read had failed to destroy the bridges, but his stubborn action had alarmed the Confederates, and no forward movement had been made by Longstreet. Rosser returned to Rice's Station and found the men of Ord confronting Longstreet.

[illegible] made a change of programme by which his army was to avoid Burkeville and cross the Appomattox at High Bridge and Farmville. This drew the corps of Anderson, Ewell and Gordon in the same direction. On the morning of this same day Sheridan had directed General Crook, who commanded the cavalry of the Army of the Potomac, to move to Deatonville, and ordered General Merritt to follow with the Shenandoah cavalry corps. Crook found the Confederates passing westward through Deatonville and attempted to seize one of their trains. He was repulsed by Anderson's troops, and when joined by Merritt a second attempt was made. Ewell's troops were now coming up, and Anderson, aided by Ewell's advance, repulsed Crook and Merritt.

Anderson came to a stand at Sailor's creek, a tributary of Appomattox river, in front of the Federal cavalry. His line had a general direction east and west as the armies were marching. Crook and Merritt failed in several attempts to penetrate the Confederate line. On the east Ewell was up to Anderson and was followed closely by the Sixth corps. Ewell formed on the left of Anderson. Gordon, who was closely pursued by Humphreys' Second corps, turned off to the right or north before crossing the creek. This left Anderson and Ewell to withstand the cavalry and Wright's Sixth corps. The Sixth corps opened the battle, which cost Lee 7,000 men and many good officers whom he could ill afford to lose at that stage. Among the Confederates captured were Ewell, Kershou and G. W. C. Lee, son of General R. E. Lee.

The Confederate corps under Gordon and Humphreys' Second Federal corps had gone too far to the right, down Sailor's creek, to take part in the battle between Anderson and the Federal cavalry and between Ewell and the Sixth corps. Humphreys' men had moved all day within sight of Gordon, maintaining the most of the way a "neck and neck" race. Encounters had been frequent, but so orderly was the Confederate retreat that a good battle front was kept up, and the Federal attacks made very little impression.

Gordon's march was kept up all night, and the troops reached Gainesville, placing the Appomattox between them and their pursuers. At Farmville the Confederates were rationed with provisions that had been sent up by rail.

After passing the Appomattox, which was accomplished during the night of the 6th at the two crossings, High Bridge and Farmville, Lee placed guards at the bridges and set out toward Appomattox Court House up the river. On the Federal side the Fifth corps moved up the Appomattox to Prince Edward Court House. Merritt's cavalry also went up the river on the south bank. Ord's army and Wright's Sixth corps moved to Farmville and found that Lee had destroyed the bridges. Crook's cavalry division moved in advance of Ord and Wright and, fording the river, moved rapidly in pursuit.

Colonel Gregg, whose brigade was leading Crook's column, soon met the enemy and became heavily engaged. Heth's Confederate infantry formed on his front, and Fitz Lee, with Rosser and Munford, attacked him front and flank, driving back the brigade. Gregg and a number of his men were captured. Crook was now ordered out westward along the Lynchburg railroad toward Appomattox. Sheridan's men had not yet crossed the river. Humphreys' corps started forward in pursuit of Gordon at daylight on the 7th and reached High Bridge just as the enemy was giving the last stroke to the work of destruction. The railroad bridge, crossing a wide marsh on piers sixty feet high, was on fire, and a redoubt that served as a bridge head for the wagon bridge was being destroyed by explosives. The division of General Barlow led the Second corps, and its energetic commander sent a force at double quick and drove off the Confederates at the wagon bridge.

General Humphreys, who was on the ground, and Colonel T. L. Livermore of his staff led a party of men to the burning railroad bridge to save it from destruction. As soon as Barlow's men attacked the Confederates at the wagon bridge the latter were re-enforced, and on being driven off at this point they rallied at the railroad bridge and attempted to defeat Colonel Livermore's men. A sharp skirmish ensued, the Confederates being underneath on the ground, while the Federals were above, putting out the fires. The structure was saved with the exception of four spans on the northern or Confederate side. Barlow's men now dashed across the wagon bridge and drove off all opposition and hastened toward Farmville. General Humphreys, with the divisions of Nelson A. Miles and De Trobriand, moved along the roads toward Appomattox Court House.

Lee's retreat was delayed the whole of the 7th of April by the activity of Humphreys, who harassed the Confederates along the Appomattox route westward. Under cover of night Lee set out on his last march, reaching Appomattox Court House about 8 o'clock on the evening of the 8th of April. Suddenly a dash of Federal cavalry from the south gave warning that the foe was across his front. The new force was Merritt's cavalry, which the detention of Lee at the Appomattox crossings on the 7th had enabled to execute a flank march. Crook's Federal cavalry was in the vicinity, and before the morning of the 9th Ord's column and the Fifth Federal corps arrived. Humphreys was close upon the Confederate rear guard, consisting that day of Longstreet's corps, General Gordon leading the vanguard. Lee was beset on all sides. Sheridan stood across his front on the west, the three Federal corps under Ord, Griffin and Wright were strung out south of him along the railroad, and Humphreys was closing in on the east. That was the military situation the morning of the historic 9th of April, 1865.

POLLY'S CAREER

By Izola Forrester

Copyright, 1905, by Izola Forrester.

"If you would only speak to her, Murray, it might do some good. Her father and I have tried our level best to discover a glimmer of ambition or talent in her, and she hasn't an atom of either. She's nothing but a girl."

Mrs. Allan's hands fell on the wide arms of her rocker with despairing expressiveness. The colonel nodded his head soberly and sympathetically, as befitted the solemnity of the moment.

"She's still very young, isn't she?"

"She's the youngest of all. Bess is thirty, Louise nearly twenty-five and Florence is twenty-one. But look at them! Each one is established in her chosen profession and winning success."

The colonel was silent. Remembering some of Bess' poems, Louise's patients and Florence's copies of old masters, he did not feel that either affirmation or denial was called for.

"THAT'S JUST WHAT I DO FEEL, COLONEL HARTWELL—A SPECIAL PREDILECTION."

"And at eighteen they had all decided definitely what they wanted to make of themselves, while Polly—Murray Hartwell, when I asked Polly this morning if she had even the vaguest sort of an inclination toward any occupation in the world, what do you suppose she said? She told me that she hoped some day to be the mother of as many charming daughters as I had, and if they were half as much worry as mine were she thought she would have occupation enough. Murray, are you laughing at me?"

The colonel leaned his head back and laughed heartily in spite of the accusing, reproachful stare of Mrs. Allan's eyeglasses.

"It's just like Polly to say that," he explained. "And, by Jove, I believe she means it too. If I were a little younger—say thirty years—I'd have a try myself and encourage her in her chosen career. By Jove, I would indeed, Cousin Sarah! Polly's a mighty pretty, level headed little girl, and I'll be bound she's a good cook."

"If it were Jack's career that was at stake you wouldn't turn a serious problem of this kind into a joke. What if his only ambition in life were to be married?"

The colonel's face sobered suddenly at the thought. Jack—debonair, twenty-two-year-old Jack—married!

"But it's absurd, Sarah. Jack's a man. It's different. One expects such ideas in a girl's head, the same as a taste for ice cream or rose color or matinees. But Jack is ambitious and talented and well started in his profession now. By Jove, I'm proud of the boy—I am indeed. He's a fine fellow. Takes after his dad. But married?" The colonel leaned back his head and took another laugh.

"Why, if the young rascal even suggested such a thing I'd fire him back to college or send him down to the mines to work off an attack of romance on the brain."

"And yet you censure me for desiring something better for Polly than mere marriage." Mrs. Allan's tone was aggrieved. "I thought surely that you would understand and sympathize with me, Murray, and your influence might possibly direct Polly into making some sort of a choice."

"Wait a minute." The colonel rose from his deep chair near the fire. There was the slam of the front door and the sound of quick, light steps in the hall.

"Come and get warm before you go home, Jack," called a voice. "There's a fire here in the study."

The long, dark green portieres parted, and Polly stood in the doorway, tall, blithely youthful and pink as a rosebud where the wind had teased the color to her face. There were snowflakes clinging to her big brown hat and to her furs, but she was merry eyed and happy, suspiciously happy, the two in the study thought.

"Hello, dad." Jack's face looked over her shoulder. "Awful glad you're here. We've been for a trot along the drive, Polly and I."

"I thought that you were upstairs studying with Bess, Polly," said Mrs. Allan, "but as long as you are here you may come in. The colonel and I have been talking of your career."

Polly drew off her long brown fur stole and trailed it meditatively along the edge of the rug at her feet. The colonel coughed and realized that he was expected to speak on the subject. He beamed down upon Polly paternally. He had always liked Polly somewhat better, privately, than Cousin Sarah's more talented daughters.

"Of course you are too young to—to understand your own capabilities and—and any leading talents which you may possess, Polly, but you must not give up or be discouraged. Some of the great geniuses of the world only discovered their gifts at middle age."

"Well, it's a pity some of them didn't die young," said Jack cheerfully.

The colonel ignored the interruption and looked at Polly. He felt the approving attention of Mrs. Allan's eyeglasses.

"But if you can consider the question of a career or should feel any special predilection"—

"That's it." Polly nodded her head until the snowflakes scattered in raindrops from her hat. "That's just what I do feel, Colonel Hartwell—a special predilection."

"For what, in the name of sense, Polly Allan?" Mrs. Allan leaned forward in amazement.

"For Jack." Polly smiled assuredly, and slipped her hand into the one that sought it. "He's going to be the object of my career."

There was a tense silence. The colonel stared frowningly at Mrs. Allan, and Mrs. Allan looked back at him with conflicting sensations. The paramount one was a small but solid sense of amused satisfaction in the colonel's utter discomfiture.

"Shall it be college or the mines, Murray?" she asked.

The colonel squared his shoulders. He had met honorable defeat before and could face it like a soldier and a gentleman.

"Neither, madam, neither. Seeing, as it is, Polly and her career are at stake, I give my consent and wish her all success."

Jack stretched out his disengaged hand.

"You blessed old dad!" he said, and the colonel had the honors of war.

Wanted a Big "Bar'l."

A newspaper tells the story of a storekeeper in a country town who, after twice telling a young man that he had no "onions," reverted to the matter after the customer had gone. "I declare," he said, "I do' know but what it was ingans that feller wanted!"

A similar tale is told by a young woman who, being in search of a barrel to catch rain water, applied to the village innkeeper.

"Have you a hogshead that I could buy?" she said, with the careful enunciation that she had learned in childhood.

The innkeeper shook his head.

"Not any sort of hogshead?" she asked, with gentle persistence. "I thought you must have a good many."

"I wonder what set you thinking that?" said the landlord, looking as if he considered her demented. "I haven't kep' a single hog for ten years back, and when I did keep 'em I never had any call for their heads."

It was the young woman's turn to look horrified.

"Oh, I don't know anything about hogs' heads!" she said excitedly. "I want a hogshead, an old molasses hogshead or something."

The landlord looked at her, and light dawned at last.

"I believe you mean you want a hugshud," he said, smiling broadly. "You step this way and take your choice of what I've got."

A Very Funny Joke.

"The head of our firm had a trying experience one Fourth of July," said a commercial man. "He thought he would play a funny joke on his family, so a day or so before the holiday he bought one of those candy boxes made in imitation of a cannon firecracker. He secreted this in the pantry, where he thought it would be safe.

"But his little son, about eight years old, discovered the firecracker and also discovered that it was filled with candy. He helped himself to the contents and finally, finding the box empty, he made way with it and substituted a real cannon cracker.

"Fourth of July came and the head of the family, smiling broadly, came downstairs and placed his big firecracker in the middle of the breakfast table. Then, regardless of his wife's expostulations, he touched a match to the fuse, never thinking but what it was the candy box on the table.

"His son and heir astutely vanished from the scene about this time. In about thirty seconds there was an explosion that wrecked a once happy breakfast table, and one hour later the worst spanked boy in [illegible] had sobbingly confessed to an irate father why the joke had failed."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Old Time Dentistry.

In the early days of dentistry a hickory plug was put into the cavity to fill the space where a tooth ought to be. This plug had to be gently pounded into its desired position. Old Judge Peckham was somewhat addicted to strong language, and when the dentist began his work the judge indulged in some classic comment. As the tapping of the plug continued he threw all dignity to the four winds of heaven, and his language became decidedly "more forcible than elegant." When, however, he arose from the chair, after what seemed to him an interminable period of agony, he pulled out all the stops in his vocabulary for a grand climax. The impression on his listener seems to have been deep and lasting. As the judge passed out the dentist grimly remarked to a waiting patient:

"Wasn't it beautiful? It wasn't really necessary to pound half so long, but I did so enjoy his inflection that I almost pounded the hickory plug into splinters. Wonderful command of language the judge has!"—National Magazine.

ANOTHER TEST WELL

Will Be Bored by the Piney Run Oil and Gas Company.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Piney Run Oil and Gas Company held in Baltimore one day last week the old officers were re-elected for another year with Mr. Patrick E. Finzel, of this county, general manager and one of the board of directors.

After the election of the officers had been held the stockholders decided to continue prospecting for oil in this territory and instructed its manager to begin operations at once at a point on Piney Run, near Finzel, this county, and work in accordance with the order will begin at an early date. The new test well will be put down in Garrett county, instead of across State line in Pennsylvania as were the two wells prior.

Mr. Finzel, the manager, is still hopeful of results and his many friends admire his grit and determination.

SIX SCHOOL HOUSES WILL BE ERECTED

By the Board of School Commissioners in Garrett County.

At the meeting of the Board of School Commissioners for this county held on last Friday action was taken with reference to the erection of six new school houses in various localities in the county, the advertisement for bids for the work appearing in another column of this paper to-day.

The school buildings sought to be erected will be located as follows and will consist of one room each, plans and specifications for which may be seen at the office of the Board in Oakland:

Dodge, in District No. 14; Resh, in District No. 2 near the James Resh place; Shade Run, in District No. 3, near Aaron Beachy's; New Germany, also in District No. 3; Chestnut Grove, District No. 4, and Dodson, in District No. 13.

The Board will meet on the 18th inst. at New Germany to select the site for the proposed new building and will also examine the location at Dodson on some other date and if necessary to accommodate the pupils at that point a two room building will be erected.

The Board, among other business transacted at its meeting, appointed trustees for the various schools of the county, making but few changes.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

"It pays to advertise" is a fact that no one attempts to dispute. Messrs. C. M. Rathbun & Sons, of this place, had circulars printed at THE REPUBLICAN Printery and mailed them over the territory their business should cover. Result, increased business. One order of about $75 came in from an unexpected source, also a number of smaller orders. These new customers did not know that the firm handled the goods described in circulars. Of course, it is needless to say when you have printing done, have it correct and in style—the way THE REPUBLICAN Printery does its work.

Mr. C. Robb, of Allegheny, Pa., spent the latter part of the week with his son at this place. The family will summer at the Park, having secured rooms at Mr. Wm. Custer's home.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Cuppett drove down to Friendsville on last Saturday morning, where they spent several days visiting friends.

Judge T. H. Cuppett, of near Hoyes, visited this place last Saturday.

Mr. Jack Barnard, of near the Park, made a business trip to Piedmont and Bayard Saturday and Monday last.

Chas. Washington and family have returned from Fairmont, and moved into their home at Loch Lynn.

Mr. James Burley, who spent the winter at Moundsville, returned to Loch Lynn the latter part of last week. He expects his sister to come to this place this summer.

Mrs. Mollie Fout, nee Hayes, has rented the Allegany House, and is putting it in first class order. Mrs. F. has been one of the most successful and satisfactory boarding house keeper s in the Park. She is a pleasant lady; feeds wel l and keeps the house in inviting order

Richardson's Furniture Bazaar is open for business, with a full line of goods.

Among the visiters at the Park the past week were Capt. Prichard, of Mannington, W. Va., Mrs. M. J. H. Groves, of Fairmont, Mr. S. Hinkle, of Weston, W. Va., who were here to get their summer homes ready for occupancy.

Among the cottagers who came to the Park the past week were Dr. J. G. McLain's family, of Wheeling; R. G. Richardson and family, of Piedmont; M. Laffey, of Floyd.

Mrs. Margaret Clark, of Carmichael, Pa., has rented the Walton Home, and will open it for boarders in June.

Supt. Long's family came up from Keyser last Thursday and have moved into the Association office building for the summer.

Miss Louise Waters, of Fairmont, W. Va., is a guest of Miss Vernie Schrock.

Last Friday at midnight, Mr. Joseph A. Spiker, one of our oldest and most respected citizens, died. He had been sick but a few days. He was 81 years and six months old. Mr. Spiker was born at New Germany, Jan. 14, 1824, and was married Jan. 6, 1844, to Miss Sallie Hershberger. He was a member of the U. B. church. He leaves a widow, eight children, thirty-nine grand children, and twenty-seven great-grand children. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Cunningham, assisted by Revs. Johnson and Hart in the U. B. church, Loch Lynn, and were attended by a very large number of people. The family of the deceased desire to extend their thanks to those who so kindly came to their help during this affliction.

MET DEATH IN MOAT.

Lieut. Moses R. Ross' Tragic Fate at Fort Monroe.

A special from Fortress Monroe, Va., dated the 6th inst., contains the particulars of the death of Lieut. Moses R. Ross, of Addison, Pa., a cousin of State's Attorney Thayer, of Oakland, and brother of Miss Myra Ross, of Addison, who is a frequent visitor to Oakland. The dispatch reads as follows:

"First Lieut. Moses R. Ross, a native of Pennsylvania, graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, and honor graduate of the 1904 class at the artillery school at Fort Monroe, met a tragic death on the reservation at Old Point Comfort early this morning. The officers of the post are reticent in regard to the matter. From what can be learned the young officer was riding a bicycle along the cement walk between the outer rampart of the old fort and the inner wall about 2 o'clock a. m. This walk skirts the moat, which is about thirty feet wide and quite deep.

"It it said that the chain of the bicycle broke and that Lieut. Ross fell into the moat, first striking the walk. It is supposed that he was stunned by the fall and was unable to make any efforts to save himself. A sentinel heard him scream. Later his dead body was found in the water and the bicycle with the broken chain was found on the walk.

"Lieut. Ross entered the service as a private in Company I, Fifth Pennsylvania Regiment Volunteers, and later became a second and then a first lieutenant in the Forty-sixth Regiment, United States Infantry, being mustered out in May, 1901. He received his commission in the artillery corps November 13, 1903. He was twenty seven years old."

MURDER AT HENRY.

Mining Town on Potomac River Scene of Bloodshed.

Henry, W. Va., which is separated from Garrett county by the Potomac River, was the scene on Sunday afternoon last at 4.30 o'clock of a murder, the victim being Giovanni Dicarella, an Italian, who was shot by one of his countrymen in a drunken brawl. Immediately after the fight the murderer fled bareheaded toward Thomas and is yet at large, although Deputy Sheriff Kimball, of Grant county, has been diligent in trying to apprehend him.

Other participants and witnesses of the fight were arrested and taken to Gormania where Justice Aronhalt gave them a hearing but without gaining any information as to the cause of the shooting.

NATIONAL HOTEL AT GRANTSVILLE

Famous Old Hostelry Under Management and Control of Mr. Chas. A. Bender.

The famous National Hotel at Grantsville, originally erected away back in the early forties, when the National Road was the artery of trade between the Ohio Valley and the Eastern seacoast, has been transferred to its new owner, Mr. Charles A. Bender, by Mr. C. M. Livengood, who operated the hotel for more than twenty years, the transfer of control having been made on the 1st inst., when Mr. Bender assume active management of the property. Mr. Livengood retiring from the business and removing from Grantsville to his farm near the town.

The hotel is spoken of by Mr. Jacob

THE NATIONAL HOTEL.

Brown in his "Miscellaneous Writings" as having been built in the year 1837 by Henry Fuller, who removed to that place from Salisbury, Pa., and was the first house with an exception or two erected in the town. Under Mr. Livengood's ownership of the property it was remodeled, much of the original building being pulled down and another of more modern construction built upon the site.

The picture shown with this article conveys but dimly the appearance of the building and its surroundings.

Mr. Bender, the new proprietor, is a genial, accomodating and industrious young man and his many friends wish him success in this new venture.

WORK ON CITY BUILDING BEGUN.

Excavating Being Made for Basement —Structure Will be Roomy.

Work on the excavation for the basement of the proposed new city building was started on Monday morning by Mr. Will Whorton, who has the contract, with a large force of men.

The basement will be about six feet deep and will extend beneath the entire structure, which will be about 40x60 feet.

The superstructure will be two stories high and on the first floor will be a store room, fire engine room, town lock-up and an office for the police magistrate. On the second floor will be located the Council Chamber, reading rooms for fire department and an office for the Mayor or any other of the public officials.

SHORT RUN

Oats are all sown and farmers are busy with corn and potatoes.

The subsidence of the small-pox scare at Blaine makes our people feel easier.

Our pastor the Rev. Hilbish, we welcome back from the hospital in better health. He preaches here now every Sunday instead of once in two weeks.

Thinking that perhaps some friends might wish the account of the destruction of Judge Daniel Wilson's residence and other buildings by fire recorded in last issue be supplemented by a few more details, I shall give Mr. Wilson's own story: About 11 o'clock Sunday night he woke up and noticed a bright light shining on objects outside his window. Arising and going out to investigate, he saw flames issuing from a geble of the dwelling. He immediately aroused the household and went up into the attic to find the western gable a mass of flames quite a distance from a flue or any artificial heat. This lead to the conclusion that rats were the incendiaries.

The attic was used as a storage room for papers, old clothes and such other articles as were not often used but were very inflamable, so only a glance was necessary to show the futility of trying to save the building. The family set work getting out what they could, but within fifteen minutes the building fell in. Most of the bed clothes, some of the parlor furniture and the drawers from the old family bureau were saved, all else was burned.

The smoke house in the immediate rear of the dwelling caught at the eves and every effort was made to save it. At last the heat became so intense that the whole side seemed burned into flames and the attempt was abandoned, a hole, however, was chopped into its rear and the meat carried out.

Next the granary near the smoke house took fire and was consumed with all its contents, oats, buckwheat, corn, chop, about 300 sap buckets and 100 syrup cans. Under it was the cellar where potatoes, canned fruit and all sorts of provisions were burned.

About 100 feet south of the burning buildings stood the old house, an immense log structure preserved on account of its being the birth place of the Wilson family. In its time it was the finest dwelling in the surrounding country, logs forty feet long being used in its construction. Mr. Wilson used it as a repository for everything of a bulky nature, such as cultivators, plows, cidermill, forge, etc. He also had stored in it twelve thousand shingles. It caught from flying embers and burned to the ground with nothing saved but one bunch of shingles.

All seemed to be cool and half clad, some barefooted, they worked like bees saving everything possible. Mr. Wilson says he didn't think he was excited, but after the fire he discovered that he had on two pairs of trousers

The loss cannot be exactly calculated, but it amounts to over 2000 above insurance which was but $750, Mr. Wilson wouldn't care so much if he could pay the damage and have it all back like it was; but he dreads the worry and delay of rebuilding and replacing everything.

The family is temporarily quartered until the granary can be replaced. There they will move into this and the dwelling will be rebuilt.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Rafter, of Blaine, were visiting Judge Wilson Sunday viewing the ruins.

Mrs. A. E. Harvey is visiting at Deer Park.

Mr. Jas. H. Wilson spent Sunday at Ryan's Glade.

Mrs. Martin Sharpless, one of our most esteemed ladies went to Wildell, W Va., Monday where she will go to housekeeping. Her husband is foreman of the large yard of the Wilson Lumber Co.

Mrs. J. H. Moon was visiting her parents here last week.

Girls you remember the warning given you in a preceeding issue against the boys of this section who have the driving craze? Well the campaign is on. Alex Wilson opens it by taking the fathers on long drives. Remembering the old saying about "salting the old horse," we congratulate him upon his diplomacy.

Milo Wilson is out. He planned a conquest for Saturday and Sunday over about Hartmansville, but before he started he heard the object of his efforts is to be married this coming Thursday. The effect is distressing, all enthusiasm has waned and he seems reconciled to that fast approaching state of existence so dreaded. If he would be stirred, we would say remember about the quality of the fish still remaining in the sea and make another cast.

Scott Harvey's new buggy has just arrived. It is the fanciest ever seen and you will do well to be a willing occupant. If in some of your wind-splitting dashes, your hat gets the turnedup part before, or your locks get to playing wiggle-waggle with the breeze, just stop him. The polished panels make a good mirror in which to doctor up your disheveled appearance.

Among those good at walking you where you want to go is the leathery planed, broad-toed HICK.

Free Tuition in St. John's College.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Visitors and Governors of St. John's College, Annapolis, it was determined to offer a free tution scholarship to each of the High Schools of the State, including the Oakland High School.

These scholarships are to be awarded to the boy who stands highest in the graduating class, or, if he be not willing to accept it, to the next in order of standing. The appointment is to be made by the principal of the school.

In granting these scholarships the Board of Visitors is actuated by the desire to bring the college into a closer relation with the system of public education in the State.

Jesus Prays For His Followers

Jesus puts a period to His ministry with a prayer. It is the climax to all His preaching. The circumstances are pitiful. He is at the edge of Gethsemane, at the foot of Calvary. Yet there is no note of gloom or weakness. There is not even a cry for help.

One word in the middle of the prayer is really the key to it—"For their sakes." It is a prayer of intercession. As a high priest He approached the majesty of heaven. The priest of the old dispensation carried the twelve tribes upon his bosom, graven in the precious stones of his breast-plate. The Priest of the new dispensation carried the holy apostles upon heart. There is infinite dignity in His attitude. It is so remarkable that John breaks his custom and refers to the comparatively small incident of the upturned face. There is the repose of soul incident to the consciousness of a holy work thoroughly well done. The note is one of triumph. He presents to His Father the men whom He trained for Him.

The marvel of this prayer is that each part of it seems complete and separate, but in a moment one pours all its content and force into the next and so on until the very heights of heaven are reached. The prayer for self is only made that it may be merged into a prayer for disciples, and that in turn for Church, and that for world.

It has been called the glorification prayer because of its first petition, "Glorify Thy Son." It relates to His own person. Yet there is no element of selfishness in it. He wishes only to reflect the glory of the Father, in order that through this reflection as many as possible should know the Father as the true God. The "It is finished" of the cross is an echo of this obedience, which completes to the last detail the work given by the Father, forms the basis of the petition which follows.

Jesus moves now in His prayer from self to disciples. The beginning and end of three years' ministry is compassed in fewest possible words. The commanding purpose was to make a number of chosen men acquainted with God and with Himself as a Divine Messenger. In this He had been superbly successful. His heart's desire and prayer now is that the work of His ministry may be conserved. He does not pray in general terms for the world. He prays specifically for these men. He is conscious that His own exit from the world is very near. They are to be left behind with the invaluable deposit of His teaching. They must be kept inviolate or all is lost. It would be a superlative blunder to ask that they be taken out of the world with Himself, for the very purpose of their training was that they might remain as the almoners of knowledge and grace—kept from evil, in the world, but not of it, sanctified through truth.

The prayer takes still another sweep, its final and widest. When the Intercessor cries, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them which shall believe through their word." It is a petition for the Church which is to be. Incidentally it reveals the fact that there was no shadow of doubt upon Jesus' mind but that His disciples would make converts. As the prophets said he would, He "sees His seed," and prolongs in them His own shortened days. He prays for the unity and concord of the Church. And again, incidentally, He indicates that the realization of this ideal of harmony is the convincing argument to the world of the Divinity of His commission.

The prayer is without "amen." But there is no evidence of interruption. Instead of being broken off, it flowers out in radiance and fragrance. There is a beautiful vision which Jesus entreats for the men whom God had given Him. His heart's desire is that they may see His glory. The cress is the golden period to this incomparable prayer. The last affirmation is that He will declare His Father's name, but His ministry ends that hour. There are no further opportunities of preaching. How, then, will He make declaration? Is it not by his obedience unto death?

The Teacher's Lantern.

Some difficulties confront the reader. The prayer is the best misunderstood of Jesus' utterances. Spener believed it beyond comprehension. He quaintly said, "It goeth beyond the measure of faith which the Lord is wonton to impart to his disciples during their pilgrimage." For this reason He never preached upon it or attempted an exposition of it; but when He was dying had it read to Him three times.

* * * * *

At the same time it is among the best admired of Jesus' sayings. It is declared to have incomparable and crystalline simplicity, majestic repose, luminous transparancy of thought, one flowing from other, forming a connected development, each explaining what precedes or being a further deduction. The inwardness of the East, the home of religion, seized and expressed with the precision of the West, the home of science.

* * * * *

The analogy of the form and order to that which is commonly called the Lord's Prayer has been pointed out, but in point of fact the divisions are not mutually exclusive. They interpenetrate, so that it is possible to find several different arrangements, all of which may be correct.

* * * * *

But this lily of a prayer may be lost in the efforts to dissect it. It is far more important that we should discover the spirit of the petition than its mechanical framework.

* * * * *

A crisis creates the prayer. It is no litany intoned at an arbitary hour and by an ecclesiastic designated to perform the service It is the voice of need which can not pour itself into any form, however venerable, and which must, perforce, extemporize.

* * * * *

Jesus stands with the little group of men to whom He has made the greatest possible revelation, and whom He expects in their turn to be revealers of His truth. He must needs leave them. If they fail, all is lost. He knows what it means to be "in the world," and the world against one. He cries to heaven for these chosen men, that they may be kept and sanctified, and their unity preserved.

* * * * *

Getting out of the world, even if it is to "go to heaven," is not the most desirable of things. If the disciples had made their exit at the same time Jesus made His, the world would have been unblessed by their testimony.

* * * * *

Jesus was sent, and we are sent. An analogy maintains between the Master and ourselves. There is a Divine idea to be worked out in every human life. This lifts us above dumb and driven cattle. Jesus' example of fidelity to the uttermost is our inspiration.

A Knight Who Fought For Lady's Smile

By ELIZABETH M'CRACKEN

Copyright, 1905, by Elizabeth McCracken

THE knight sat on a small folding chair of the kind used in some kindergartens. The lady had, in fact, had the chair brought up to her room from the settlement kindergarten room for this very purpose. The lady sat opposite in a low rocking chair, holding a lank yellow kitten in her lap.

The knight was young in years, but patriarchal in experience and point of view, as his mother said, with a pride but feebly echoed by the long suffering college settlement family.

"He be only twilve, sure; but, faith, who'd be knowin' it? He be thot forward!" He was forward—prominently forward, distinctly forward, constantly forward.

The name of the knight was Warren Flanagan, but he was commonly known as Wary, and one of the younger residents of the settlement once almost shattered the dignity of the institution by declaring that it was an excellent name for him because one had continually to be wary in dealing with him.

"He is the black sheep of the settlement," the head resident explained to the lady the day of her arrival, when she had asked, in that ignorance which is bliss, "Who is that interesting looking boy with ragged clothes and searching blue eyes?" The head resident continued: "He teases the kindergarten children, fights with the other boys, is cruel to animals, torments the girls—and wears us to shadows. He is in two clubs, and when they meet—well, life becomes strenuous. We don't like to expel Wary. The settlement is for the benefit of just such boys. We try to help him, to refine him, to make him different, but he is the black sheep of the settlement."

"The black eye would be more apt a name," one of the residents murmured. "Wary always has one."

The head resident and the other members of the family smiled pityingly and indulgently when the newest, the youngest, resident—the lady—said, "Have you told him how unchivalrous all this is?" The lady had pale brown hair and dreamy blue gray eyes, and her name was Ellen—Ellen Douglas—but her own family, and within a week the settlement family also, called her Elaine.

"My dear," said the kindergartner, "we have told him how uneverything else it all is, but we never happened to remember chivalry when remembering Wary. The two don't combine. They would explode with surprise if they were brought within speaking distance of each other," she explained, with a fine disregard for mixed metaphors.

The lady was the newest and the youngest, but her blue gray eyes were not altogether dreamy, and she was of the clan of Douglas.

"Then, if you've tried everything else, I shall try chivalry," she said.

"'If at first you don't succeed, try, try again,'" laughed the family. "Try anything you like," they said. "You won't touch Wary. He is invulnerable, like Achilles."

"Achilles had one vulnerable spot," mused the new resident. "I shall first get acquainted with Wary and then try chivalry." She announced this double intention to the family. They again smiled pityingly.

"Oh, you'll get acquainted with Wary soon enough," they said darkly. The new resident did. The day after her arrival, as she emerged from the house with a list of names, the owners of which she was commissioned to invite to the next mothers' meeting, she met Wary, in the act of ringing the doorbell. His cotton shirt was torn and dusty, his brown feet were tanned and dusty, and his black eye was blacker than usual. He had, in fact, just completed a victory, and while waiting for other worlds to conquer he was improving the moment by ringing the settlement bell. The sudden appearance of Ellen, in her exquisitely dainty pale brown linen and floating blue scarf, did not overpower him. Wary was accustomed to such visions of delight known as "settlement ladies."

"Hello," he observed. "I ain't seen you afore."

"I came yesterday," said Ellen. "How do you do?" She held out her hand. It was pale brown, too, and strong, and on one finger of it was a ring set with a turquoise. Wary grasped at the hand. He took the measure of the lady with his bright eyes. "You seem to be all brown an' blue," he observed.

Ellen smiled, but she said, "Why were you ringing the bell?"

"Jes' for fun," Wary said and smiled in return.

"It isn't nice of you. It gives some one the trouble of coming to the door an for nothing."

"Wasn't you already at the door?" Wary queried.

"Ye-es, but if I hadn't been"—

"But you was, you see. An' fac's is fac's. Women never thinks o' that," said Wary, who was forward.

Ellen looked into the shrewd, mischievous face, with its unfaltering eyes. "You understand what I mean," she said gravely. "And"—Wary had this effect upon her—"women think of more than you imagine!" With this remark this very, very young settlement worker swept down the steps and went to make her calls. Wary stared after her.

"Well, I'll be jiggered!" he elaculated. "She ain't jes' like the rest. She talked like—I was a man."

As she turned into the street on which the settlement was situated, after the last call, he was forcibly brought again to her mind and before her horrified eyes. The portion of the street in the vicinity of the settlement was in a state of wild excitement. The settlement steps were crowded with little children, chiefly girls, and the curbstones were lined with older children, chiefly boys. In the middle of the street stood, or, more accurately, danced and cavorted, Wary before two bedraggled cats, whose tails were tied together with an old red necktie. Ellen, for an outraged moment, stood rooted to the spot. Then, with her lips in a line that would have done credit to the Douglas to whose race and clan she loved to think she, Ellen Douglas, belonged, she approached Wary. With one hand she seized him. "Untie that string!" she said.

"'Tain't no string."

"Untie that—string!" said Ellen Douglas. And Wary untied the red necktie, which technically was a string.

One of the cats rushed furiously away, but the other, a yellow kitten with green eyes, cowered up to Ellen. She took it in one arm. With the other hand she held Wary. "Come with me," she said. She expected Wary to resist, but he did not. He even opened a cheerful conversation.

"You'll git yourself all smutched up with that cat," he said sweetly, as they entered the hall of the settlement.

Ellen deigned no reply. She led the way up to her room. Ellen had but one chair. She did not offer her couch. She sent Wary down to the kindergarten room for a kindergarten chair. Wary seated himself in the kindergarten chair, and Ellen sat opposite with the kitten.

"Wary," Ellen began, "it surely cannot be necessary to tell you that it is positively wicked to be cruel to animals." She stroked the yellow kitten, and she met Wary's eyes squarely. "How could you do it, Wary?"

"It was fun," Wary said. "My, how they yowled!"

"But, Wary, it was cruel. It couldn't be fun."

"You ever tied two cats' tails together?" Wary inquired.

Ellen's voice was inflexibly stern. "No, I never did," she said.

"Then how do you know it ain't fun?"

At a similar point the family usually dismissed Wary, but Ellen did not. "Wary!" she said reproachfully.

Wary was unprepared by experience for this. He wriggled, but he replied, "Women's got such upside down ways o' arguin'."

"I am not intending to argue with you, Wary," Ellen said. "I only ask how you could be so cruel to those cats, and so thoughtless to people too? I hear that you are. Why are you, Wary?" She lifted her eyes and looked gently and steadily at the boy. "Why are you?"

Wary was but twelve, in spite of the fact that he was forward. He was having a new experience, and he found himself unprepared for its handling. He had frequently been rebuked; he had frequently been asked, "Wary, how could you?" but this questioner was the first to ask and then to expect and to desire a reply. The vulnerable spot of the child of the streets is acutely responsive if one can but touch it. This girl was unconsciously trying to understand Wary, and Wary happened to need to be understood more than he needed to be made different. He had had so many monitors—and so few friends.

"Why do you, Wary?" Ellen persisted.

Wary regarded her frankly. "Well, nobody cares wot I do—'less it bothers 'em, so I jes' do wot I thinks on an' have fun."

"But, Wary, that doesn't excuse you. You ought to do right because—it is right," said Ellen, a trifle uncertainly.

"Don't people care wot you do?"

"Yes," said Ellen. "Oh, yes. There are people who do so much—people who are fond of me."

"Don't you care whether they cares? How 'd you feel if nobody cared, 'less it bothered 'em?"

"I care, Wary," Ellen said earnestly. "I haven't known you long, but I do care. Do you think knowing it will make any difference to you?"

"I dunno," Wary said, staring at her. "I'll kinder have to git used to thinkin' it."

Ellen looked at him in silence. Then she smiled. She suddenly recollected her announced resolution to try chivalry with Wary. She impulsively unfastened the blue scarf that she wore and held it out to the boy. "In old, old days," she said, "when men fought they were called knights, and they didn't tease animals and little girls, and they didn't fight for fun."

"Wot did they fight for?"

Ellen smiled dreamily. "They 'fought for lady's smiles.'"

"Kinder silly of 'em," said Wary scornfully.

"Oh," Ellen hastened to explain. "They didn't fight just for that. They fought for good causes—to protect weak people and save poor people, and it pleased the gentle ladies, and they smiled."

"Did the knights git in much fightin'?"

Ellen was moved to a faint smile by the knight's question. "Not any more than was needed," she said. "And each knight wore—something belonging to the lady who was his—his best friend, to remind him to do things that would be good and kind. Now, Wary, I'll be your best friend, and you be my knight, and here's my scarf. You can wear it for a necktie, and it will remind you. Now, won't you? I'll lend you some stories about the other knights, so you can see how they did. Won't you? Just think how I shall enjoy having a knight!"

Wary stared at her with wide eyes. She was at least different from the other people of his experience. He took the pretty blue silk scarf in his dirty fingers. Then he smiled, with the mischievousness still in his eyes. "I'll think 'bout it," he said guardedly, but he allowed Ellen to tie the scarf around under his torn collar.

"Women is queer," he meditated as he bounded down the stairs, "but I wish I'd been along o' them knights with plumes an' swords an' fightin' sich as people liked an' didn't git scandalized over."

During the fortnight that immediately followed Wary reflected upon more than he imitated these knights. He wore Ellen's blue scarf; he read Ellen's book of knightly tales, and both scarf and book became rumpled and soiled, and still did people get scandalized over Wary. They continued to fight for other cause than lady's smile, and the lady was in despair, and the family, it must be confessed, humanly triumphant.

"You know how much good the other Elaine's token did Lancelot," they said, but the spirit of the twentieth century was in this lily maid, and she said, "You told me yourselves, 'If at first you don't succeed, try, try again.' I'll give him one more day, then I'll take back my token."

"Elaine, fair Elaine, fly to your casement window!" called the kindergartner excitedly early next morning before breakfast as Ellen stood brushing her pale brown hair. Ellen dropped her brush and flew to the window. In the street stood Wary, a tin can under one arm and a dog under the other.

"You hold the dog," Ellen heard him say to another boy, "an' I'll tie on the can."

The boy held the dog, and Wary seized the dog's tail; then he fumbled in his pocket. "Ain't got no string," he said ruefully.

"Take yer tie," said the other boy.

Wary quickly untied the blue token of Elaine, while Elaine groaned and the family were mercifully silent. Wary grasped the can; he grasped the dog's tail, and then he stopped. He let the can fall. "You l'in let the do' go this time," he said. "The tie—'ain't strong enough." He stuffed it into his pocket and turned away. Ellen threw up her window.

"Wary! Wary!" she called joyfully. She smiled and waved her hand.

Wary glanced at the window, turned fiery red and ran around the corner. The lady, whose remote ancestor was the Douglas slain in Scottish lay, had highland flings in her usually undancing gray eyes when, some moments later, her hair no longer flying, she met the family at breakfast.

Unhappily knights are not made in one day or even in two weeks. Wary had, figuratively speaking, fought once for lady's smile. He had even enjoyed the smile of the lady, but nature and habit were strong, and the next day he tied the can to the dog's tail with a piece of twine. Ellen saw the deed; the family saw the deed. Ellen said not a word; she ran downstairs, out the door and down the settlement steps.

"Wary!" she called. "Untie that string!" Wary dropped the can, and away the poor tormented dog sped, followed by Wary's companions. "How kin I?" the knight said to his lady.

"HOW COULD YOU?" SHE SAID.

She did not reply. "Come here," she said, and Wary went. He was unembarrassed and not very defensive. The lady was different, but he had known her not more than two weeks, and two weeks is so short a time in which to hope to change very materially a boy of the streets. The blue scarf was wound round Wary's neck. Ellen untied it with firm hands and removed it.

"A knight who is cruel isn't a knight at all and can't wear my token," she said gravely. She turned without another word and went into the house, bearing her maltreated blue scarf. Wary was amazed.

"Well, I'll be jiggered," he exclaimed, with a long whistle. "If she don't care! Who'd er thought it? If I'd knowed she cared! But, land, who kin live up to women?"

During the next week he was seen less than usual. He was less forward than usual. Ellen's conscience smote her. She wished that she had not taken away the token.

She watched for him anxiously. She was perversely glad to see him one day, his old time gayety recovered, as momentarily she came to her window to lower the shade. About half an hour later as she came downstairs the bell rang furiously. "That's a Wary ring," said one of the family boldly from the library door. "Don't answer it, sweet lily maid."

"I'm going out anyway," said the lily maid. And she bravely turned the door knob. The door burst open, and Wary, more torn, more dusty, than usual, with one eye swelling to an alarming and purple size, scrambled in, dragging a howling, terrified small girl by the hand.

The small girl was as disheveled and as dusty as Wary, and Ellen was attired for calls not to be made in the neighborhood. But, regardless of her crisp and spotless white pique and white gloves, she gathered the small girl in her arms and indignantly turned upon Wary.

"Wary, how could you?" she said in a tone that would have melted a heart of granite.

Wary stared at her with his uninjured eye. He sighed. "Women ain't got no idea o' things," he said. "I ain't hurtin' her. She had a cent, an' a feller grabbed it an' hit her, an' I jes' grabbed her an' pounded the feller—beat him, too—an' got her cent. She's scart to go home, an' I ain't got no time for girls, so I brung her here. You talked a lot 'bout goin' 'bout redressin' human wrongs, an' then w'en I does it you gits mad an' says, 'Wary, how could you?' There ain't no countin' on women!" The knight regarded the lady plaintively.

"Wary," the lady pleaded, "please forgive me. You see, I didn't know. It looked"—

"Women orter learn not to go by looks," said the knight sternly.

"Of course they ought," agreed the lady. "I won't again, Wary. Now, please forgive me or I can't smile, when you've fought for lady's smile too." She smiled now and held out her hand in its white glove.

Wary relented and took it. "Well—all right," he said nobly.

"Kin I have back the blue tokin now?" he said eagerly. "She'd 'ave been pounded awful if I hadn't rescooed her."

The tears came into Elaine's eyes, and she was obliged to dry them before she replied. "This very moment!" she said. She took the two children to her room. She bathed the small girl's face, and she put witch hazel on Wary's eye. Then she found the blue scarf.

"It is so—old, Wary," she said. "Wouldn't you like me to get you a new one just like it?"

Wary shook his head. "I sorter want that one, 'cause it was the one I had first," he said.

Some fresh tears came into the lady's eyes. "You'll keep it this time, won't you, Wary?"

"You bet!" said the knight. "It won't be so easy, though, 'cause w'en I sees a dog I jes' aches ter tie a can ter its tail—but I'd jes' as soon git along 'thout doin' it, if you find it so awful." This shows Wary's forwardness, but as he went home with the small girl he gave voice to a sentiment which shows it most and best.

"Women is queer," he said. "They's got no eye for fac's, an' they cry when you'd expect 'em ter smile. They's that unsartin there's no countin' on wot they'll do! But they's sorter nice, an' they's that tender they takes all the fun outer tyin' cans ter a dog's tail an' sich like. They sorter makes a feller want ter do wot they expects, so's not ter disap'int 'em. Wot they expects cuts more ice than wot they thinks, if they only knowed it."

,water's Wife Was True to Her Promise

OSIAH," said Mrs. Chugwater, "what do you do at those lodge meetings you attend twice a month?"

"You don't expect me to tell you that, do you? Our proceedings are secret."

"A man oughtn't to have any secrets from his wife. What is the password?"

"I've taken a solemn obligation never to communicate that to any outsider."

"I'm not an outsider. A man and his wife are one. You have a right to communicate it to me."

Mr. Chugwater reflected.

Well," he said, "if I repeat the password to you once, will you promise never to ask me to say it again?"

"Yes."

"And you will never tell anybody else?"

"Never."

Whereupon he rapidly uttered the following astonishing word:

"Magelliellinellikazenalottiaruvistualizabellilliwinkamanakalilooleroo."

Mrs. Chugwater kept her promise. She never repeated that password to a living soul.—Chicago Tribune.

One of the Others.

While visiting my sister yesterday afternoon my little nephew returned home from school rather late, and his mother, wishing to ascertain the cause, said to him:

"Why are you so late, Harold? It is after 4 o'clock."

The boy, with doleful face, replied:

"Bob Hastin's and some other fellers were kept in."

His mother, with a perplexed look, said:

"Well, what did that have to do with you?"

"Oh, I was one of the other fellers."

No Misrepresentation.

"See here," exclaimed the irate purchaser to the typewriter agent, "didn't you tell me the machine you sold me was so strong you could drop it out of a window, go down and pick it up and go right to work on it?"

"I did."

"Well, it fell out of the window accidentally yesterday, and I had to send it to the repair shop."

"Well, you could have gone right to work on it yourself if you'd known how to set about fixing it, couldn't you?"—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

A Hint.

"No," she says firmly, looking down at her little boot.

Rising from his knees, the rejected lover heaves a sigh.

"Alas!" he says. "And you were my one perfect dream."

With a mute gesture of farewell he is about to leave, when she calls after him shyly.

"But—well—but, you know, dreams go by contraries."

He returns, taking the ring from his pocket as he comes.—Judge.

A Good Guess.

Miss Smart—What is the most curious thing in the world?

Mr. Wise—A woman who isn't curious.

Fun For the Little Angels.

My little cousin Herbert, who is four years old, was standing by the window watching it rain. Suddenly turning around, he asked, "Mamma, who makes it rain?"

"Why, God does," exclaimed his mother.

"Oh, what a lot of fun God must have turning on all those faucets!" cried the little fellow.

Nonsupporting.

Biffers—No, madam, I feel that I cannot support the present administration.

Mrs. Biffers—I'm not surprised at it, Mr. Biffers. I've lived with you now for seventeen years, and I've come to the conclusion that you can't support anything or anybody.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Useful Speeches.

"A man in public life should learn to say 'no.'"

"Yes," answered the magnate. "And then there is an investigation on he should learn to say 'I don't know.'"—Washington Star.

The Auto Car.

Mary had an auto car,
It went with gasoline,
And everywhere that Mary went
The auto car was seen.

She tried to go to town one day
While early morning glowed;
When nighttime came the auto car
Still stuck there in the road.

This made the farmers laugh and jeer
To see the auto balk.
If Mary ever got to town
She doubtless had to walk.

Do you want to live where the climate is mild the year round—where labor is never oppressed by stress of weather, and where animal vitality is never lost by mere conflict with cold?

Do you want to live in a region where the resources are more varied than in any other equal area in the world, where the division of great ranches affords a fine opportunity to get a small farm that will assure you a competence?

Do you want to live where, with a minimum of labor, you can grow profitable crops of grapes and small fruit, oranges, lemons, olives, prunes and almonds, alfalfa and grain, where crops are sure, business is good and capital easily finds profitable investment?

Then go to California, where both health and opportunity await your coming.

Non-breakable fronts are a distinctive feature of Clothcraft coats.

The coat cannot sag. It is hung from the neck and shoulders with an overlapping arrangement of canvas and haircloth which distributes the strain on the same principle that a skilled engineer uses in constructing a truss bridge.

The canvas does not extend to the edge, which must be thin. But the edges of all Clothcraft coats are reinforced with a stay of non-elastic tape. No other ready-for-service clothes have this very essential feature at Clothcraft prices.

Clothcraft collars are all padded and felled to the coat. They fit closely and "stay put."

The pockets are thoroughly stayed with an extra thickness of strong thin elastic. There is also a narrow strong tape running from the pocket corners to the sleeve seam thus putting part of the pocket strain on this seam.

These are only a few of many well thought out, scientific and practical points in Clothcraft.

Clothcraft Clothes are made for looks and service and for the money give more of both than any other brand.

MR. JAMES S. LAKIN'S CANDIDACY FOR CONGRESS.

THE REPUBLICAN has for the past week been closely watching the Republican press of the Second Congressional District of West Virginia, adjoining Garrett county to the south, east and west, and has carefully noted the advance our former fellow-townsman, Mr. James S. Lakin, is making in his candidacy for Congress. To say that the press of the district has warmly welcomed his candidacy is putting it mildly indeed. In fact, the influential papers of the entire state appear to vie with one another in saying nice things about him, and there has already been column upon column published congratulatory to this prominent young Prestonian whom our people all know so well. Among the leading papers of the state that welcome the candidacy of Mr. Lakin as a solution to rather a complex problem in the Second District of West Virginia, i. e., the uniting of several factions of the party, are the Wheeling Intelligencer, Wheeling News, Parkersburg News, Parkersburg Dispatch, Parkersburg State Journal, Morgantown Post, Morgantown Chronicle, Clarksburg Telegram, Grafton Sentinel, Martinsburg Herald and World, all leading dailies, and the Cumberland News, a leading Western Maryland daily that enjoys a wide circulation up over the West Virginia Central. All these papers, together with every Republican weekly paper in the district, are staunch in their support of the candidacy of Mr. Lakin, and already they are busily at work in his interest.

The Morgantown Chronicle published the other day a speculative table giving the votes of the several counties as between Mr. Lakin and Mr. Davis, the Democratic nominee, and basing its estimate upon the most conservative prediction, and giving the Democratic candidate the benefit of every doubt, it shows that Mr. Lakin will have a majority of at least two thousand in the district.

The people of this section of Maryland are indeed glad to see this young gentleman advancing so rapidly up the ladder of fame, and when the vote is counted on the sixth of June there are many people in Garrett county, and particularly in Oakland, where Mr. Lakin is so well known, who will very gladly telegraph him their hearty congratulations upon his election to the United States Congress to fill a vacancy created by the resignation of so distinguished a gentleman as the Hon. Alston Gordon Dayton, now a Federal Judge of our adjoining state.

To readers of THE REPUBLICAN across the border of West Virginia we can only say that we have known Mr. Lakin well and favorably for many years past, and we heartily commend him to the Republican party as an able, intelligent, successful young man, who merits every support of the party, and who, we believe, will very ably represent his district in Congress if elected to the place.

THE REIGN OF FRAUD, CRIME AND LAWLESSNESS.

Organized society is the result simply of an agreement among men to live together in peace under rules which protect the weak, restrain the strong, guarantee to every man possession of his property and the exercise of all rights which do not trespass upon others men's rights. The Americans who hold phenomenal and stupendous wealth owe the security of their riches to the existence of this system, which is also the protector and defender of the life and property of the humbest member of the community. Any movement away from perfect obedience of this sense means the complete disruption of the bond that holds men together, so that every man's hand is against every other man.

The distinctively criminal class has always been anarchical, for if all men were like the criminals, the social organization would be completely disrupted. There has been and always must be warfare on the part of society against the law-breakers who do not feign respectability or obedience, but sometimes it comes to pass that men who have criminal propensities are ingenious enough to devise means of violating the social obligation—means so safe and so subtle as to enable them to maintain an appearance of respectability. None the less, however, they are anarchists. If everybody should try to do that which lawbreakers succeed in doing, the reign of law would come to an end.

A thief is a man who takes the property of another man without compensation. When he picks a pocket or robs a bank, nobody has any doubt of the character of the performance, and the law collars him and locks him up. But to take a man's property from him by help of a secret railroad freight rate, or by fraudulently underselling him until he is bankrupted, is to accomplish the pick-pocket's purpose by another method. In both cases the thief gets the goods and the sufferer gets nothing.

Americans of our time have not only observed the more dexterous thievery many times, but they have seen the offender try to put a religious halo about the operations by giving part of the plunder to the church. That giver was a type who, one morning, called down the cellar-way to his boy, "Have you sanded the sugar?" "Yes, sir." "Have you watered the milk?" "Yes, sir." "Then come up to prayers." There is no religion which permits a man to steal his way into heaven. It is indeed more blessed to give than to receive, but when a man has stolen a million of dollars he cannot buy a blessing by giving one hundred thousand dollars to a church.

A part of our social compact if that the majority shall rule. It is the only possible alternative to despotism or anarchy. When, then, certain persons with perfect impunity stuff ballot boxes, or when officers of the legislature fraudulently mark the roll calls, lawlessness has triumphed over law, and the very foundations of the system which shelters us are undermined. The public authorities do not hesitate to silence a howling orator who preaches anarchy on the street corner, but a clerk at the Capitol who falsifies the vote, and the Speaker who connives at it, are anarchists of a much more dangerous kind than the vociferous demagogue. At the very source of law they treat law with defiance and contempt.

The employment of the money accumulated by a life insurance company, not for the advantage of the insured, but for the enrichment of the directors, is a movement toward anarchy. Even more obvious is it that the use for the protection of vice of a police force, which was created solely that it should make war on vice and crime, is anarchistic. The vicious are enemies of society. When the police become the friends of the vicious, the director of the police puts himself upon the level of the lowest criminal. To protect an outlaw is to be an outlaw.

Probably there is no peril in this country that the social organization which is affected by such evils as these will really go to pieces. Sooner or later the mere instinct of self preservation will impel the majority to resume control by one method or another, and to permit the recuperative force which exists in society to assert itself. The longer the delay in the procession of reformation, the more difficult the task must be. The influence of the successful perpetration of crime by Standard Oil magnates, railroad presidents, life insurance directors, politicians and other persons must inevitably be to weaken whatever remnants of respect for law linger in the minds and consciences of people whose morals are not thoroughly sound. There are many persons who obey the law because such conduct is respectable, or because they have fear of punishment. When they perceive that a bold rascal not only escapes punishment, but actually retains his respectability and gets the blessings of the religion if he steals big money, the timid man with weak morals, or no morals, must be sorely tempted to make a criminal venture for himself.

The billows of crime, corruption, fraud and lawlessness are rolling mountain high all over the land and if its progress is not stayed what must be the inevitable result? Bollingbroke, the great historian, has said, "That history is philosophy teaching by example." Let us take warning from the past. In Rome, when Rome was free, her classic people felt the glow of individual pride in the common glory, and abandoned private enterprise to watch by the sacred fire of her altars. With a domain extending from the column of Hercules to the banks of the Euphrates, nothing could have broken her freedom but the degeneracy and corruption of her people. With such a domain as we possess, prouder than Rome ever was, the spirit of liberty and the progress of general prosperity are secure in an eternal home if moral duty, self respect and a proper regard for the legitimate rights and interests of each and every individual is not absolutely ignored and trampled upon. Let us remember that open treason which strikes boldly the sacriligious blow, cannot accomplish more surely its desperate purpose than the quiet treason which loses the citizen in the selfishness of the man, and forgets the national good and the good of the people in the idolitary of individual gain.

Again, all law rests upon the same basis as the law against robbery which the great plunderers have disregarded, and so everywhere, on all sides, there is a decrease of reverence for law generally, and to just that extent the social bond is relaxed, and the dearest things that advanced civilization has given to men are placed in jeopardy.

It is one of the most serious, nay, alarming, signs of the progress of the country toward anarchy that really honest men are not deeply moved by the familiarity of the spectacle of triumphant rascality in American life.

GOOD ROADS MOVEMENT GROWING.

It is hard to understand how any studious man can persuade himself that government aid to good roads is not a national necessity, affecting all sections of the country and classes, and therefore demanded as good public policy. Many of the very foremost men of the country have declared in its favor, and the feeling is constantly growing that it should prevail. Of course, here and there we find it opposed by specious argument and strained interpretations of the constitution, but this opposition cannot stand in the face of the practice of the government in road building many years ago, and at this day in Porto Rico, where we have constructed more highways in the past five years than did the Spaniards in four hundred years; and in the Philippines, where we are building highways every day in the year. There is more serious consideration being given to the subject of good roads to-day than any other that can be named, and as a question fraught with vital concern to the internal commerce of the country and to its religious, educational and social advancement, it is a sure thing that the call for national aid will have to be heard.

It is not the farmer alone who is affected by bad roads; trade conditions are disastrously affected wherever bad roads exist. Good roads are necessary to every vocation and every interest. The cost of bad roads has been so often presented that repetition would not strengthen argument. The main fact is the clear, fact that bad roads are a curse to the nation and disgrace to our boasted Americanism. There is necessity for government aid to better roads and it ought to be extended with the least possible delay. In every civilized country but ours government has fostered improved highways. Wherever improved highways have been built the people are happier and the country more prosperous. In the United States there has been marvelous progress notwithstanding bad roads. We would have progressed a thousand fold more under an improved system of highways. A change is needed here. The common roads should be made adequate to the necessities of the country. There is no special class in the discussion. It is a great economic question, rapping loudly for recognition, and as all the people are involved the government should step in and co-operate with the States in its solution. While many prominent men are now active in support of the Brownlow-Latimer bills for national aid, the people in their primary capacity have a duty to themselves to perform in the matter. Every citizen knows how to press the question on his Congressman. The good-roads camp-fires ought to be lighted in every constituency in the States. The proposition is strong in Congress. Let its friends get to work and make it stronger by direct communication with those we send to reflect the public will in Washington. If the people who have made the government what it is and upon whom it must rely in every crisis cannot be heard in the national councils, then the Cæsars of the day have grown too great on public meat, and we soon shall have fallen upon still more evil times.

FOR BOTH

One disease of thinness in children is scrofula; in adults, consumption. Both have poor blood; both need more fat. These diseases thrive on leanness. Fat is the best means of overcoming them; cod liver oil makes the best and healthiest fat and is the easiest and most effective form of cod liver oil. Here's a natural order of things that shows why Scott's Emulsion is of so much value in all cases of scrofula and consumption. More fat, more weight, more nourishment, that's why.

"THE OLD TIME COUNTRY EDITOR"

Special Reference to a Former Maryland Newspaper Man.

Mr. T. J. C. Williams, formerly of Hagerstown, writing editorially in the Baltimore Sun "The Old Time Country Editor," makes reference to the late John Sneary, for many years the editor of the Weekly Herald and Torchlight. He says:

An advertisement which recently appeared in an Iowa paper is encouraging as indicating that there is still a sphere of activity for the "Jack of all trades." The advertising is as follows:

WANTED—PRINTER, for Country; must be able to Make-Up, Set Ads., do Job Work, run Cylinder and Platen Presses, do Binding and Editorial Work; must be good Vocalist and Musician; permanent position; $9 per week. Apply F. C. BIRDSALL, 401 Opera House Block.

We are convinced that Mr. Birdsall will find some difficulty in obtaining the man he wants even with the inducement of the liberal salary he offers. This is a day of specialists, when it takes a whole array of individuals to make one complete mechanic or professional man. In the good old times, which all old people look back to as the golden age, a shoemaker could take your measure and make a pair shoes. Now it takes a dozen or more to do it. One man plans the shoe and draws up the specifications; another cuts out the uppers; another cuts out the soles; another cuts out the heels. There is a man to sew the the uppers on; one to put the heels on; one to bind, and so on. Not one in the whole line can make a pair of shoes. If you succeed in finding a man who can bind a book it is ten to one that he has a long, gray beard. And so with the doctors. It was not in those golden days necessary to go to a different man for each ailment. The old country doctor had convenient on his shelf a bottle of pain killer for stomach ache, a bottle of eye wash and various surgical instruments and lancets which he was ready to use upon small provocation, and if the patient had the toothache there was the "pullekins," with which the offending tooth could be extracted. The old-time doctor was equally at home with all the organs of the body, and this is as convenient as a department store. Now the unfortunate sufferer must travel from pillar to post in search of the various remedies he needs. He feels bad and goes to the family physican. The family physician takes him to the surgeon, who cuts him open to observe the vermiform appendix. Finding that much slanderer affair in fine working order, the surgeon refers him to the stomach specialist, who applies pumps and things. Then he has to go to the dential surgeon to get his teeth fixed, to the oculist for his eyes. Each organ has its special attendant, as if they have nothing to do with each other.

Like the old doctor, the country editor was an "all-around" man. He could do everything that the advertiser in Iowa requires except binding and music, and often he was a fair musician. It aided him in his business if he could take a leading part in the singing school. He started in life as a printer's devil and learned every branch of the business from making fires, sweeping the office, putting things into the "hell box," washing the forms with lye and blowing the dust out of the cases with a pair of hand bellows.

One of the latest survivors of the old-time country editors died in this State about 20 years ago. He was sole editor and part owner of one of the very best and most prosperous country papers in Maryland. This man set type, printed sale bills on a hand press, wrote all the local news for his paper and all the editorials. The editorials did not abound in classic allusions, there was no rhetoric and few figures of speech. But they told the n brief and simple words and in the most direct and forcible manner the ideas the editor wished to convey. They were forceful and able, and that pa through the medium of his newspaper, was a dictator in his political party. But he never used his power for his own benefit, and it never occurred to him to hold an office. He also wrote all the local news for his paper, usually comprised in three or four columns a week. The stories were told simply, without any "ink slinging" or any introductory chapters such as we often see these days. In addition to all these things he read the exchanges and selected the love story, the jokes and the miscellaneous matter for the "outside." At one time during the Civil War his paper had a circulation of 2,500 copies, which the editor printed on a Washington hand press, making 5,000 impressions. It took several days to do this, and the incessant pulling of the lever made him almost humpback. With all this labor the editor had time to take a conspicuous part in affairs. He was a director in a national bank and attended the meetings regularly. He presided at political meetings, was consulted upon all important matters by the county commissioners, took part in church affairs and discussed politics and the crops with his patrons when they came to pay their subscriptions. He as one of the last of the creditors who referred to himself as "the printer." A notice that "the printer will receive a few cords of wood in return for subscription" would bring him his winter's fuel, and many of the necessaries of life came to him on the same terms. This is evidently the type of man that is needed by the Iowa advertiser. But the race of them is extinct.

KICKED IN FACE BY HORSE.

Mr. Louis Bush, of Eglon, Seriously Injured Monday.

Mr. Louis Bush, of Eglon, well known and highly respected by many Oakland people, was kicked in the face on last Monday afternoon by one of his horses, resulting in the fracture of both his upper and lower jaws and cheek bone, and rendering him unconscious for more than twenty hours. His physicians feared that his sk had also been fractured and as a result his death was momentarily expected. Happily however, the latter injury was not inflicted and now hopes are entertained for his recovery Mr. E. J. Fringer, his brother-in-law, went to Eglon upon receipt of the intelligence of his relative's injury where he will remain several days.

The school children are requested by the Post to assemble at the public school building and march with the scholars of the Normal school to the Post headquarters. The members of the civic organizations are likewise requested to meet at their several halls and arrive at the Post headquarters at ten o'clock and there join the Post and march in a body to the cemetery where the graves of the departed will be decorated as is the yearly custom.

Flowers for the purpose of decorating the graves of the soldiers may be left at Sturgiss' Pharmacy where they will be gratefully received.

Letter to Mr. E. E. Friend.

Dear Sir: The way to buy paint is to go by the name. There is a name never seen on sham paint or weak paint or short-measure paint: Devoe.

There are a hundred different names in paint. Some are sham; some weak; some short measure; and some all three.

If there is another such paint as Devoe lead-and-zinc, we don't know it. There are a few fairly good paints; a few; only one Devoe. A gallon Devoe is worth a gallon-and-a-half of those few.

Mr. Aaron Higgins, of Plainfield, N J, always used 15 gallons of mixed paint for his house. Last spring he bought 15 gallons of Devoe and had 4 gallons left.

Yours truly

Under the provisions of the charter and ordinances of the town Mayor McComas advertises at public auction in this paper today the sale of a yearling heifer which was impounded on last Sunday by Bailiff Sweeney. The sale will take place on next Wednesday at the town lock-up.

The editor of a country paper received the query "Can you tell me what the weather will be next month?" In reply he wrote: "It is my belief that the weather next month will be very much like your subscription." The inquirer wondered for an hour what the editor was driving at, when he happened to think of the word "unsettled." He went in next day and squared his account.

County School Commissioner George E. Bishoff, of Hoyes, informs THE REPUBLICAN that during the winter he fed ten head of stock on ensilage which was prepared and put in the silo last summer. The stock wintered exceedingly well and took on an average of two pounds of flesh each head per day during the five months' feeding. The animals were two year-olds and weighed 1000 pounds each when marketed to one of our Oakland butchers.

The Mayor and Town Council of Oakland, by advertisement printed in another column of to-day's Republican, invites bids for excavating earth and stone on Liberty street between Wilson and Gilmore streets, and also for furnishing and setting of about twelve hundred feet of stone or concrete curbing along the same street. The bids will be opened by the Council on May 16th at two oclock.

LUTHERANS HAVE SECURED SITE.

For Their Proposed New Church—Location a Desirable One.

At the congregational meeting of the members of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, which was held on last Monday evening in the Garrett Memorial church, by a vote of those present the Yellowly lot, located at the corner of Alder and Fourth streets, was purchased as a site for the proposed new church edifice, the price paid being $1800.

The lot fronts 82½ feet on Alder street and 116 feet on Fourth street, running back to an alley.

The congregation also took action concerning the erection of the building by a vote instructing and empowering the official board of the church and the building committee jointly to select plans, contract for and have completed the building at the earliest possible date.

As yet the joint meeting of the two committees has not been held and therefore nothing definite concerning the general plan or the material to be used in the construction of the building can be said at this time.

The location selected by the congregation is central and a very desirable one for the purposes for which it is intended.

Alonzo Evy Pardoned Case.

Gov. Warfield has decided to take up for final bearing, on May 18th, the application for pardon of Alonzo Evy, who is serving a 21-years' sentence in the penitentiary for an attempt to burglarize the German Savings Bank of Cumberland. A petition, favoring the pardon, signed by members of the jury that convicted Evy, and several hundred citizens of Cumberland, has been presented Governor Warfield. In addition to this, Mr. Charles R. Sparks, of Waco, Texas, wrote the Governor that he would give employment to the prisoner, furnishing railroad transportation and money to defray his expenses to Texas if liberated. Mr. Sparks referred Governor Warfield to United States Senators Bailey and Culberson, both of whom sent letters to Governor Warfield vouching for Mr. Sparks' ability to take care of Evy if pardoned.

Epworth League Anniversary.

Next Monday, May 15th, being the 16th Anniversary of the organization of the Epworth League of the M. E. church, the following program will be rendered by the Chapter here in St. Paul's M. E. church, at 7:45 p. m.:

Song No. 9, Pentecostal Hymns; Prayer; Hymn No. 110; Scripture Reading by J. W. Davis; Song No. 113; Address by Rev. Workman, "Origin and Aims of the Epworth League;" Duet, Mrs. J. W. Davis and Miss Susie Littman; Installation of Officers by the Pastor; Reading, Miss Nellie Workman; Song No. 126; Prophecy for the future of the League, by Dr. E. J. M. Button; Social reception and signing the Constitution and E. L. pledge; Song No. 80; E. L. Benediction.

The "Whites" Entertained the "Reds"

The membership and attendance contest recently closed in the Epworth League of St. Paul's M. E. church was won by the "Reds" led by Rev. Workman. By the terms of the contest, the "Whites" of whom Mrs. Dr. Ward was leader, were to give an evening's entertainment to the "Reds".

The entertainment took place at the spacious home of Dr. and Mrs. Ward last Friday evening, when about sixty Epworth Leaguers assembled for a social evening. A brief program was rendered by the "Whites" and delightful refreshments were served to all present. The entire company seemed to feel perfectly at home and as a result when the midnight hour arrived and the company dispersed words of praise and commendation of Dr. and Mrs. Ward were heard on every side.

Dear Sir. The way to buy paint is to go by the name. There is a name never seen on sham paint or weak paint or short-measure paint: Devoe.

There are a hundred different names in paint. Some are sham; some weak; some short measure; and some all three.

If there is another such paint as Devoe lead-and-zinc, we don't know it. There are a few "A" good paints; a few; only one Devoe. A gallon Devoe is worth a gallon-and-a-half of those few.

Mr. Aaron Higgins, of Plainfield, N J, always used 15 gallons of mixed paint for his house. Last spring he bought 15 gallons of Devoe and had 4 gallons left.

Yours truly

Under the provisions of the charter and ordinances of the town Mayor McComas advertises at public auction in this paper today the sale of a yearling heifer which was impounded on last Sunday by Bailiff Sweeney. The sale will take place on next Wednesday at the town lock-up.

The editor of a country paper received the query "Can you tell me what the weather will be next month?" In reply he wrote: "It is my belief that the weather next month will be very much like your subscription." The inquirer wondered for an hour what the editor was driving at, when he happened to think of the word "unsettled." He went in next day and squared his account.

County School Commissioner George E. Bishoff, of Hoyes, informs THE REPUBLICAN that during the winter he fed ten head of stock on ensilage which was prepared and put in the silo last summer. The stock wintered exceedingly well and took on an average of two pounds of flesh each head per day during the five months' feeding. The animals were two year-olds and weighed 1000 pounds each when marketed to one of our Oakland butchers.

The Mayor and Town Council of Oakland, by advertisement printed in another column of to-day's Republican, invites bids for excavating earth and stone on Liberty street between Wilson and Gilmore streets, and also for furnishing and setting of about twelve hundred feet of stone or concrete curbing along the same street. The bids will be opened by the Council on May 16th at two oclock.

LUTHERANS HAVE SECURED SITE.

For Their Proposed New Church—Location a Desirable One.

At the congregational meeting of the members of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, which was held on last Monday evening in the Garrett Memorial church, by a vote of those present the Yellowly lot, located at the corner of Alder and Fourth streets, was purchased as a site for the proposed new church edifice, the price paid being $1800.

The lot fronts 82½ feet on Alder street and 116 feet on Fourth street, running back to an alley.

The congregation also took action concerning the erection of the building by a vote instructing and empowering the official board of the church and the building committee jointly to select plans, contract for and have completed the building at the earliest possible date.

As yet the joint meeting of the two committees has not been held and therefore nothing definite concerning the general plan or the material to be used in the construction of the building can be said at this time.

The location selected by the congregation is central and a very desirable one for the purposes for which it is intended.

Alonzo Evy Pardoned Case.

Gov. Warfield has decided to take up for final bearing, on May 18th, the application for pardon of Alonzo Evy, who is serving a 21-years' sentence in the penitentiary for an attempt to burglarize the German Savings Bank of Cumberland. A petition, favoring the pardon, signed by members of the jury that convicted Evy, and several hundred citizens of Cumberland, has been presented Governor Warfield. In addition to this, Mr. Charles R. Sparks, of Waco, Texas, wrote the Governor that he would give employment to the prisoner, furnishing railroad transportation and money to defray his expenses to Texas if liberated. Mr. Sparks referred Governor Warfield to United States Senators Bailey and Culberson, both of whom sent letters to Governor Warfield vouching for Mr. Sparks' ability to take care of Evy if pardoned.

Epworth League Anniversary.

Next Monday, May 15th, being the 16th Anniversary of the organization of the Epworth League of the M. E. church, the following program will be rendered by the Chapter here in St. Paul's M. E. church, at 7:45 p. m.:

Song No. 3, Pentecostal Hymns; Prayer; Hymn No. 110; Scripture Reading by J. W. Davis; Song No. 113; Address by Rev. Workman, "Origin and Aims of the Epworth League;" Duet, Mrs. J. W. Davis and Miss Susie Littman; Installation of Officers by the Pastor; Reading, Miss Nellie Workman; Song No. 128; Prophecy for the future of the League, by Dr. E. J. M. Button; Social reception and signing the Constitution and E. L. pledge; Song No. 80; E. L. Benediction.

The "Whites" Entertained the "Reds"

The membership and attendance contest recently closed in the Epworth League of St. Paul's M. E. church was won by the "Reds" led by Rev. Workman. By the terms of the contest, the "Whites" of whom Mrs. Dr. Ward was leader, were to give an evening's entertainment to the "Reds".

The entertainment took place at the spacious home of Dr. and Mrs. Ward last Friday evening, when about sixty Epworth Leaguers assembled for a social evening. A brief program was rendered by the "Whites" and delightful refreshments were served to all present. The entire company seemed to feel perfectly at home and as a result when the midnight hour arrived and the company dispersed words of praise and commendation of Dr. and Mrs. Ward were heard on every side.

Political Parties Are Essential In Popular Government

By CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS, Vice President of the United States

REPUBLICAN government was ordained to promote justice, to secure each and all in the FULLEST POSSIBLE ENJOYMENT of equal rights and privileges under the law. Every American must stand before the law upon a plane of PERFECT EQUALITY with his fellow Americans. Our laws must be inspired by a sense of justice. Let us teach the love of justice at the fireside, in the schoolroom, in the pulpit, in the press, in the counting house, in the factory. Yes, teach it everywhere, for WITHOUT JUSTICE GOVERNMENT IS A MOCKERY. Let us safeguard the rights of property; protect that which honest and patient industry has acquired.

BUT, FIRST OF ALL AND BETTER THAN ALL, PRESERVE INVIOLATE THE RIGHTS OF MEN OF LOW AND HIGH DEGREE.

Political parties are essential in popular government. They have existed from the earliest days of the republic, and they will continue to the end. It is of VITAL IMPORTANCE, therefore, that they should be high minded and patriotic; that they should stand for those measures which are wholesome and which tend to advance in the utmost degree the public weal. They should support sound and conservative policies, which are the only sure foundation of industrial progress and of enduring national greatness. We should see that parties are kept as pure as we would have the state. They should not be given over to mere time servers or to those WHOSE ALLEGIANCE IS NOT FIRST TO THE PUBLIC WELFARE. Be good party men, but be patriots first of all. President Hayes very well observed that "he serves his PARTY best who serves his COUNTRY best."

We are not satisfied with our present achievements. We seek a still higher and better destiny. What the years before us shall bring forth no one has prescience to foresee. We face questions of vast pith and moment, and the future holds in its keeping many which are beyond our vision. There will be much need to deal with them as they arise THROUGH THE INSTRUMENTALITY OF POLITICAL PARTIES. They must be met with an eye single to our country's welfare; they must be met so as to advance the fortunes of no mere political party.

THEY SHOULD BE MET IN A MANNER ONLY TO PROMOTE IN THE FULLEST POSSIBLE MEASURE THE INTERESTS OF ALL OUR COUNTRYMEN.

Let us banish bigotry, put aside littleness of spirit, envy and jealousy. They have frequently played too large a part in American politics. Let political parties be broad and chivalrous, generous and tolerant, so as to advance ONLY THOSE things which EXALT mankind.

Lift American politics to a high plane. Let the same ethics prevail in politics which maintain in our INDIVIDUAL affairs. Let no man do in politics what a fine sense of individual honor would not permit him to do in the conduct of his own business. We often hear it said that in politics the end justifies the means. This is unsound. It is a TOTALLY PERVERTED view of patriotic duty. Let us have clean politics, clean men and clean measures.

SUCCESS ACHIEVED UNDER A BANNER UPON WHICH SHALL BE INSCRIBED SUCH PRINCIPLES WILL BE WORTH THE HAVING. IT WILL ABIDE. ANY OTHER TRIUMPH IS BUT TEMPORARY AND WORSE THAN DEFEAT.

Brother Gardner's Spooky Remarks

His Talk on Ghosts, Signs and Sich to Fellow Members of the Limekiln Club Ends With a Warning.

THERE was a feeling in the air as the regular proceedings of Limekiln club drew to a close that its president had something on his mind, and more than one member's face wore an anxious look as Brother Gardner slowly arose and said:

"I deasiah to express a few remarks on a sartin subjeck. It has come to my knowledge dat sartin members of dis club am trubbled wid seein' ghosts an' hearin' strange noises. I have bin told dat Shindig Watkins has received three distinct warnin's so fur dis year, an' dat Kurnel Cabiff can't sleep o' nights from hearin' a death tick in de wall at de head of his bed. Also dat Giveadam Jones am all broke up by death whispers at midnight, an' dat Elder Toots wakes up most ebery night an' sees a spook wid fiery eyes glarin' at him ober de foot of de bed.

"I has further learned dat Brudder Standoff Jackson heard a clock strike thirteen times de odder night, an' he was so affected dat he couldn't go to work next day. He believed it was a sign of a sudden death in his fam'ly. I am told dat Brudder Sawed Off White saw de moon ober his right shoulder de odder night, an' he dun felt so poky ober it dat he had to soak his feet an' go to bed. I learn dat Brudder Waydown Bebee saw three white horses clus together on de street de odder day, an' he at once run fur home wid all his might to see if de baby wasn't dead of colic.

"Only last night I was informed dat Kurnel Kyann Johnsing, second vice president of dis club, sot up all night bekase de fam'ly teakettle sounded a warnin' soon arter supper. It seems to me from what I have heard doorin' de last fo' weeks dat nine-tenths of de members of dis club am nightly spectin' to see ghosts walkin' 'bout deir bedrooms.

"I is now sixty years old, an' I reckon I has had as much experience wid ghosts an' sich as any of yo'. I will admit dat I used to believe in 'em, an' dat for many years I was trubbled in my mind fur fear I would meet one in de dark an' be specrited away. Dar was a time when I would have bet my mewl agin a peck of beans dat ghosts was playin' baseball under my bed ebery night of de year. I lay dar an' heard warnin's an' death ticks an' whispered woices, an' I riz up in de mawnin' feelin' dat I was not long fur dis sinful world. I has bin sittin' up alone at night arter de old woman had gone to bed, an' I has felt de presence of ghosts till de cold shibbers chased deirselves up my back an' made me gasp fur breath. On one occashun I met up wid a spook in de back yard an' got sich a scare dat it took three doctors to bring me to an' save my life. Fur a year arter dey did save it I couldn't be left alone in de house widout two candles burnin' an' three dogs to watch ober me.

"I went frew all I have said, my friends, an' a heap mo', an' den I sot down to figger. I figgered fur days an' days, an' I used up a heap of paper an' brain power, but I finally struck it at last. De result of my figgerin' was about as follers:

"Whenever yo' am six weeks behind on yo'r house rent, yo' may expect to see a spook lookin' at yo' ober de foot-bo'd of de bed. He's dar to inquar when yo' am gwine to settle up.

"If yo' has bin shootin' craps an' lost de $2 de old woman has saved up to buy a pair of shoes, yo'll hear ghostly footsteps all ober de cabin fur three nights runnin'. Yo'll also hear from de old woman seberal times a day fur a much longer time.

"If I had bin sorter walkin' around doorin' de day an' had diskibered a hencoop which promised to pan out well de fust dark night I should listen mighty hard when I got to bed. If I heard a death tick in de wall I should take it to mean dat I'd better let dem twenty-two chickens alone, 'cause deir was a spring gun jess inside de doah of deir coop. If I didn't hear de death tick I reckon I'd chance it, though I'd go powerful slow an' feel all around in de dark fur dat gun.

"If a white man cums along in de mawnin' an offers yo' a dollar fur a day's work, an' yo' stick fur a dollar an' a half, an' continer to sot on de fence 'cause he won't give it, yo'll go to bed dat night to hear strange noises all around yo'. If yo'll listen clusly yo'll make out dat yo' am bein' told yo'd better resign from dis club befo' yo git de grand bounce.

If Samuel Shin, fur instance, should borry $2 of me, which he can't possibly do, as I has had some experience wid de Shin fam'ly, an' if he should fail to pay it back at de time agreed upon, he'd sartinly see ghosts dat night. Dey wouldn't be ghosts from de graveyard, but livin' ghosts—ghosts dat would seize him by de hoofs an' pull him outer bed an' gib him he worst lickin' he eber got. In fack, one of dem ghosts would probably look jess like me.

"My mind am firmly made up dat dis ghost bizness am mostly de work of conscience. De pusson who sees a ghost has dun sumthin' mighty mean an' conscience am trubblin' him. No member of dis club who keeps up his dues, pays his debts an' tries to lib a decent life need be afeared of spooks nor feel anxious about signs. He'll go to bed to sleep as sound as a brick. Spooks won't dun have no use fur him.

"From dis time on I shall have an eye out fur Brudders Watkins, Jones, Cabiff an' Toots an' fur sich odder members of dis club as may take to seein' ghosts an' hearin' warnin's. I don't say dat seein' a ghost will be considered sufficient reason fur expulsion, but it will go a long ways toward makin' me feel sartin dat sich pussons don't reflect no particular credit on a club as a nashunal orginashun. I take notice dat Samuel Shin am anxious to riz up an' ask fur an explanashun of what I said a moment ago—about de Shin fam'ly, an' so forth. He may save his breath. If he don't see no mo' ghosts till he gits $2 outer me, de rest of his nights will be passed in peace. Yo' all have heard what I have had to say, an' I hope dat each an' ebery one will profit by it. At de next meetin' I shall arrange to have bylaw No. 666 so amended as to read dat any member seein' a ghost or bein' whispered to by a spook shall stand accused de same as if he had busted his way inter a public museum an' stolen de sacred skull of Cicero or Columbus. Let us now go home."

Hard Wear.

"I should like to look at a stovepipe hat," said the man who was guided by his wife in his shopping tour.

"He thinks," explained the wife to the salesman, "that he will look grate in a stovepipe hat."

"We have quite a range of styles in them," said the salesman as he flue to open the boxes.

"This one doesn't soot him at all, do you think?" asked the wife when the man had tried on the first.

"I think it is a nice lid," slangily declared the clerk.

"I suppose the high price is because of the skillet takes to make the hat," ventured the husband.

"Yes," answered the salesman, "and then, you see, this hat is not oven ordinary shape."

"I'll take it," announced the husband, "if you'll cash a draft for me."

"The boss wood fire me if I did," replied the clerk.

"Then that puts a damper on the whole scheme," asserted the wife, taking her husband by the arm and leading him away.—Judge.

Charlie's Bright Plan.

"And you told Charlie that he could call upon your father?"

"Yes, mamma."

"Well, he hasn't been to see him."

"I know he hasn't. You see, Charlie is so thoughtful. He doesn't want to spring it on papa too suddenly. He knows how nervous he is. So he thought it might be well for him to go as somebody else—disguised, you know, so that papa wouldn't recognize him. And after papa had exhausted his—his rage on the dummy, then Charlie would come in as himself, and papa would be too weak to refuse him. It's a splendid plan, don't you think so?"

"Do I think so? Well, I think that when your father gets through with the dummy your friend Charlie will be too weak to ask him for anything."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

[Copyright, 1905, by T. C. McClure.]

WHEN Mr. Bowser reached home the other evening he was smiling. As he took off his overcoat he chuckled. As Mrs. Bowser came out into the hall to greet him he burst into a hearty laugh. She had rather expected him to come home that evening and demand to see the gas bill and declare that she was burning too much coal and that there were half a dozen extravagances that must be cut out, and her surprise over his great good nature made her speechless for a moment. Then she asked:

"Has—has anything happened?"

"Nothing so very great," he replied, "but there's a little event to come off in a couple of hours from now that will make even the old cat laugh. Ha, ha, ha!"

"I haven't heard you laugh so heartily in a dog's age. What event is coming off? If you brought that grin all the way home with you folks must have concluded that you had drawn the capital prize in a lottery."

"You don't know Wilkins," said Mr. Bowser as they got seated at the dinner table. "He lives four or five blocks below us and has an office next to mine. He is a tall, lathy gandershanks, and he thinks he's got incipient consumption. He has begun to take exercise to broaden his chest. He—he— Ha, ha, ha!"

"Are you laughing at his consumption?"

"No, of course not. He wants to take boxing lessons with it all, and he came to me today to learn if I knew anything of the art. I told him I could box a little bit, and he's coming up here tonight to get a few lessons. Yes, he's—he's"—

"I don't see where the laugh comes in," said Mrs. Bowser as Mr. Bowser had another fit of laughter.

"Then I'll tell you. You remember when I had a teacher, don't you? Well, one night he hauled off and knocked seven bells out of me, and I carried two black eyes for a week. I have never had a chance since to get even on that, but now it has come. I'll play with Wilkins for a few minutes, and then I'll"—

"You'll choke yourself if you don't look out. What are you going to do to Mr. Wilkins?"

"I'll knock the head off his shoulders. I'll feint with my left and then swing my right, and when it lands on his chin he won't wake up for thirty minutes."

"You won't do anything of the kind. You ought to be ashamed to think of it. If the man is in poor health a hard blow may kill him."

"His health is all right, but he is faddy. And when talking with me he was squaring off and shooting out his left and telling how many men he was going to lick after taking a few lessons. He wants taking down, and I'm going to do it for him. I'll let him tap me three or four times, and then I'll suddenly haul off and—ha, ha, ha!"

"It will be a mean trick if you do," observed Mrs. Bowser. "It seems to me that a man of your standing should be in better business. Suppose it gets around the neighborhood that you are a prize fighter? That would be a nice thing for the papers, wouldn't it? 'Bowser, the bruiser, knocks a tyro out and nearly kills him!' I don't want anything of the kind to happen around this house."

"All right, my dear. I'll treat him like a two-year-old. Only it just struck me that here was a chance to get back and"—

Mrs. Bowser determined to put Mr. Wilkins on his guard when he came in, and half an hour later he rang the bell. He was invited to sit for a few minutes before ascending to the gar- and at a proper moment was told Mr. Bowser sometimes got excited when he had the gloves on and hit harder than he meant to.

"Yes?" he answered. "Well, most men are that way. I know I am, and he will have to look out for himself a little. Perhaps I ought to box him with only one hand."

At this statement Mr. Bowser laid back in his chair and roared, and Mr. Wilkins looked at him in a puzzled way and then said:

"Really, my dear madam, my wife did not approve of my coming up here. She knows what a tremendous hitter I am, and she was afraid I might damage your husband. Perhaps we'd better call it off."

"Hear him!" exclaimed Mr. Bowser as he slapped his leg and chuckled all over. "I was telling Mrs. Bowser that I guessed I had better tie my hands behind my back and let you do all the hitting, and here you are afraid for me! Well, that's funny!"

Mrs. Bowser couldn't make Mr. Wilkins out. He was either an amateur with a heap of confidence back of him or he understood himself and had an object in view. She therefore had nothing further to say, and the men disappeared upstairs. What occurred up there she will never fully understand, as neither man went into particulars. When they had reached the garret and were stripping for the fray Mr. Bowser uttered a chuckle and said:

"Now, Wilkins, if I get to going too hard you must call out."

"Oh, certainly," was the reply, "and I shall expect you to do the same. I shouldn't want to lay you up for two or three days."

"Lay me up! Ha, ha, ha! Say, Wilkins, you are something of a humorist in your way. We'll time ourselves as near as we can for three minute rounds, and if you feel like warming up come for me as hot as you please."

"But I shall be careful not to hurt you. Your wife seemed rather anxious on that point."

"Oh, she did, eh? Ha, ha, ha! By George, but I haven't enjoyed myself as well in a whole year! Are you ready? Then, one—two—three!"

Mr. Wilkins squared off like a novice and used his arms like an old woman, and Mr. Bowser had to stop now and then to laugh. The round closed without anybody having been hurt, and when they stood up for the next Mr. Bowser went in to make it a rattler. To his great surprise his visitor managed to ward or dodge all his blows, but by such awkwardness that it called for smiles all the time. The third round was to be a corker. Mr. Wilkins was not to be murdered outright, but he was to be given some pointers in the manly art to last him all the rest of his life.

"I may strike a little too hard, but you know I told you to call out," said Mr. Wilkins as he stood up to the mark.

"Go right in, my boy, to knock the head out of the cider barrel and don't mind me," replied Mr. Bowser, and then he chuckled deep down in his chest at the crisis that was coming. That right swing of his was due in the third round, and he felt that he must hang on to himself a bit and not break Mr. Wilkins' neck and have a coroner's inquest on hand.

The two mixed things up for a minute, and then Mr. Bowser's golden opportunity came. He saw the opening and swung for it, and he had started to chuckle when the house fell on him. Roof, walls and everything gave way at once, and his last remembrance was seeing the earnest face of Mr. Wilkins before him. The visitor shortly after made his appearance downstairs and said to Mrs. Bowser:

"My dear madam, I am pained to tell you that your husband is lying in a peaceful sleep on the garret floor and that it will be useless to try to waken him for the next quarter of an hour. He won't die of it, but he will know more about the manly art tomorrow. Tell him that I thank him for the pointers he has given me tonight. Good night, madam."

When Mr. Bowser opened his eyes and looked around in a stupid way he smelled camphor and saw Mrs. Bowser bending over him.

"W-what is it?" he asked.

"Nothing much, except that you have stopped laughing."

"But what is it, I say?"

"Hush! You picked up Mr. Wilkins for a flat and set out to knock his head off. Yours isn't quite knocked off, but there's a lump on your jaw as big as a quart bowl. Rest yourself for ten minutes, and then the cook and I will see if we can get you downstairs and to bed without your neck facing around the wrong way." M. QUAD.

HE SAW THE OPENING AND SWUNG FOR IT.

COURAGE THAT WON

.....By Frank H. Sweet

Copyright, 1905, by Frank H. Sweet

Judge Pauls went down the office steps briskly, his face, which a few moments before had been creased into a frown, now beaming with the satisfaction of duty well done. He had forbidden the new doctor, who had no prospects and no faculty for money making, to visit his house any more. From what he knew of Edith and what he had seen in the young doctor's eyes he felt that he need apprehend no further trouble, and the affair had not gone far enough for either of the young people to suffer any heartache.

Dr. Phil was standing in front of an open window in his office, his hands thrust deep into his pockets, gazing out at the judge as he crossed the street and passed on through the field opposite toward the river, probably to see if the swollen torrent was doing any damage to his lands. Then, with the same strong, self contained look which the judge had seen and, against his will, admired, the young doctor turned back into his office.

There was no despondency in his clear gray eyes, no weakening of his square chin. He had fought his way from almost absolute ignorance at twelve in the depths of a coal mine through various situations to one school after another, through college and medical school and hospital practice, until now he was here in an office of his own waiting for the first patient.

There was a large back region of farm and mountain people here, and once he could gain their confidence it would offer him such a field as he loved, a life of hard, continuous work, with much of it in long journeyings under the open sky. The horror of his early boyhood in the black depths of the mine could never leave him; to be in the open air was to be in God's own world. The matter of recompense in money never troubled him.

As he turned from the window a man came hurrying across a field from the direction of the river. Reaching the opposite fence, he vaulted over without seeking the gate and ran straight to Dr. Phil's office.

"Hello, doctor!" he called sharply. "You got a telephone?"

"Yes."

"Well, you call down to Dr. Peters at the Ferry road an' tell him to hurry to Dan Sims' house, on t'other side the river—tell him Lonesome valley. Dan jest hollered across to me an' said his wife'd cut herself with an ax, bad, an' they was holdin' back the bleedin' well's they could. The bridge is down to the Ferry road."

"But it's nearly twenty miles to the Ferry bridge. It will take Dr. Peters hours to reach her."

"Can't help that. No man could get across the river this side the bridge, an' Dr. Peters is the nearest. You'd have to go forty miles."

Dr. Phil was hurriedly gathering up some things from his table.

"There's the branch that runs into the river from the mountains," he called over his shoulder. "After this freshet it must be a torrent, as dangerous as the river itself. Dr. Peters could never cross it. He is too old."

The man's countenance fell. "That's so," he admitted. "I'd forgot all about the branch. I s'pose it's jest tearin' now. Well, I'll holler back to Dan an' tell him a doctor'll be over jest as soon's the water goes down a little an' that they must do the best they can."

"You'll do nothing of the sort. Hurry round to the stable behind the office and bring my horse. You'll find the bridle hanging on a peg. Never mind a saddle; that will be too much weight."

"But why"—

"Hurry, I tell you!" thundered Dr. Phil. "The woman may be bleeding to death. I'll be ready by the time you are back."

When the man appeared Dr. Phil was at the corner of the office, and he threw himself instantly upon the horse's back.

"You can't go"— the man tried to say, but Dr. Phil did not hear him. He was tearing across the street, and when they came to the fence the horse took it at a bound. A few minutes later they were at the river.

Several men were working in the edge of the water trying to rescue lumber and other floating wreckage from the torrent. Judge Pauls was standing on the bank watching them. As the horse dashed down the bank the men threw up their hands warningly.

"You can't cross here!" one of them yelled. "It's sure death!"

"A woman's on the other side dying," was Dr. Phil's only answer.

He did not even attempt to check the horse, but plunged into the water at full speed.

The horse was the only object of property that Dr. Phil owned, and he had been able to make the purchase because the ugliness and viciousness and small size of the animal had made the price very low. But the horse was apparently afraid of nothing in the world and had strong staying powers, and these were qualities which soon convinced the young doctor that he had obtained the very animal he needed without regard to price.

However, with that rushing, roaring torrent before him, the animal seemed to think it foolhardy to proceed, for before he had gone a dozen feet from shore he tried to turn and swim back. But now the firm, masterful hand of the rider was controlling his head, the calm, inflexible voice was sounding encouragingly in his ears, and after a few ineffectual attempts to turn the horse directed his gaze toward the opposite shore and did what Dr. Phil was doing—his best.

But no living thing could stem or cross that mad rush of water, and this Dr. Phil well knew. He must reach the other side, but he was not foolhardy.

The torrent was winding in its course, Dr. Phil's gaze had swept keenly from bank to bank; then he forced his horse into a current which approached the opposite shore nearly a half mile down. To the horrified spectators it looked as though they were being swept away, powerless to help themselves, as, indeed, they were for the time being. All Dr. Phil did was to guide the horse, and all the horse could do was to keep them above water. But as the current approached its nearest point to the other shore, not more than ten feet distant, Dr. Phil suddenly slipped into the water, with his hand twisted in the horse's mane, and in that position, freed from his weight and with the strong right arm assisting by quick, powerful strokes, the horse threw himself forward with a desperate effort which brought his feet upon the bottom. A few minutes later they emerged from the water and staggered up the bank.

Dr. Phil did not hesitate. Lonesome valley was two miles away, and he could reach it more quickly on foot than he could on the horse in its present exhausted condition. So he turned the animal loose; perhaps he could recover him again when he returned.

He found the woman weak from loss of blood and lack of proper attention. Another hour's delay might have been fatal. He remained with her two days, until she was out of danger, and then returned to the river. Contrary to his expectation, he found the horse grazing quietly within a few rods of where he had left him, and the animal greeted him with an unmistakable whinny of pleasure and relief. Perhaps the common danger in the river and the manner of escape had won the horse's respect and dependence; possibly the animal was already becoming fond of him. Dr. Phil had not received a fee for his services, but the family's gratitude and the way the horse trotted toward him, whinnying, were enough, and he recrossed the river with buoyant heart.

In his desk he found a letter which read:

My Dear Doctor—I was a little hasty the other day, and I realized it when I saw you crossing the river. Will you overlook it by taking dinner with us Sunday? HENRY PAULS.

Slaves of the Orient.

"In Zanzibar and Pemba slaves are very slow to take advantage of the regulations that give them the right to claim their freedom," says a traveler. "They realize that so long as they are well used their position is superior to that of the man whose freedom is his sole asset. I have found the same attitude in north Africa. From Morocco to Tripoli one sees most of the slaves well content and flourishing. The famine, the locusts, the drought and the tax collector have no terror for them. Work keeps them healthy, they have enough to eat and drink, and the future has no meaning at all. There is promotion, there are confidential missions to governors and friends that elevate a slave, if only in the eyes of his fellows, and there is always a chance of manumission when the owner dies and wishes to have some good deeds recorded in the books of Islam's recording angels. The sorry truth of the matter is that slaves under Mohammedan rule are much better off than they ever were under the rule of white men in America and elsewhere."

The Permanent Novel.

"The novel that has inherent and permanent value that will secure for it a place in literature," said a well known author a few days ago, "rarely exceeds an edition of ten or fifteen thousand copies, and more often the limit is 5,000, while the one that is ephemeral, but catches the public fancy, may have a sale of fifty or a hundred thousand. Books of the latter class put money into the pockets of both author and publisher, but it does not come from the most discriminating readers. Of the class in question the field is limited, and, while they establish the reputation and permanent value of the really literary production, they are not included in the clientele of the author who is willing to sacrifice quality and style to increase his revenues from royalties. The novel that attains a wide but brief popularity does not appeal to the literary class."

BITTINGER.

The citizens of this and surrounding communities are promised a rare treat on Memorial Day. A regular G. A. R. service will be held by the veterans in this district. Rev. Manges, of Oakland, and other prominent speakers will address the people on that occasion, and the good people of Bittinger extend to their neighbors in all surrounding towns a hearty invitation to come and help make the day pleasant and profitable.

Mrs. K. A. Bittinger will conduct a festival and ice cream supper in the grove opposite her home on Saturday evening, May 20th. The public is cordially invited to attend and feast upon the good things to be had there.

Mrs. Hattie Engle and daughters were visiting Mrs. Engle's old home one day last week.

The phrenological entertainments, so called, held in the school house on Monday and Tuesday evenings of last week met with only a small measure of success and less of public approval.

Attorneys Thayer, Sincell and Mitchell of Oakland were in this section last week looking after some real estate matters.

Mr. O. C. Robison, of Avilton, finds the climate so rare and the ladies so fair about our village that he is prone to make frequent trips to this place.

Rev. Shoup was calling on his many friends in Grantsville on last Monday.

Prof. C. Bender, of Grantsville, passed through here last Saturday.

Mr. Uriah Knox was admitted to membership in the Evangelical Lutheran Church at this place on last Sunday morning.

Lumber Company Opens Office.

Monday the Ravenscroft Lumber and Manufacturing Company opened its office in rooms in the Ravenscroft building on Second street with Mr. "Jack" Moore in charge. Mr. Moore is a thoroughgoing young man and has had many years experience in the lumber business. His company handles a great quantity of lumber, shipping from Oakland, Friendsville, Mountain Lake Park, and other points.

I. O. O. F. Services.

The services in the Lutheran church at Friendsville last Sunday evening were largely attended when the pastor, Rev. H. C. Salem, preached a special sermon to the Odd Fellows who attended in a body. The subject of the discourse was "The Good Samaritan." Rev. A. L. Donachy assisted in the services.

Henry Lee Paralyzed.

Mr. Henry Lee, of Swanton, one of the oldest residents of that section of the country, suffered a paraletic stroke on last Saturday morning, which rendered him unconscious in which state he still lingers. Mr. Lee is a highly respected citizens of his district and has been a resident of that section of the county his entire lifetime.

DIED.

MITCHELL—At Addison, Pa., on Monday morning at an early hour, after an illness of two weeks, Mrs. Charles Mitchell, of Friendsville, this county. The deceased had gone to Addison to visit friends and relatives and while there was taken ill with fatal results. Her funeral occurred Tuesday.

PECK.—Near McHenry, May 2, 1905, Mrs. Mary Peck, wife of Samuel Peck, aged 30 years, 8 months and 29 days. Deceased was sick but a few hours until she received the summons to pass to her eternal reward. She leaves a husband and six children, four sons and two daughters, ranging from three weeks to fifteen years of age. Funeral services at the home, conducted by Rev. James W. Beeghly. Interment at the Thayer burying ground.

DIEHL. — Catherine Bowser was born Nov. 27, 1816; was married to Henry Diehl, March 16, 1846. To this union 8 children were born, 3 sons and five daughters. One of the boys died—7 of the children are living. They had 65 great-grandchildren, 8 are dead; 33 grandchildren are living.

Mrs. Diehl died April 30, 1905, aged 88 years, 5 months, 3 days. The funeral took place from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Hetz, the following Tuesday and was largely attended, her pastor Rev. H. C. Salem, officiated, assisted by Rev. M. Grossman of Addison, Pa. Interment took place at Cove.

Mrs. Diehl had been a great sufferer, but endured her affliction with Christian courage. She was a consistent member of the Cove congregation and was ready for her Master's summons. May the Lord comfort the sorrowing ones is our prayer.

FIRE AT DODSON

Monday Morning Destroyed The Dodson Coal Company's Store.

On Monday morning about two o'clock the Dodson Supply Company's store at Dodson, this county, a mining town situated on the West Virginia, Central and Pittsburg Railway, one mile south of Blaine, was discovered to be on fire, the origin of which is not known, but when first seen the flames were in the wareroom from which they communicated in a remarkably short while with the main building, a two story structure recently erected, destroying both buildings with their contents.

The lower floor of the main building was stocked with a general line of merchandise and the second floor was used as offices of the Garrett County Coal Mining Company.

The buildings and contents were valued at $10,000 with an insurance of $7000.

Decoration Day at Friendsville.

Sherman Post No 11, G. A. R., of Friendsville, desires that there be a general turnout of the citizens, public school children, Sunday school children and visitors from the surrounding country to participate with the Post on Memorial Day, Tuesday, May 30th, 1905, in decorating the graves of the noble dead that are resting in the cemeteries around Friendsville.

The Post will assemble with others that will join us, at the public school building at 10 a. m., then march to the M. E. church preceded by the Friendsville band where the beautiful ritual will be carried out. Speaking by Rev. Donachy and others, appropriate music and recitations. Donation of flowers will be thankfully received and can be left at the M. E. church.

EPWORTH LEAGUE OF OAKLAND

Celebrated Its 16th Anniversary Monday Night and Installed Officers.

The sixteenth anniversary of the institution of the Oakland Chapter of the Epworth League was celebrated on last Monday night at the M. E. church by the rendition of a specially prepared program and the installation of the recently elected officers who will serve for a term of six months. The new officers of the Chapter are:

President, Mr. John W. Davis; 1st, 2nd, 3d and 4th vice presidents, Miss Alice Hessen, Miss Mabel Porter Mrs. E. H. Sincell, Miss Percy Brady, respectively; Miss Gertrude Shirer, secretary, and Mr. Albert Clary, treasurer.

Miss Inez Wellman, who has just closed her term of school at Davis, West Va., is in Oakland visiting her sister, Mrs. J. B. Workman.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. W. D. King has secured a clerkship in Mr. P. T. Garthright's general store at this place.

Mr. C. Robb, of Allegany, Penn., has rented Inwood cottage for the present season, through Rudisill's Real Estate Agency,

Hon. Geo C. Sturgiss of Morgantown, was a Park visitor last Tuesday.

Mrs. R. E. M'Quay went to Prestonbury, Ky., Tuesday last to spend some time with her husband at that place.

The engine of the way train Wednesday afternoon set the roof of the postoffice building on fire. Master Harry Callis saw it in time to prevent any damage. A bucket of water and a few moments work put the fire out.

"BUCKSHOT" JOHN ALLEN

In Jail for Assault on Delia Parker, a Dusky Maiden.

"Buckshot" John Allen, a big, lubberly and very dark complected "coon" with roving propensities who leaves Oakland every year with the coming of frost and appear with the flowers of spring, imbibed freely of bad liquor on Saturday and made things uncomfortable for a time for some of his dusky friends and relatives, the outcome of which is that "Buckshot" is in jail with a badly lacerated head caused by coming in contact with the club of Oakland's "finest" which was wielded with vim and vigor in the hands of Officer Sweeney when the prisoner resisted arrest.

The woman assaulted by "Buckshot" was Delia Parker, his sister-in-law, who was standing in a doorway along Third street when she was espied by her assailant and without more ado he "waded in", knocking her 'clear out of her shoes," but inflicting little damage to he beauty.

"Buckshot" was given a hearing by Justice Gonder Monday and fined $11 and costs, but being "short" he was sent to jail until the fine and costs are paid.

Married Today.

Mr. Hugh Calderwood, of Altamont Springs Farm, and Miss Nannie, daughter of Mr. J. C. Rodeheaver, of near Deer Park, were married at noon to-day, the ceremony being performed by Rev. J. B. Workman, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. church, Oakland, at the home of the bride. This afternoon the couple will drive to Oakland and depart on train No. 46 for New York City where on Saturday they will sail on the Anchor Line Steamer Columbia for Scotland, the home of the groom. After remaining there until August visiting relatives of Mr. Calderwood they will return to Deer Park. Their many friends wish them every happiness.

W. E. M'MILLAN, LUMBER OPERATOR,

Injured Seriously in Harrisburg (Pa.) Wreck Last Thursday Morning.

TRAIN WAS BLOWN TO PIECES

By the Explosion of Two Cars of Dynamite—Mr. McMillan is President of the McMillan Lumber Company of This County.

Last Thursday morning about two o'clock one of the most fearful wrecks in the history of railroading occurred in the suburbs of Harrisburg, Pa., when a fast express and passenger train collided with the wreckage of a freight train resulting in the death of more that twenty persons and the serious injury of nearly one hundred, among the injured being Mr. W. E. McMillan, president of the McMillan Lumber Company, of this county, whose mills are located near Wilson, on the West Virginia Central Railway.

In the freight which was first wrecked and thrown onto the track of the passenger train, were two cars of dynamite. Without a moment's warning the passenger train piled into the wreckage and the concussion being so great the dynamite exploded, hurling death and destruction in every direction. Immediately after the dynamite let go the wreckage took fire, burning the mangled to death in many instances.

Mr. McMillan's injuries consist of both legs and one of his thumb being broken and a deep cut across his chest. Mr. McMillan, in company with his attorney, Mr. E. D. Edson, of New York, was on his way from that city to Pittsburg. The two men occupied opposite berths in the sleeping car Garnet. When the collision occurred Edson called to McMillan to hurry out of his berth and leave the coach. McMillan jumped from his berth and crawled through a window of the wrecked Pullman, when he was hurled by the first explosion a distance 60 feet over the river embankment. The force of the explosion shattered the coach, and what remained of it was consumed by the flames. Is is feared that Edson was caught in the debris and was completely incinerated.

As soon as the father of young McMillan could be located by the railroad company he was notified of the accident and drove from the mill to Oakland where he took the train on Friday night for Harrisburg, where his son is confined to the hospital.

ANOTHER LOT PURCHASED.

By Lutheran Congregation—Failed to Get Deed for Lot Bought Last Week.

After having decided to purchase the Yellowly lot on Alder street as a site for the proposed new Lutheran church by a vote of the members of the congregation and giving the necessary authority to the building committee to begin operations on the church, the owners of the property refused to dispose of the lot and as a result another location was sought for the purpose.

At the meeting of the congregation called for Monday night of this week when a large number of the members were present to make another selection, by an almost unaminous vote the McComas property fronting on Second street adjoining the Browning Hotel, was purchased, the price paid being $1000 cash.

This property is a very desirable one, the location being on a paved street and while not as central as the Yellowly property, it will answer the purposes of the congregation very well.

Authority was vested in the building committee to begin operations at once and if no hitch occurs in securing title to this lot, which is not anticipated, the erection of the building will begin as soon as plans can be secured and adopted.

Lawn Fete at Swanton.

The social department of the Swanton Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal church will hold a lawn fete at the residence of Mr. William W. Sweet on Saturday night, May 20th, beginning at 7 o'clock.

The ladies of the League will serve strawberries, ice cream, confections and cake. The proceeds will be devoted to the church. All are invited and all will find a cordial welcome.

HARDWARE FIRM MAKE ASSIGNMENT.

Messrs. Hinebaugh & Edwards, Who Recently Went Into Business Meet With Misfortune.

The hardware firm of Hinebaugh & Edwards, composed of Messrs. John O. Hinebaugh and J. E. Edwards, made a voluntary assignment of their stock of goods, located in the Mitchell building on Second street, last Thursday to Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill, of Oakland.

The firm entered business sometime early in December of last year, buying a large stock of goods, but the season being extremely dull during the winter months they were unable to realize on their purchases, hence the assignment.

Both young men are first class mechanics and are now holding good positions with Mr. W. A. Liller, of Keyser, being stationed for the present at Douglas, on the line of the West Virginia Central.

BITTINGER.

May smiles upon our sturdy mountain tillers of the soil, and wreathed in her smiles we read promises of a bountiful season with much rejoicing over a full harvest.

Miss Gertrude Hohn was visiting friends in this vicinity last week, and was accompanied on her return as far as Grantsville by Mr. Jonas Bittinger on last Sunday.

Rev. Shoup started Friday morning for Manchester, Md., where he was called to assist Rev. H. H. Flick in his spring communion services.

Messrs. Jennings and McCullough were in this place last week negotiating a timber deal.

Mr. Shirk, of the Garrett Lumber Co., passed through here last Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Lloyd Brenneman sold a fine coach horse last Monday, realizing a nice price.

Mrs. K. Bittinger is making preparations to offer her friends a pleasant evening on next Saturday evening. All are cordially invited.

A special feature of the Memorial day demonstration to be held at this place on May 30 will be a match game of ball between the Accident and Bittinger teams.

INFORMATION FOR ORCHARDISTS

State Entomologist Tells How Pests May Be Exterminated.

There are many insects which we may consider our annual visitors. Accordingly, orchardists as well as those who have a small number of trees for home use, should take every precaution towards protecting the trees and fruit that remain on after the recent freezes from insects and fungi attack.

Apples trees should be sprayed at this time with Paris Green or other arsenite (3-8 lbs. to 50 gallons of water) for protection against the Codling moth, an insect that causes the majority of our wormy apples. It is wise to apply the Paris Green with Bordeaux Mixture which will control various fungus diseases.

The Apple-tree Tent caterpillar seems to be present in enormous numbers this spring. Since the insect cae easily be detected by its conspicuous nests or tents, the whole colony can be torn from the tree in early morning or evening and destroyed. A torch may also be employed to destroy them. Or if they are out of reach spraying the branches nearest the nests with an arsenite will control them.

Injury from the plum curculio by "stinging" the fruit will probably be more pronounced this year owing to the fact that a large per cent of the peaches and plums have already been killed by frosts in some parts of the State. The beetles attack both plum, peach and apple. Spraying the tree with Paris Green or other arsenite will have the effect of killing some of the beetles as they feed on the foliage and fruit. The "jarring" method should also be practiced when practicable, that is, where the tree is not too large to jar easily. It consists of placing a large sheet under the tree and then jarring the tree suddenly. If done in early morning the beetles will fall into the sheet and then can be destroyed. It may be necessary to continue this work every morning for two weeks or until they become very scarce.

In controling the asparagus beetles which are causing much trouble at this time, the only means we may suggest is spraying with an arsenite, dusting air slacked lime on the plants to kill the larvae, and to let a part of the asparagus grow up as a trap for the insects. They can then be treated on the trap asparagus more effectively by spraying or catching them.

Any further information as to the above or other insects pests will be gladly given by communicating with the State Entomologist, College Park, Md. Thomas B. Symons, State Entomologist.

ARRESTED ON BURGLARY CHARGE.

Jesse J. Flynn, of Bloomington Forced Entrance Into Saloon and Was Arrested.

Jesse J. Flynn, of Bloomington, was brought to Oakland on last Thursday night by Policeman Sweeney, who made the arrest upon a state's warrant, charging him with having forced an entrance into the Tibbetts saloon at Bloomington on Wednesday afternoon about five o'clock.

It as alleged that Flynn gained entrance into the place by forcing a back window after the proprietor had locked the doors and went home to his supper. On his way home Tibbetts met a young man named James Reynolds to whom he gave the key to the front door with instructions to open the place and wait on any customers who should want anything. Passing the building along the side Reynolds saw Flynn behind the bar and demanded to know what he was doing there and receiving no satisfactory answer he ordered him out. Reynolds went to the front door and while unlocking it Flynn jumped through the window by which he had entered and disappeared, but later arrested and brought to Oakland where he was given a hearing Friday by Justice Gonder.

Before the Justice the prisoner wanted to enter a plea of guilty but the magistrate not having the authority to pass sentence Flynn withdrew the plea and was remanded to Jail for the action of the September grand jury.

HEAVILY FINED FOR ASSAULT.

Two Young Men of Swanton Assessed $25 and Costs Each.

Last Saturday afternoon two young men from the vicinity of Swanton, named Murphy and Sweitzer, assaulted Thomas Martin, Jr., at his stable in Oakland, and were getting the better of him when his father, Thomas, Sr., came to his help. The old gentleman, who is crippled with the rheumatism and unable to handle himself in a scrap, was badly treated by the assaulting party having been struck in the face and knocked down. Both men, after Mr. Martin was used up, broke and ran but were overtaken on the outskirts to town and brought back, being placed in jail until Monday when their trial took place before Justice Gonder, who imposed a fine of $25 and costs upon each. Sweitzer paid and was released. Murphy in default, was sent to jail.

Wreck at Hutton.

Sunday afternoon a rear-end collision between two freight trains took place in 58-cut at Hutton resulting in the derailment and wrecking two cars and the detention of trains for some time. No one was injured. The wreck was cleared up by the Piedmont wreck crew.

A Question Of Caste

....By MARTHA FISHEL.

Copyright, 1904, by Martha Fishel

IN the florist's window a bunch of orchids of a rare green gray hue flaunted their imperial beauty in the face of a family of roses of different complexions, white tulips and yellow jonquils. Every head nodded attentively on its stem. It was evident the orchids had something important to impart.

"We've just been bought for Ruth Delorme. She's the only American we would care to have own us," they drawled. "She's the season's beauty, which is the best we can expect in this parvenu country, where there's not a title in sight unless it's borrowed. We will say goodby to you all very soon. No doubt we'll be taken to a dinner and the opera and perhaps look in at a couple of dances. That's the life we are meant for. It's so stupid here, ogled at through the glass by people one couldn't really know."

"Oh, how lovely! And we are so glad for you. But we wonder who will buy us."

The orchids could not imagine for a moment where the little sighing whisper floated from, but after a surprised circular gaze they saw resting against the base of the jade bowl which held them a bunch of wood violets in a goblet.

Offended surprise made them gasp, and, leveling the insolent stare which only the socially secure permit themselves, their petals assumed scornful curves.

"Well, upon my word! So much for your moth eaten reputation for modesty! If this isn't underbred familiarity, what is it? Wild, untrained creatures without a cent.

"Some well meaning, badly groomed clerk will doubtless take you home to his dowd of a wife," the aristocrats continued.

"That will be nice if we can make her happy." And the drooped blue heads nodded wistfully.

"A plebeian ambition rightly suited to your station," said the orchids. "We'll be glad to leave this place," they whispered to an American Beauty rose in a tall cut glass vase. "The society is so mixed! Think of them daring to address us! We're not at all in the same set! Those weeds are not even of the English species or the double sort.

"OH, BUT, I SAY, WHAT'S THIS?"

They're not even distantly connected with the Italian family. We know the Parmas well."

"No; we make no claims at all," the violets replied. "We were plucked this morning on the banks of the Bronx."

"The Bronx! Heavens! It sounds so bourgeois, suggestive of cheap table d'hotes and suburban villas!"

"Oh, we know we're cheap," said the violets, stung to revolt.

"Cheap? Well, rather! Twenty-five cents for how many of you?"

"A hundred."

The orchids laughed.

"And not very particular about the counting, eh? There are only six of us, and we cost $8. Well, here's the clerk coming for us. We're off, thank heaven! Goodby, Miss Bronx."

"Petal proud things, I'm glad they are gone," said one violet, angry dew in its eyes.

"So are we," said the tallest American Beauty in the jar. "Far be it from me to decry family. I'm proud of my own branch, but those orchids talk too much. Thank heaven, we can all get an afternoon nap now."

They were roused by the door opening as a man entered. He was handsome and young, though somewhat haggard, as if from loss of sleep. If his clothes were somewhat shabby they were well cut, and he carried them with easy grace.

"I like his face," said each little violet to the other as they preened and prinked their petals while eying the stranger, who was fingering some loose change in his pocket, a quizzical smile on his lips.

"You florists are a species of highway robber," he laughed to the clerk. "Have you any violets not worth their weight in gold?"

"Not a violet in the place. Every one went before noon. The matinee girls just made a raid on them."

The violets felt their hearts sink.

"I wonder what he calls us—cabbages?" murmured one of the little bunch, still sore from the orchids' taunts.

The young man regarded with a dubious air the flowers heaped about so prodigally.

"Oh, but, I say, what's this?" as he caught sight of the violets that seemed to have deepened in hue in their efforts to be seen.

"Oh, would you want those—that is, we hardly expect to sell them to our patrons. We bought a lot of them as a sort of charity from a little lame girl in Bronxville and should probably have given them away to a footman or other servant of some customer—just give them away as a grocer does a chromo with a pound of tea. If you want them a quarter will pay for the lot."

When the violets saw the coin given and felt themselves lifted from the glass they breathed a sigh of content, and when the clerk, wrapping them in tissue paper, placed them in a pretty box a fragrant breath of excitement [illegible] them.

"It must be the padded brougham orchids spoke of to the roses. Think how we were heaped in the corner of a basket this morning! Oh, exclusiveness has its charms!" And they winked contentedly in their soft wrappings.

The crackling of a wood fire—for the spring day was damp—was the next thing the flowers heard as they were lifted out and put in water. At first their eyes were dazed, but after a few moments they absorbed the details of the place.

The big, bare studio looked rather eerie in the approaching dust, and with its half finished canvases, its walls covered with studies in glowing color, it looked more a workroom proper than a home. But it was the home of youthful, ardent and dominating dreams, and as Robert Dorset looked about it in his eyes was a blending of the enthusiasm of genius and the steadfast fixity of purpose that annihilates all obstacles to reach a goal.

"I've always felt I must succeed, even when the impolite and intrusive wolf sat grimly on my door mat," he thought. "And now that Marchmont, the magnate, has just ordered his portrait, I have little to fear."

He walked over to where an unfinished canvas on an easel showed a girl's charming face.

"How different this winter is from last!" he mused. "Then you were my companion at the art classes, my little friend from the country, studying, oh, so faithfully, but painting so badly; this year the protegee of your rich aunt and chronicled in the papers as Miss Delorme, the new beauty. I can understand her ideas when she decided you were worth chaperoning. Her own girls are placed—one the wife of a consumptive lord, the other of a banker close to seventy. Now you are on the auction block, going, going, but not yet gone—not yet, thank heaven!" And the eyes in his pale face had the expression of a soldier in battle. "I've taken Aunt Mary's polite and unmistakable hint that I am to her an unwelcome worshiper at your shrine—'no beggars or artists allowed'—but I may win yet."

He took a letter from his pocket. It showed signs of many readings. Now, with his head thrown back as he lounged in a big chair before the fire's blaze, he read it again:

"This is the last night of the opera, my friend. Why don't you go? I've discovered the ethics of Aunt Mary's campaign, and I know why you come no more. In fact, my visitors are now narrowed exclusively to those who know the merry clip of the scissors as the coupons fall. If I'm right, let's have our vengeance. Go to the old place in the gallery tonight, where I've so often sat with you and Ted and Mabel and will again. We can make eye notes about Melba, with the horseshoe sweeping between us. What fun to cheat Aunt Mary! She thinks, foolish woman, I'm easy to mold because I'm little; but, although I've made no fuss over her treatment of my old friends, I've my own way of getting my own way. I've given aunt her fling with me this winter to please mother, so for the nonce I'm pleasing myself. RUTH.

"Does this mean anything more than chumship? I'll find out tonight."

He took pen and paper and, having written and destroyed several sheets, finally appeared fairly satisfied with one, which he kissed before folding it, his eyes heavy with love.

He put the note, with the flowers, back in the box, while the violets, scenting a romance, fluttered excitedly as they were taken from the studio.

On a table in a pretty boudoir on Madison square a cluster of orchids in an eastern vase and a bunch of wood violets in a small jug waited the coming of Ruth Delorme.

"We beg your pardon," drawled the orchids after a long stare, "but did you come from Brighton's? Are we mistaken, or did we see you there today? It's so hard to tell exactly; you lack individuality, you know."

Rustling with excitement at the meeting, the violets nodded their fragrant heads.

"The same," they answered bravely.

"Well, of all the luck!" broke in the winged aristocrats. "But you'll be sure to make some break and queer yourselves. That's one comfort."

Just then Ruth entered.

She was so daintily lovely in her gown of white, filmy lace. The violets were sure they saw an angel at last. Her eyes were just like themselves, they thought, or as they might look if a star lurked in the heart of each.

In the gloom of the firelit room she did not see the little blue worshipers and carelessly picked up the small envelope beside the orchids.

"A small thing to secrete such weighty, apoplectic adoration," she thought, with a mutinous look, and rapidly glanced over the lines, mumbling them half angrily:

"My Dear Miss Delorme—Your aunt—um—um—given the privilege of speaking to you tonight. You know—um—um—I would say. Will be there at 8. You will be alone—um—um—before we leave—opera. Hope you will wear the flowers—um—um—

"JAMES ARMSTRONG.

"Well, Jeemes," she mocked, "come an you will. No doubt you will have fortified your usual brilliance with an extra glass for the occasion. Your burgundy blush will present the deeper hue of the plum when you get my answer. Ugh! Why can't they let me alone?"

The maid entered, bringing Ruth's carriage shoes, and before putting them on she turned on the electric light, which revealed to Ruth the violets in the shadow of the orchids' vase.

"HE DARED DO IT! THE DARLING—OH, THE DARLING!"

"Where did these come from, Ann?" she asked.

"Oh, Miss Ruth, they came while you were at dinner, not long after the orchids. I hope you'll excuse me. I quite forgot them after putting them in water."

"Where is the card that came with them?" the girl asked more imperiously than she had ever before spoken.

"Why, there was a note. Oh, here it is on the floor."

At sight of the writing Ruth's face grew radiant. She dismissed the maid, and, with lips trembling slightly and fingers not quite steady, she broke the seal and read:

"Ruth, you know all I would say to you if I dared. The words 'I love you' and 'Will you marry me?' so poorly express all I feel, but perhaps your own heart can put the witchery upon them. Tonight I will be in the old place in the gallery and look for my answer. If you wear these little flowers it will tell me that I have not been a mad, rash dreamer and that you love me. If you do not—well, God bless you, anyway—but God help me.

"ROBERT."

Ruth gave a little shiver of delight as she raised the note to her lips.

"He dared do it! The darling—oh, the darling!" she whispered as she caught the violets to her heart.

"Will I marry him? Ah, will I not? And now, my dear aunt, trot out all the eligibles you wish. I'll scan them with comfortable composure. Bob loves me—loves me—loves me!"

Her fingers trembled as she pinned the flowers securely upon her breast, and the orchids looked at them with a furious sneer, scarcely believing their eyes.

"It's rank socialism, putting you out of your place like that," they said spitefully.

"You'd like my place, I dare say," crowed a violet from its vantage point.

"What could one expect from a mere ex-art student?" they retorted. "She's not like us 'classy' people. What does she mean to do with us, I wonder?"

As if in answer Ruth called in the maid.

"Tell William to take these orchids to my little sick girl on East Seventeenth street, near the river; he knows the place. Say I'll be in to see her tomorrow. They will cheer her tonight in that awful tenement."

The clock struck 8, and a few minutes later Mr. Armstrong was announced.

"Goodby!" cooed the violets as Ruth was leaving the room. "So sorry you're going to miss the opera. You'll be gone before we get back or we'd tell you all about it."

"All about what?" snapped the orchids.

"Why, the music, of course."

"That shows what country things you are. No one listens to the music. It's bad form. Besides"—

But the violets lost the rest of the sneer as they went down on Ruth's white bosom to witness the discomfiture of the man of millions with the bibulous flush.

The orchids, left alone, learned the lesson of humility hard.

"We'd rather be dead than lose caste!" they groaned. "A tenement house! Horrors!"

Had they been able they would have given a human shriek when the footman, after tossing one to Ann, flung the rest into a box.

In the morning as they looked at the sick child, felt her hot fingers, saw the expanse of factory roofs and clothes-lines beyond the windows, they grew very blue. As the days went by they grew bluer and bluer.

But the little girl laughed as the stems were clipped every morning and they were put in fresh water.

"Ain't they changed a pretty color, mother?" she said. "They look almost like violets now."

Forrest's Fight Against Fate

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

April 1-2, 1865

[Copyright, 1905, by G. L. Kilmer.]

DURING the last days of March 1865, General James H. Wilson took his squadrons in hand for a grand raid through Alabama and Georgia. The expedition had for its object, as planned at army headquarters, a demonstration in favor of the attack by another and a larger force upon the Confederate strongholds at Mobile. Wilson made the enterprise something more than a parade of forces. He turned it into a fighting campaign, which resulted in the destruction of Forrest's cavalry, the capture of Selma and the conquest of all central Alabama and Georgia.

Wilson's force was a heavy one, numbering 13,000 sabers. But it was a new command which had been hurriedly formed in the excitement of the campaign against General Hood in Tennessee the previous autumn. The leader was a new man in the west. He had earned his spurs as general of a cavalry division in the Army of the Potomac. His opponent, General Nathan Bedford Forrest, had never found his match as a raider and a fighting cavalryman. It was a byword in the Mississippi valley that all the territory of western Tennessee, northern and central Mississippi and Alabama belonged to Forrest, because his squadrons rode over it at will. "Forrest's country" had become a new geographical division on the military maps.

At the beginning of the raid Wilson captured a courier with dispatches on his person showing Forrest's plans of action. He learned that the scattered Confederates were alert and riding in hot haste to get between the Federal columns and Selma. Orders were given to Wilson's divisions to drop the scent in all other directions and meet in front of Selma. The game was to be a man hunt; the prey, Forrest's troopers.

The Confederate cavalry had passed the winter in central Mississippi, 150 miles from the border. It had been reorganized and numbered about 7,000 men. When news reached Forrest that Wilson was moving he accepted the challenge. His troopers had been under orders to march "at six hours' notice" for several days, so there was no time lost in throwing his brigades across the line of march taken up by the enemy. Selma, Tuscaloosa and Columbus were the exposed points. Selma came first, and in front of it, northwest, the clans gathered, all booted and spurred, with their swords sharpened for the fray.

April 1, 1865, the advance guard of Wilson and the rear guard of Forrest met in pitched battle. Upon learning that the Federal cavalry was galloping toward Selma the Confederate leader ordered his troopers to concentrate for the defense of that point. After a day of lively skirmishing Forrest's squadrons had been driven back upon Adams' reserve division at the crossings of the Selma roads over Bogler's creek, near Maplesville. The Confederates claimed to have 1,500 men in position.

Forrest's line of battle extended along a ridge where steep, wooded hills commanded the passes over the stream, the right resting on a height, the left secured from attack by an impassable swamp. Two cannon were posted on each of the two roads converging near there from Randolph and Maplesville. General Eli Long's division, marching upon the Maplesville road, held the advance of Wilson's column. As soon as the Confederates were discovered in position Long re-enforced his vanguard, a battalion of the Seventy-second Indiana, by the remainder of the regiment. A spirited charge of the whole command on foot drove Forrest's heavy skirmish line back in confusion, and Long immediately followed up the advantage by sending forward a battalion of the Seventeenth Indiana under Lieutenant Colonel Frank White.

Colonel White's charge at Maplesville was worthy of the brave "six hundred" who rode into the jaws of death at Balaklava. His men dashed onward at a swift gallop, with drawn sabers, breaking through the Confederate main line and riding completely over the guns. After sabering some artillerymen and their supports, who resisted, the Indiana troopers wheeled and swept on in a lateral course along the line of Forrest's men, both sides shooting and sabering vigorously. White's men cut their way out, leaving Captain Taylor and sixteen troopers dead within the enemy's camp.

Taylor had carried his men into the midst of the Confederates banded about the guns. There he and his followers, singly, fell upon Forrest's bodyguard man for man and engaged in a savage running fight of a couple of hundred yards. Forrest and Taylor met in a duel, and the gallant captain was shot dead while trying to saber his antagonist. The melee around the guns is described in the "History of Forrest's Cavalry" as follows:

> Forrest had at the moment available only his famous escort and staff and a section of Adams' artillery. From the latter one discharge was secured, but the artillerists abandoned their guns and retreated abruptly. On came the Federal cavalry, with their sabers drawn, when Forrest sprang to meet them and became involved in one of those personal encounters that have marked his life, and his escapes from which appear incredible. He was set upon by four troopers in the wood at one moment. Shooting one, the others were down upon him with uplifted sabers, which he attempted to parry with his revolver, but received only slight wounds and bruises, both on his head and arm. Three others came up meanwhile and took part, so that actually as many as six troopers were either attempting to saber or shoot him. By this time the hammer of his pistol had been hacked away, so that the weapon was useless, while his right arm was weakened by the many blows which had fallen upon it. His staff and escort could not help him, for all at that moment were engaged in like personal combats.
> On either hand the roadway was hedged by a dense, impenetrable thicket and rearward was choked by a two horse wagon, which barred his escape in that direction, while his enemies filled the road frontward, fiercely cutting and shooting at him. Escape indeed seemed hopeless, for, as if to render it utterly so, his horse was now severely wounded by a pistol ball in the thigh. But it was not the habit of the man to look upon aught as hopeless.
> Wheeling his horse toward the wagon, giving him the spur fiercely and lifting him with the bridle, the brave animal rose into the air and surmounted the obstacle at a bound, going some thirty steps before he was halted, and Forrest turned to survey the field. Scarcely had he done so when he was charged by a Federal officer, who lunged at him with his saber, but Forrest parried the thrust with his other pistol, which he had been able to draw, and, firing, killed his resolute adversary (Captain Taylor). By this time, however, those whom he had eluded by his desperate leap over the wagon had continued to pass it and were again upon him. Colonel M. C. Galloway and Dr. Jones of the staff came to the aid of their imperiled chief, and each put an adversary hors de combat. Forrest killed yet another, and Galloway, wounding still another, took him prisoner.

The Federal troopers fought with sabers almost exclusively in this melee. Forrest and his staff were armed with two navy revolvers each, the men in the escort with Spencer rifles and pistols.

At daylight April 2 Wilson resumed his march upon Selma. Forrest's skirmishers were encountered about 2 o'clock and driven back to the fortifications. These consisted of a bastioned line, on a radius of three miles, extending from the Alabama river above the city to the same below. The profile of the line assaulted was as follows: Height of parapet, six to eight feet; thickness, eight feet; depth of ditch, five feet; width, from ten to fifteen feet; height of stockade, five feet.

General Emory Upton asked for a picked body of 300 men to work around Forrest's flank and turn it, but before he could gather the detachment General Long discovered a column of Confederates riding up on his rear to divert his attention while re-enforcements poured into the works in front. Instead of turning about to assail the new enemy Long ordered the bugles to sound the charge. Armstrong's Confederate division, 1,500 in number, occupied the position in front of Long. The latter mustered less than 1,600 for the assault.

Long's men were armed with repeating carbines and as they advanced poured a steady stream of bullets into the Confederate ranks. Despite the fire of artillery and musketry which swept the open space for 600 yards the gallant troopers pushed forward steadily and in fifteen minutes had cleared the works between Armstrong and Roddey's brigade of supports. Then the assailants turned leftward upon Armstrong's own line. Forrest threw himself into the breach with all the troops he could rally, and a portion of Long's command suffered terribly for a moment.

At last Armstrong's line gave way, and the scene became one of wild confusion. The Confederate troopers, beaten from the breastworks, rushed for their horses; the militia threw away their arms in flight, and the streets of the city became choked with soldiers, citizens and horses hurrying to escape.

Forrest and his generals got away separately after darkness came to their relief. Wilson gathered in 2,700 prisoners of war, including 150 officers and 61 cannon. He estimated the garrison at 7,000. His own force at hand was 9,000, with 8 guns. In the brief assault Long's casualties amounted to 40 killed and 260 wounded. The leader and 4 of his colonels were shot down while cheering on their men.

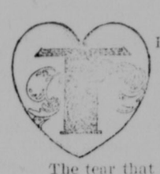
THE KISS, DEAR MAID

By Lord Byron



THE kiss, dear maid! thy lip has left
Shall never part from mine
Till happier hours restore the gift
Untainted back to thine.

Thy parting glance, which fondly beams,
An equal love may see:
The tear that from thine eyelid streams
Can weep no change in me.

I ask no pledge to make me blest
In gazing when alone;
Nor one memorial for a breast
Whose thoughts are all thine own.

Nor need I write—to tell the tale
My pen were doubly weak:
O, what can idle words avail
Unless the heart could speak?

By day or night, in weal or woe,
That heart, no longer free,
Must bear the love it cannot show,
And silent, ache for thee.

A FAREWELL

By William Motherwell

PROFESSOR WILSON, the famous Scotch critic, said of his countryman, William Motherwell, editor and poet, who was born in 1797 and died in 1835: "All his perceptions are clear, for all his senses are sound; he has fine and strong sensibilities and a powerful intellect. His style is simple, but in his tenderest movements masculine; he strikes a few bold knocks at the door of the heart, which is instantly opened by the master or mistress of the house or by son or daughter, and the welcome visitor at once becomes one of the family."

WHEN I beneath the cold, red earth am sleeping,
Life's fever o'er,
Will there for me be any bright eye weeping
That I'm no more?
Will there be any heart still memory keeping
Of heretofore?

When the great winds through leafless forests rushing,
Like full hearts break—
When the swoll'n streams, o'er crag and gully gushing, Sad music make—
Will there be one, whose heart despair is crushing,
Mourn for my sake?

When the bright sun upon that spot is shining
With purest ray,
And the small flowers, their buds and blossoms twining,
Burst through that clay—
Will there be one still on that spot repining
Lost hopes all day?

When the night shadows, with the ample sweeping
Of her dark pall,
The world and all its manifold creation sleeping—
The great and small—
Will there be one, even at that dread hour, weeping
For me—for all?

When no star twinkles with its eye of glory
On that low mound,
And wintry storms have with their ruins hoary
Its loneness crowned,
Will there be then one versed in misery's story
Pacing it round?

It may be so—but this is selfish sorrow
To ask such meed—
A weakness and a wickedness, to borrow
From hearts that bleed
The wailings of to-day, for what to-morrow
Shall never need.

Lay me then gently in my narrow dwelling,
Thou gentle heart!
And, though thy bosom should with grief be swelling,
Let no tear start;
It were in vain—for time hath long been knelling—
Sad one, depart!

FREEDOM

By Lord Tennyson

OF old sat Freedom on the heights,
The thunders breaking at her feet,
Above her shook the starry lights;
She heard the torrents meet.

There in her place she did rejoice,
Self-gathered in her prophet-mind,
But fragments of her mighty voice
Came rolling on the wind.

Then stept she down through town and field
To mingle with the human race,
And part by part to man revealed
The fullness of her face—

Grave mother of majestic works,
From her isle-altar gazing down,
Who, God-like, grasps the triple forks,
And king-like, wears the crown;

Her open eyes desire the truth.
The wisdom of a thousand years
Is in them. May perpetual youth
Keep dry their light from tears;

That her fair form may stand and shine,
Make bright our days and light our dreams,
Turning to scorn with lips divine
The falsehood of extremes!

AUSTIN BROWN.

Oakland, Md., May 2, 1905.

MR. PHILIP B. GOUGH, of Mountain Lake Park, in this issue of THE REPUBLICAN announces his candidacy for the nomination of County Treasurer subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention when it meets in Oakland. Mr. Gough is a very reliable, honest, and industrious young man, and has been a resident of the Park for twenty years. He has many friends who will do all they can to secure his nomination. He is thoroughly competent to discharge the duties of Treasurer should he be nominated and elected.

THE PRESIDENT'S decision to place the remains of John Paul Jones in the Naval Academy at Annapolis will doubtless cause widespread disappointment among those who wished the interment to be made elsewhere, and may provoke some criticism. To us it seems highly commendable, and we cannot doubt that the serious second thought of the nation, even of the disappointed places and people, will so regard it. There are, of course, various reasons why the selection of some other place would have been not unfitting. New York, as the metropolis of the nation, and Arlington, adjacent to the nation's capitol, had their claims. But amid the conflicting claims the President has done wisely in choosing the one place whose title to the distinction seems entirely flawless.

Annapolis is to the Navy what West Point is to the Army. It is there that the captains of our fleets are trained. It is well that in their training they shall hereafter have the inspiration that may come from contemplation of the tomb and monument of our first great sea fighter, the man who set for all time the standard of American seamanship and who, as some of the greatest naval commanders of other lands now freely testify, is worthy to be ranked on the same roll with Nelson and Blake and Farragut. There is another fitness in it, too, in that this sea warrior of our earliest days is to rest in one of our oldest cities, the names of whose streets and the aspect of whose buildings tell so eloquently of Revolutionary and even anti-Revolutionary times. If it be said that a hundred would see his tomb in New York or at Arlington to one who will see it at Annapolis, it is to be replied that it is better to have one who has gone thither for the purpose to look upon it reverently than to have a thousand glance at it thoughtlessly in passing by on other errands; and if the placing of it at Annapolis shall result in attracting thither many patriotic pilgrims, then it will have served an additional beneficient purpose.

"DAVIS BOYS."

West Virginia is to be congratulated upon the growing prominence of its young men in politics. They are irrepressible, superb. Chief among them are the Davis boys, fine youngsters, both; the elder, Henry Gassaway, still growing flesh and vigorous after his notable spirit in the vice presidential handicap, and the younger, Colonel Tom, a kid, of 77, raking in the Democratic nomination for congress in the Second district.

A dispatch detailing the success of Colonel Tom in the convention says that the Republicans declare that the Democrats have no expectation of electing their candidate, but hope merely to 'tap his barrel.' Vulgarly put.

The Democrats choose Colonel Tom because like his brother, he has that which barrels cannot buy—youth effervescent, joyful, infectious, strenuous youth. Our own impression is that at least one of the Davis boys will go to Washington to join those other juveniles, Young, Pettus, Morgan, of Alabama, Daniel, of Virginia, Allison, of Iowa, Platt, of New York, and Cannon, of Illinois.—" Brooklyn Eagle.

GETTING RICH A BAD HABIT.

A millionaire prophet, delivering the message of the simple life and in spite of his riches living the simple life, is a viration from the ordinary remarkable enough to cause twentieth century multitudes to pause and listen. His message is to the few, to those who pile thousands on to thousands and later heap up millions, but the multitudes are interested, nevertheless, in his theories. Nelson O. Nelson, a St. Louis millionaire, recently made an address in Chicago in which he undertook to demonstrate that a captain of industry need not get rich, and suggested to the Chicago money getters that "getting rich is merely a habit and a bad habit at that."

Mr. Nelson began business twenty-eight years ago, in St. Louis, on a small capital. During nineteen years the business has been co-operative and in 1890 he founded the communal village of Le Claire, eight miles northeast of St. Louis, in Illinois. Until the beginning of the present year he drew a definite share of the profits of the business as the head of the firm or "Captain of industry," but for the future he has announced that he will not share in the profits, except to the extent of 6 per cent. interest on the capital invested. Otherwise, the profits are to be distributed in the proportions of three-tenths to the employes, four-tenths to the customers and three-tenths for benevolent and public purposes as directed by Mr. Nelson.

This St. Louis apostle of simplicity is rated in the millionaire class, but not as many times a millionaire. He lives in a simple house and makes no ostentatious display of wealth whatever. His theory of benevolence is essentially outlined in his declaration that he "prefers to endow individuals rather than institutions." He believes that every accumulator of wealth owes something to himself and something to his children, but that he owes much also to the community at large. There is, he says, in every large city, a social laboratory where the poor and their conditions confront society. This laboratory, he declares, is the only practically way in which to understand and study these problems, the righting of which is engaging the attention of earnest minded students. If the man entrusted with the responsibility of wealth will get into close touch with the people "lacking the light and the air and the sweetness of sunshine in their squalid homes," this laboratory study will teach him that, here, there is work to be done.

Mr. Nelson's portraiture of the millionaire who is only bent upon accumulating more millions is dismal enough. A vast hoard of wealth, he is quite certain, brings an inevitable train of woes in its wake, while its compensation are lamentable boulevard, to furnish it like that of a king with objects of art, rare books and pictures, to maintain a retinue of servants—to spend money in such wise will not, after all, he points out, bring happiness, and happiness is the one thing needful. A man in possession of millions, with theories about distributing wealth, is always profoundly interesting and especially so when he is putting his theories into practice. Mr. Nelson's scheme of benevolence, it seems, is mainly local in its application, but none the less the practical results of his applied theories will be of universal interest.

Popular Misapprehensions About "the Divorce Evil"

By Professor F. H. GIDDINGS of Columbia University

I AM glad that President Roosevelt has asked congress to authorize a new statistical investigation of the extent, conditions AND CAUSES of divorce in the United States.

It is to be anticipated, however, that the people that are so greatly exercised over what they are pleased to call "the divorce evil" will be as grievously disappointed by the results of this as they were in 1889. The investigation reported at that time was instigated by persons who believed that the opportunity which dissatisfied persons enjoyed to go from one state to another for the purpose of obtaining a dissolution of marriage ties was AN IMPORTANT FACTOR in swelling the number of divorces and that the situation called for a national law of marriage and divorce. The statistics obtained by Colonel Wright demonstrated, to the great disappointment of the antidivorce element, that ONLY A SMALL PERCENTAGE of all divorces were obtained through a change of residence and showed, furthermore, that while some divorces were obtained through fraud the vast majority were granted for causes that most sensible people regard as legitimate.

The talk that we hear at present from persons that are exercised on this subject is largely about the so called LAXITY of our divorce laws. Now, as a matter of fact, the trend of state legislation for at least ten years past has been not in the direction of laxity, but, on the contrary, VERY STRONGLY IN THE DIRECTION OF RESTRICTION.

IN OTHER WORDS, IT IS MORE DIFFICULT TO OBTAIN A DIVORCE IN THE UNITED STATES TODAY THAN IT WAS TEN YEARS AGO.

As to the more difficult question, whether divorce OUGHT to be made harder and of less frequent occurrence than now, I am unable to share the fears of the alarmists.

It is true that divorces are more numerous in the United States in proportion to population than they are in other countries. But it will not do to assume that the American people are therefore more immoral in sexual matters than are the people of other lands. THE EXACT CONTRARY MAY TURN OUT TO BE THE TRUTH, and my own opinion is that such is indeed the fact. I believe that a really serious investigation of the subject would show that one of the chief causes of the high rate of divorce in the United States is to be found in the high standard of decency, intelligence AND HIGH SPIRITED CHARACTER MAINTAINED BY AMERICAN WOMEN. To be explicit, I mean that American women will not put up with immoral or brutal conduct on the part of their husbands that the women of other lands, willingly or unwillingly, endure.

THE OPPONENTS OF DIVORCE TALK AS IF ANYBODY COULD GET A DIVORCE IN THE UNITED STATES BY MERELY ASKING FOR IT. THEIR TALK IS INSINCERE, BECAUSE THEY KNOW PERFECTLY WELL THAT DIVORCES ARE GRANTED ONLY BY COURTS OF JUSTICE THAT, ON THE WHOLE, ARE PRESIDED OVER BY UPRIGHT AND SENSIBLE JUDGES AND THAT PRACTICALLY THERE ARE ONLY THREE GROUNDS FOR DIVORCE.

NEW TRAIN SCHEDULE ON B. & O.

Will Become Effective on and After Sunday, May 21st—Additional Trains.

Station Agent V. V. Washburne has received from headquarters the new time schedule for passenger trains arriving at and departing from Oakland on and after Sunday next, the 21st inst.

Becoming effective that day two additional trains will be put into service, they being accommodation trains—one east and one west every day except Sunday. Going east train No. 6 will arrive here at 10.07 a. m., and going west train No. 5 will arrive at 5.46 in the afternoon.

Train No. 46 will be discontinued and in its stead train No. 14 will be run. This train will arrive at 5.04 in the afternoon and will be a through train into Baltimore, carrying mail, express and passengers.

Train No. 7, west bound, arriving at 11.54, has been scheduled under the new time table to make a regular stop in Oakland and will receive express goods and passengers at this station.

All trains after Sunday will stop regularly at the Deer Park Hotel station, and also at Mountain Lake Park except on Sundays. This rule, however, will not be observed when there are passengers for Mountain Lake Park from points west of Grafton or of Cumberland, in which case conductors are instructed to stop at the Park.

FELL IN HOT WATER.

Accident Befel Senator Palmer at Hutton With Painful Results

Senator U. G. Palmer, manager of the Garrett Leather Company, whose works are located at Hutton, met with an unfortunate accident at the tannery on last Friday morning, but while painful his injuries are not necessarily serious.

Mr. Palmer was walking through that portion of the tannery building where the vats are located and in crossing over one of them on a board the plank tilted sidewise and precipitating him into the liquid which was heated to 190 degrees. He struck upon his feet and as quickly as possible jumped from the hot liquid into a vat containing cold water, which counteracted to some extent the effect of the hot liquid.

He was helped to his home nearby where his clothing was removed when it was ascertained that his feet and legs as far up as his knees were severely scalded, the skin flaking off and producing quite painful injuries.

Mr. Palmer, notwithstanding the burns, has been at the tannery every day since the accident.

District E. L. Convention At Mt. Lake Park.

FIRE AT GRANTSVILLE.

Which Destroyed a Saloon and Hall Combined—Loss $2000.

On Friday morning about 3 o'clock, a fire was discovered in the front end of Mr. Frank Folk's saloon and hall combined. Within two hours after the fire was discovered the entire building and contents were reduced to ashes by the angry flames. A general fire alarm was sent through town. The townsmen responded at once and fought the flames heroically. Through the most desperate efforts the Catholic church, which was very near Mr. Folk's building, was saved from the consuming flames. Mr. Folk, who was sleeping in the rear end of the building, was nearly suffocated by the smoke before he realized what was so rapidly transpiring. He had just extricated himself from the building when a violent explosion occurred in the storage room, sending all kinds of material through the sleeping room and through the rear end wall. Unfortunately, Mr. Folk did not have the building and contents insured. Total loss is about $2000.

Garrett County Sunday School Convention.

The Garrett County Sunday School Convention will meet in Deer Park on the 16th, 17th and 18th of June, beginning on Friday night. Every effort will be made to make it memorable occasion. Convention work in Garrett has not in recent years been as prosperous as in previous years, but it is desired to bring it again to the front. The convention will be thoroughly advertised and a program of unusual interest arranged.

Statistical blanks will be mailed this week to every Sunday school superintendent in Garrett couty. Superintendents are requested to report promptly as the statistics are wanted by June 1st for three reasons:

1. The statistics are being gathered for the International Sunday School Convention, which will meet at Toronto in June.

2. The United States Census Bureau relies on these reports for its figures.

3. It is desired to report to the county convention the actual numerical strength of the Sunday schools of Garrett county. Further notice will be given of the convention.

Mr. Louis Bush Improving.

This paper is glad to note the improved condition of Mr. Louis Bush, of Eglon, who was so seriously injured by being kicked by one of his horses early last week when he suffered a fracture of his cheek bone and both jaw bones. Through the efficient attention of his physician, Dr. J. G. Selby, he is able to take liquid nourishment and is resting quite comfortably. Mr. E. J. Fringer, of Oakland, who went to Eglon upon receipt of the intelligence of his relative's injury, returned to Oakland Saturday night.

K. of P. Notice.

All members of Garrett Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and visiting brethern, are requested to meet at Sturgiss' Hall on May 30th at 10 o'clock for the purpose of taking part in the decorateon services to be held on that day.

DISTRICT ASSESSORS

Appointed Last Night by the County Commissioners,

The Board of County Commissioners in session since Tuesday has transacted considerable business of importance, among which was the appointment of district assessors and health officer the execution of a supplemental agreement with the contractors for the erection of the new jail and sheriff's residence and arranging to make payment for the ground purchased as a site for the new buildings.

The assessors appointed last night were as follows:

District No. 1, W. M. Junkins; No. 2, Charles T. Frantz; No. 3, Gideon J. Gnagey; No. 4, Grant Harshberger; No. 5, Wm. M. Lohr; No. 6, John Sines; No. 7, Edwin E. Friend; No. 8 J. E. Moreland; No. 9, B. F. Green; No. 10, William Nine; No. 11, John Merrill; No. 12, F. M. Green; No. 13, Daniel Wilson; No. 14, Patrick H. Rodeheaver.

Dr. John E. Legge, of Oakland, was appointed county health officer and physician to the jail.

The supplemental agreement with the jail contractor was made owing to the change of location of the building and in consequence slight changes had to be made in the plans.

The Board will tender the money to the Lutheran congregation for the lot purchased from that church today.

Tax Sales Advertised.

Mr. James W. White, late Treasurer, advertises at tax sale in this issue of THE REPUBLICAN a number of pieces of real estate upon which the taxes are due and in arrear. The sale will take place in front of the court house on Tuesday, June 13th, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Julius C. Renninger is attorney for Mr. White.

The time detector purchased some weeks ago by the City Council has been received and is now in use by the night officer. Keys used in punching the paper dials have been placed at ten points in different portions of town. These keys are to be used at stated intervals by the officer, each key making a distinctive mark on the dial and registering the time when it was so used. One of the keys has already been removed by some person unknown to the officials of the town. To effect his capture or for any information that may lead to his identity a reward of $25 is offered by Mayor McComas, who intends to thoroughly investigate the matter and work a conviction of the guilty party if at all possible.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Offutt were guests of relatives in Cumberland from Friday until Monday.

Mr. Riley Murphy, one of the prosperous farmers of District No. 8, was in to see the editor Monday afternoon.

Mr. Albert Ashby, of the Ashby Lumber Company, Crellin, was a business visitor to Oakland Monday morning.

Miss Kate Stanton, of Lonaconing, spent Saturday and Sunday in Oakland with her father and other relatives.

Mrs. Abram Lawton, of Lonaconing, is here as the guest of her mother, Mrs. Cecelia Coddington, and other relatives.

Ex-Senator R. T. Browning, of Lake Brown, and Mr. William Miller, of Accident, were Oakland visitors Monday morning.

Messrs. William and E. C. W. Ryland, both of Friendsville, are in Oakland on business, having arrived here Monday afternoon, driving overland from their home.

Senator U. G. Palmer, of Hutton, although suffering somewhat as a result of his recent injuries, spent Monday night and Tuesday morning in Oakland.

Messrs. John W. McCullough, of Friendsville, and Cortez H. Jennings, of Jenningstown, both prominent lumber operators of this county, were visitors to Oakland Monday morning.

Ex-County Treasurer William M. Lohr, of near Cove, was in Oakland several days this week making settlement of his accounts as Treasurer with the Board of County Commissioners.

Rev. J. E. Goodwin, of St. Matthews' Parish, who spent the winter in Florida, arrived here on Friday night last and on Sunday conducted services in the church in Oakland, preaching to large and appreciative congregations.

The first car load of stone which is to enter into the construction of the new jail and sheriff's residence in Oakland, was received here last Saturday and on Monday was unloaded and hauled to the site of the new building. The stone were quarried at Bedford, Indiana.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Peddicord, who spent the winter in Washington, D. C., where the former took a course of treatment for an internal ailment, returned to Oakland Saturday night. Mr. Peddicord is very much improved in health, we are pleased to state, and trust that he will entirely recovered.

Councilmen Lawton and Bolden were at Frostburg on Saturday where they inspected some buildings built of concrete blocks, the inspection being made at the solicitation of the manufacturers of the blocks in view of the probability of the new city building here being erected of the same material. The Councilmen expressed themselves as being gratified with the material and there is no doubt that it will be used in constructing the new building in Oakland.

Mr. and Mrs. William Whorton and children spent Sunday with friends at Cumberland.

Mr. H. A. Kaese, Engles Mills, was a business visitor to Oakland Monday and Tuesday.

Rev. Thomas J. Stanton, of Lonaconing, was in Oakland last Friday visiting his relatives.

Quite a number of Oaklanders were at Cumberland Saturday where they attended Ringling's show which exhibited there that day.

Ex-County Treasurer William M. Lohr made final settlement with the Board of County Commissioners last night and was released as a public official.

Mr. Gavre Junkins, of Bayard, W. Va. was visiting his wife, who is keeping house for her brother-in-law, Mr. Chas. J. Newman, last Saturday and Sunday.

Dr. J. Lee McComas, who spent the winter in Baltimore, returned to Oakland Sunday afternoon and his many friends here were glad to welcome him.

Rev. J. B. Workman, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. church, has been tendered a vacation of one week which he will spend with his parents in Wayne county, West Va.

Sheriff Edward J. Frantz advertises in this paper today the sale of a valuble piece of real estate located in Oakland. See advertisement for particulars.

The announcement that Wizard Burbank has developed a new sort of potato, one that grows on the vine above ground instead of on the roots below the surface, is interesting as showing the possibilities of horticulture and for a number of other reasons. This latest wonder of scientific research and experiment is declared to have more the flaver of the fruit than the taste of the vegetable, although some features of the old-fashioned tuber are said to be concealed within its creamy whiteness. Whether it will replace the potato of present day commerce can only be determined after it has formally been presented to the public as a marketable product at a reasonable cost, but there is no assurance that the potato crop of this year will suffer because of its appearance in California. The announcement of Mr. Burbank that more attention is given to the development of fruits than to bringing out tubers prompts the belief that he looks upon his latest discovery as an important addition to fruits. Where he will stop cannot now be foreseen, but it is only reasonable to believe that if he is given time to harmonize his theory with actual practice the orchard of the future may be beautified by the presence of the carrot and turnip tree.

Jesus Before Pilate.

Pilate was a misfit as a procurator of Judea. He was careless of the religious prejudices of the people he was set to govern. The incident of the guilt shields and the mingling of the blood of the Galileans with that of their sacrifices proves it. Another popular appeal to Rome would depose him. Imagine, then, his feelings when the feast being at its heihgt, there appeared at his palace-gate a mob headed by the high priest, and all worked to highest pitch of religious frenzy. It was aggravating, yet fear required that they should not be driven unheard from the judgment-seat. Pilate made his first concession when he placed his judgment-seat outside the hall. The prosecutors of Jesus feared that in the palace there might be some leaven, and they would thus be disqualified from completing the feast of unleaven bred. Court having opened, the judge demanded the substance of the accusation. The answer was that the fact they had brought the accused to the governor was evidence of the aggravated character of His offense. Petty crimes they could punish; capital, Rome only. Ignoring what was said, Pilate bade them take Jesus and punish Him according to their law. This brought, as was expected, the humiliating confession that they had lost power to inflict capital punishment. Again the accusation is demanded, and the reply is that Jesus proclaims Himself King. Pilate rises, beckons Jesus to follow him into the judgment hall, and asks Him, "Art Thou (poor, lone peasant) King of the Jews?" Jesus puts the counter-question, "Do you ask Me if I am King in the Roman or Jewish sense?" and then proceeds, "In the Roman sense I am no king. In the mistaken Jewish sense I am no king. My kingdom is unlike any earthly kingdom. If it were like them, I would have trained My followers to arms." "Are you a King in any sense?" asks Pilate. "I am. My realm is truth. My subjects, the lovers of truth." "Truth! What transcendentalism is this?" A moment later Pilate is announcing the innocence of the accused. It raised a tumult. Accusations fly like arrows. Pilate sends Jesus to Herod Antipas then a guest in Jerusalem. Most of the public life of accused having been spent in Galilee, of which Herod was ruler. But the expedient fails. Jesus is returned. "What shall I do with Jesus?" asks the jaded governor. Then for the first time ring out the fateful words, "Crucify Him!" One more protest, Why crucify an innocent man? Let me scourge Him only." Like a wild sea the vociferation broke about the Gabbatha. Pilate tries to shrive himself by washing his hands. The Jews accept the onus. Pilate as a last appeal brings Jesus out after His scourging, and cries: "Behold the man! Is not this suffering enough?" The reply is, "Crucify Him!" Pilate retorts, "Then crucify Him, but He is innocent." Another expedient occurs to the vaccilating judge. It is customary to release at this festival a condemned prisoner. "If they choose, he will release Jesus." But they choose Barabbas. Now comes the warning of Pilate's wife. The judge was on the point even now, of acquitting Jesus, when the prosecutor uses the last arrow in his quiver, and cries "Let this man go, and you are Caesar's friend." "Behold your King," said Pilate. "We have no king but Cæsar," they retort. "Crucify!" "Shall I crucify your King?" "We have no king but Cæsar," resounds once more. So ended the long-drawn battle in which the life of Jesus was the stake. Pilate orders Him to the cross.

The Teacher's Lantern.

Pilate is conspicuous type of the time-server. He had no moral earnestness. He thought truth an indifferent matter. His ruling motive was to keep his place. To do this, if necessary, he was willing to condemn the innocent.

Yet to some degree he showed a Roman's proverbial regard for law and justice. He demanded the accusation and evidence. He contended with the Jews, making use of various expedients, until they were on the point of tumult; then, however, he ignominiously conceded to their demand.

Pilate's time-serving brought him small reward. He eked out his official life a few years; but, on the complaint of these very Jews whom he sought to placate by such a sacrifice of honor, he was finally deposed and exiled. His name will go down to the end of time in the deepest infamy, as it is repeated in every land and language in the imperishable creed "Crucified under Pontius Pilate."

* * * * *

Taken from the galleries of the Old World the pictures, themes of which were suggested by the life of Jesus, and art would be irretrievably impoverished; and gospal narrative still yields inspiration for the pencil of genius, a Munkacsy's "Christ before Pilate" shows.

* * * * *

"Art Thou King?" How unlikely! So it seemed to the procurator, proud of his power, and inclined to patronize the despised claimant to royalty. Yet Jesus was the real Ruler, though in disguise. Pilate's power, then on the wane, lasted a scant six years longer. Jesus' dominion, ever augmenting, has lasted over twenty centuries, extends from sea to sea, and is owned by three hundred million of the race. David's cradle hymn over the infant Solomon applies better to David' greater Son.

* * * * *

In the ultimate testing of character, the tinsel and trappings of office play no part. The moral qualities of justice, humanity, courage, and the like outweigh crowns, scepters, and thrones. Nothing fortuitous counts. In the final analysis it is what the man is that makes or unmakes him, not what he appears.

* * * * *

One morally earnest soul is the touchstone for all others. They rise or fall by such test. As Jesus is the supreme ethical and spiritual character, the destiny of men is fixed by their attitude toward Him. This is not arbitrary, but inheres in the very nature of the case. A choice must needs be made pressed. The cry which was heard at Pilate's judgement seat still rings in the conscience, "which will ye?" Will the loftiest character the world has ever known be taken at a model or one less worthy—or wholly unworthy. The circumstances do not admit of neutrality. It is still "for" or "against," "gathering with or scattering abroad." The same choice made two thousand years ago is making still in current life. There are tragic personal rejections of the Christ-ideal, as there was then a national rejection.

Mosaic from Commentaries.

Hall of judgment: A Latin term, denoting the palace of a Roman governor. What accusation? State your case. Not a malefactor—not delivered: Conscious they had no case of which Pilate could take cognizance, so insensate they had already found Him guilty of death under their law, but not having power under Roman law, to inflict extreme penalty, had only come for his sanction. What death He should die: Crucifixion being the Roman mode. Art Thou the king? Question occasioned by Jews' accusation that He was perverting the nation and calling Himself a king. Sayest thou of Thyself? Question designed to bring out whether the word king was meant in a political or religious sense. If in former it was a case Pilate; if in the latter he could take no cognizance. Am I a Jew? "I do not meddle with Jewish questions, but Thou art here on a charge, which, though it seems only Jewish, may yet involve treasonable matter." Pilate seeks to determine the relevancy of the charge. Not of this world: My kingdom is such an one as need give thee not the least alarm. Would My servants fight? A convincing argument: for if His servants did not fight to prevent their King from being delivered up, much less would they use force for the establishment of His kingdom. Not from hence: He says whence His kingdom is not—first affirming, next giving proof, then reaffirming. This was all Pilate had to do with. He could not obtrude the positive nature of His kingdom. Art Thou a King? No sarcasm: only surprise and uneasiness. Every one of the truth: A king of souls who have learned to count all things lost for truth. What is truth? Question of questions. When He had said this: As if by putting this question he was getting into interminable inquiries when this business required rather prompt action. He went: Thus missing a noble opportunity for himself and giving utterance to that consciousness of the want of all moral certainty which was the feeling of every thoughtful mind at that time. I find: No crime. Will ye therefore? Though convinced of Christ's innocence, Pilate acts as if He were guilty, probably because he was unwilling to run counter to the finding of the Sanhedrim.

URGES SIMPLE FUNERALS.

Less Money For Flowers and More for Food and Clothing.

The reading of a paper on reform in conducting funerals, by Rev. Dr. L. M. Zimmerman, of Christ Church, was a feature of the Eastern Conference of the Maryland Synod of the Lutheran Church, which met Monday at St. Luke's Church, Hampden, Md.

In part, Dr. Zimmerman said:

"Long lines of hacks, long bands of crepe, long addresses of eulogy, long lines of curiosity seekers, long lists of unnecessary expenses, should all be abbreviated. Often money is extravagantly expended at what we call Christian burials. Let the hour be one of privacy among the immediate members of the family, and the closest of friends, and not mere acquaintances.

"I would also recommend less extravagance in flowers. I believe, in flowers as a sentiment, which many love to have satisfied. Let there be a few to make the mound look like a garden in which was a sepulcher wherein was laid the body or Lord and Master, but do not reserve all for the dead. Rather give more to the living, and at death instead of giving so many for the dead, give some of that money to the widow and children for food and clothing. Lodges and societies might often do thereby a most charitable deed.

"Again, I would recommend retiring from grave immediately after the services. Pneumonia, consumption and the like are but the natural result of prolonged services, and the undertaker's business is naturally increased. I would recommend the burial service to be held the night previous to the burial. This would enable those to attend who otherwise are often prevented.

"Unless it is absolutely necessary, there should be no funerals on Sundays. Consult the minister before fixing the time for burial. Much embarassment would often be saved by this. There is room for reform as regards the family taking the last look at the dead. At such times we want the doors closed against all outsiders, when alone with our God and the dead, we say: 'Farewell, till we meet again.' It is a cruel custom forced upon the bereaved to take this last farewell before the cold criticism of the public at the close of the service.

"I do not object to touch the heart at times at the regular services of the church, causing perhaps the tear to flow, but it is nothing more than stage trickery for a minister to purposely work upon the feelings of the family at the funeral. Anyone can at such times cause the bereaved to weep, but what God wants the minister to then do is to comfort His people."

Letter to J. E. Legge.

Dear Sir: But few of the men who sell the hundred different paints in the market know much about them. All Devoe agents have a state chemist's certificate telling just what it's made of; they know a good deal, not only about Devoe but the rest; we see that they do. We buy every paint, that has any sale, and analyze it. Our agent finds out all about it.

When we know what a paint is made-of, we know how it will act; we know how far it goes, and how long it wears

Devoe is the standard; call it 100. The best of the rest is about 75; the worst about 25; the rest are between.

But the men, who sell them, don't know any better. They know what the maker tells them. That is: they know that he tells them. They don't know whether he tells them the truth or not.

The business is not conducted on knowledge; the less they know, the more comfortable they are.

Yours truly
F. W. DEVOE & CO.

ORGANIZATION movements are forming to fight the disfranchisement amendment all over the State. One of the latest is the large Democratic organization of Baltimore city, known as the Crescent Club. No "niggers," as our political opponents of this section are pleased to call their colored brethren, form a part of that organization; it is purely a white man's tribe, yet they see the iniquity of the proposed measure and mean to fight its passage to the bitter end. They see in the proposition only a scheme to keep Gorman and his henchmen in power by giving the election officials absolute control of the election machinery at the elections, and they do not propose to submit tamely to any such infamous plan. The Reform League, of Baltimore city, another practically Democratic organization, sees the result in the passage of the bad measure, and is going to list its efforts in the band of righteousness to help defeat the scheme. Thus decency is asserting itself, and we hope 'ere the ballots are cast the sentiment in favor of the right against wrong will become impregnable.

Small Chance Of Reform In Russia

By HENRY LABOUCHERE, London Editor and Member of Parliament

IT has been customary for a long time past to assume that the Russian monarchy stands upon a volcano which may burst forth at any moment AND HURL IT OFF THE FACE OF THE PLANET. The occasional assassination of a czar or a minister has lent color to this assumption, but really proves nothing. That there are explosive forces in existence in Russia is certain enough, but everything that has happened of late years points to the conclusion that they are powerless to accomplish ANY GREAT RESULT against the repressive strength of the government.

There is undoubtedly great and widespread discontent at the present moment, and it pervades all classes to an extent hitherto unknown. It is the direct outcome of the war. Not only is the war universally unpopular, BUT IT HAS OPENED THE EYES OF ALL CLASSES to the incompetence of their rulers and has probably inspired the more ignorant with contempt for the strength and resources of the government. The revolutionary element has doubtless seized this promising opportunity to inflame popular feeling and inspire "demonstrations" of strikers. But between this state of feeling AND REVOLUTION there is all the difference in the world. For a successful revolution the people must have arms, organization, leaders and a certain amount of money, and the Russian people do not seem to possess at present any one of these essentials.

AS LONG AS THIS IS SO THEY MUST BE POWERLESS AGAINST A CAST IRON DESPOTISM WIELDING ALL THE MATERIAL FORCES WHICH MODERN CIVILIZATION HAS PLACED AT THE DISPOSAL OF GOVERNMENTS—AT ANY RATE, SO LONG AS THE DESPOTISM KNOWS ITS OWN MIND AND IS READY TO ACT ON IT.

Not only the machinery, but the driving power of a revolution, seems to be wanting in Russia. In the mass the Russian people are inert, docile, ignorant AND BOUND TO THE CZAR and his government by a sort of patriarchal reverence. Except here and there among the work people of the few industrial centers the democratic ideas which have inspired revolutions in western Europe have taken no hold and seem foreign to the NATURE of the people. The "volcano" theory is preposterous under such circumstances. Small bands of conspirators, nihilists or anarchists, or whatever they may be called, may now and then succeed in removing one of the heads of the government hydra, a "palace revolution" may depose an incompetent czar, but of such a POPULAR upheaval as is required to overturn the existing government and seat in its place another resting on the suffrages of the people there seems to be only the remotest prospect. I may be wrong, but I see no chance of ANY REVOLUTION in Russia except through the agency of the army, AND ARMY MADE REVOLUTIONS DO NOT GENERALLY MAKE FOR LIBERTY.

The most contradictory accounts are current of the character and disposition of the present czar. On one side he is represented as a well intentioned BUT WEAK man, led this way and that by his women folk, his priests or his uncles; on the other, as a self willed and opinionated busybody, who insists on taking his own course in all affairs of state in defiance of the opinion of his wisest and best informed counselors. At one time we hear of him PANIC STRICKEN in his palace and suffering from a bad attack of "nerves," at the next of his whistling a popular air at councils of state while giving orders of the "DO NOT HESITATE TO SHOOT" type.

When the St. Petersburg strikers desired to present him with a petition his only wise course would have been to issue a sympathetic proclamation and offer to receive a deputation. Had he done this he would have been justified in warning the people that he COULD NOT allow a mob of 200,000 to come to see him at the palace. The last thing that he ought to have done was to conceal himself and leave the police and the soldiers to give his answer. Whether he was prompted to this course by cowardice OR BY SULLEN PRIDE and insolence matters really little. His duty was to face his people and assume all responsibility openly. He has shown the same character in regard to the war.

HAD HE BETAKEN HIMSELF TO MANCHURIA INSTEAD OF REMAINING AT HOME AND BLESSING THE TROOPS WHO WERE GOING THERE HE WOULD HAVE STOOD HIGHER TODAY.

By his conduct throughout the troubles of the last twelve months Nicholas II. has violated the national tradition centered in the czar. It may be that he has thereby done something to break down the RELIGIOUS AWE with which the mass of the people have always regarded their sovereign. I trust it may be so, for I am no believer in the divine rights and attributes of kings. To this extent recent events may have brought Russia NEARER to the day of emancipation from the rule of irresponsible autocrats. There IS evidently a liberal party in Russia, quite apart from mere revolutionary societies, and its numbers and authority seem to be growing.

IF THE CZAR IS SUCH A WEAKLING AS SOME REPRESENT HIM HE MAY YET YIELD SOMETHING TO THE EVIDENCE OF NATIONAL DISCONTENT THAT HE SEES ALL AROUND HIM, AND IN THAT WAY GOOD MAY COME OUT OF EVIL; BUT, JUDGING BY PRESENT SIGNS, THE PROCESS IS LIKELY TO BE BUT GRADUAL.

Man's Life Should Last A Century and a Half

By Rev. LYMAN BEECHER SPERRY of Oberlin, O.

MAN may live happily AND USEFULLY for 150 years. After a third of a century of scientific study such is my conclusion. The destructive forces which bring about the present low average of longevity are manifold, but I believe it is possible to enjoy good health and activity up to a century and a half by a proper understanding of the human possibilities AND THE EXERCISE OF THIS KNOWLEDGE.

THE LITTLE GREEN HAT

By TEMPLE BAILEY

Copyright, 1904, by Temple Bailey

It was such a beauty of a hat—all soft shaded velvets and shining breasts, with a few creamy roses close under the brim.

"You never trimmed anything quite so lovely as that, Miss Nannie," said Josephine.

Miss Nannie blushed all over her delicate old face.

"My dear," she protested, then she straightened up with a little gesture of pride, "I do think it is a success myself. I thought of you when I was trimming it. Your hair has just enough gold in it to go with the green beautifully"—

But Josephine interrupted her. "Oh, dear Miss Nannie, I can't possibly afford that hat. You mustn't think of it. Put it in the window and sell it to some one who can have more than one hat in two years." And Josephine glanced ruefully in a mirror which showed her shabby black turban, with a much worse for wear feather.

"I will let you have it at cost, my dear," began Miss Nannie, but Josephine stopped her.

"No, I must get used to being poor, you dear, and my friends must not spoil me. But, oh, Miss Nannie, Miss Nannie," cried poor Josephine, "why couldn't we have lost our money when I was old and ugly and didn't want pretty things?"

The little milliner patted the girl's hand. "It is too bad," she said, "and I wish you'd let me help you."

"As if I would"—indignantly—"when you have to do things all your life that you don't want to do. And now, as I can't have a new hat, you must help me plan something from these old things." And she untied a package and showed a conglomerate mass of silks and laces and ribbons.

But while Miss Nannie twisted and turned the inadequate materials Josephine could not resist one more trying on of the little green hat. She set it on her soft, bright hair and gave a glance in the mirror; then she whirled around, with a startled cry.

"Why, Jack Van Horn," she exclaimed, "where did you come from? Miss Nannie, you know Mr. Van Horn, don't you? I'm trying on hats," she continued, a little fluttered by the look he bent upon her.

"DO YOUR EYES PAIN YOU?" SHE QUESTIONED FEARFULLY.

"By Jove," he said, "that's a stunning hat, Miss Mason! I never saw you look so well. It's most becoming."

"But I can't have it," she said, with a sigh.

His eyes showed his surprise.

"I'll come in again and plan, Miss Nannie," she said hurriedly, and then, with a quick "Goodby" she was out and off.

"And now how can I serve you, sir?" asked Miss Nannie to her masculine customer, who stood looking after the bright vision.

"Oh—ah—yes—I came in to get some feathers. I'm making flies for my fishing," he explained, but she could see that his thoughts were rambling. "I—the green on that hat is what I want."

"I haven't another feather like that in the house," said Miss Nannie, "and it would be a pity to spoil the hat."

"Well, I'll buy the hat then," he said.

"Buy a whole hat to make a fly to catch a trout?" Miss Nannie's tone was suspicious.

The young man blushed, then he broke out awkwardly:

"Do you think I could send it to her?"

Miss Nannie stiffened.

"Miss Mason could not possibly accept it," she said.

"Oh, I know"—Mr. Van Horn was growing redder and redder—"not if she knew it came from me, but she ought to have it. It suits her beauty."

"Yes, it does," said Miss Nannie. "What a pity that her father should have failed at this time in her life!"

"And she so infernally proud," complained the young man. "Why, I've asked her to marry me a half dozen times, and she won't. She"—

Miss Nannie gave a quick cry of pleasure. "Oh, then you are the 'Jack' she talks of so often."

The young man seized her hands eagerly. "Did she call me that?" he cried rapturously. "I didn't suppose that even in her dreams she called me Jack," and his voice lingered on the word.

"Perhaps I shouldn't have told you," hesitated Miss Nannie.

"Oh, yes, you should. You have carried me straight into heaven. If she can think of me as 'Jack' she shall call me that or my name is not Jack Van Horn." Then he held out both hands to the little milliner. "Help me, Miss Nannie," he said.

"There is only one way that you will get Josephine Mason to marry you," said Miss Nannie, with decision.

"And that?"

"Work on her sympathies. She is proud, and she won't take if she can't give."

"If she would only give herself," groaned the young man.

"You can't lose your money," said Miss Nannie, "nor break your bones, nor go blind"—Then suddenly she gave a little cry.

"She's coming back," she said.

"Is she?" cried Van Horn; then, as Josephine entered, he sank into a chair.

"I left my"—began Josephine, and stopped as she caught sight of Van Horn's drooping figure.

"What's the matter with him, Miss Nannie? What's the matter, Mr. Van Horn?"

"Everything looks black," moaned the hypocrite, who had his eyes closed and was telling the truth.

Miss Nannie gave a quick gasp, then entered into the conspiracy with a zest.

"Pull down the shades, Josephine," she commanded. "It must be his eyes, poor fellow."

"I wonder if I am going blind," murmured Van Horn.

Josephine knelt by his side. "Do your eyes pain you?" she questioned fearfully.

He put out his hands gropingly until they touched her hair; then they rested there.

"I am a bit more comfortable now," he said.

"Open your eyes and see if you can bear the light."

Van Horn blinked and then shut them again.

"That this should come to me—in the strength of my youth!" he murmured.

Then Josephine gave way.

"Oh, Jack, Jack!" she wailed. "Let me take care of you."

Every fiber in Van Horn thrilled, but he was heroic.

"I could not accept such a sacrifice," he said.

"But"—and there was a softness in Josephine's voice that made Miss Nannie scurry away, with a murmur of "something to put on his eyes"—"but"—and Josephine's voice was a whisper—"it wouldn't be a sacrifice, Jack!"

How Van Horn was led home and how he stayed for a week in a darkened room was the outward manifestation of his deception. Only Miss Nannie knew the inward meaning of it all, and Miss Nannie never told. But when the wedding came a month or two later she brought out the bandbox in which the little green hat had remained ever since that fateful day, and Josephine wore it on her wedding journey. Then, and not until then, did she know of the ruse by which she had been won, and out of the fullness of her happiness she forgave her husband.

Lives Spent on the Water.

In Japan thousands are born and die on boats without ever living on shore. One of the most interesting features of Japanese life is the manner of living in boats and junks, thousands of which frequent every bay along the coast. The awkward junks always belong to the members of one family, and usually every member of the family, old and young, lives on board. The smaller sailboats are very narrow, and the sail (they never have but one) is placed very near the stern and extends from the mast about the same distance in either direction.

In these boats men and women are born and die without ever having an abiding place on shore. They wear but few clothes except when it rains, when they put on layers of fringy straw mats, which give them the appearance of being thatched. At night, if in harbor, they bend poles over the boat from side to side in the shape of a bow, cover them with this straw and go to sleep altogether like a lot of pigs.—London Tit-Bits.

Oriental Colors.

An oriental living in New York freed his mind about our taste in colors with a candor which was refreshing if not agreeable. "The favorite colors here are pink, sky blue and corn yellow," he said. "All three are hideous. They have no character, no history. In the east we love strong colors, especially after they have faded into soft, reminiscent tones. Our pinks and light blues and yellows are exquisite, having originally been strong, rich hues. Look at this magenta scarf embroidered in gold which was bought in Damascus. Is it not delightful? Yet compare it with the magenta silk handkerchief the Italian woman wears on Sunday. There is that much difference between your pinks and blues and ours. The trouble with you people here is that you cannot stand strong colors. We love them. You try to manufacture the tones we wait for time and the warm sun to make for us."—New York Post.

A Natural Inquiry.

This Lincoln story was originally told by Frederick Douglass in his lecture on John Brown. Just after his first inauguration President Lincoln was one day blacking his boots in democratic fashion when several foreign diplomats called and caught him in the act. One of them remarked sneeringly, "Mr. President, in our countries the chief executives do not black their own boots." "Indeed," said Mr. Lincoln, with evident curiosity. "Whose boots do they black?"

The cloth is pure wool. Not a fibre of anything else in it.

What a simple thing that is to say—and how difficult to do!

Every piece of cloth is subject to chemical test and the presence of anything but wool excludes it from the Clothcraft family.

Some of the cloth men think the Clothcrafters are foolishly particular and particularly foolish. Also they offer many "just-as-good" arguments.

But the Clothcrafters know of only one way to make all-wool clothing and that is to use all-wool cloth made of all-wool yarn containing nothing but pure wool fibres.

"Near-wool" looks pretty good in the piece but the truth will come out in the wear.

Wool holds its color and its firmness. There is no successful substitute for it—and yet Clothcraft Clothes are the only ready-to-wear brand that are always and absolutely all-wool and nothing but wool.

And they cost less than any others of like value.

Notice To Tax Payers!

This is to notify the tax payers of Garrett county that the Annual Levy for 1905 has been made and published, and to call their attention to the following abstract, section 45, Chapter 566, Acts of 1896, relating to the discount to be allowed and the interest to be charged on all tax bills:

"All county taxes shall be due and payable on the 1st day of September next succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and all county taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed, and after the first day of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid. The treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes regularly in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon his books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid. But the discount shall not be allowed unless the whole amount of State and county taxes are paid when same is made.

The Pledge.

WHENEVER you have crost your heart an' hoped to die, an' 'en
You go an' tell a secret 'at you said you won't, an' when—
No matter even if your sweetheart asts you to—you tell
What you have crost your heart about an' swored you'd keep it well.
You'll never get believed again, no matter what you do;
Nobody ever trusts you, an' the boys all lay for you
Whenever you go fishin', an' they never go along,
'Cuz if you cross your heart an' tell it is a dreadful wrong.

Onct Henry Bemis told me of a little boy he knew
Who crost his heart an' hoped to die an' swore he'd keep it true
An' went an' told the teacher what he crost his heart about
Ist 'cuz he was a toady, an' the boys all found it out.
So's after that they hated him, an' when they're in a crowd
An 'he 'ud come around they'd call him "tattle tale" out loud,
An' all of 'em would go away, an' Henry Bemis said
He bet he was so lonesome 'at he almost wished he's dead.

'Cuz when you cross your heart it is the solumestest thing
'At you can do, an' even if you was a mitey king
An' crost your heart an' hoped to die you wouldn't never dast
To tell what some one told you, but you'd have to keep it fast
An 'locked up in your secret breast till him 'at told you said
He'd take the cross off'n your heart, or else 'at he was dead,
An' 'en it wouldn't matter, but as long as he was mum
You'd never dast to tell it even to your dearest chum!

Georgie's Poetic Thought.

Two three-year-olds, Frankie and Georgie, were one glorious spring morning admiring a magnificent bed of pansies upon which hundreds of blossoms were turned to the eastern sun. The children were looking into the pansy faces with tireless interest and delight when Frankie discovered a bud and exclaimed:

"Here one ain't dot her eyes open yet."

Georgie, bending over, examined it gravely, then in a voice full of sympathy said:

"Poor little blind pansy!"

Notice To Tax Payers!

This is to notify the tax payers of Garrett county that the Annual Levy for 1905 has been made and published, and to call their attention to the following abstract. Section 45, Chapter 566, Acts of 1890, relating to the discount to be allowed and the interest to be charged on all tax bills:

"All county taxes shall be due and payable on the first day of September next succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and all county taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed, and after the first day of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid. The treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes regularly in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon his books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid. But the discount shall not be allowed unless the whole amount of State and county taxes are paid when same is made.

BRICK WORKS TO BE ESTABLISHED NEAR OAKLAND

Machinery Has Already Been Purchased and Will Be Installed Shortly.

CAPACITY 10.000 BRICK PER DAY

Messrs. D. E. Bolden, Austin Brown, Truman West, James A. Delawder and John Felty, Jr., Will Form the Company to Operated Plant.

Monday Messrs. John Felty, Jr., and D. E. Bolden went over to Kingwood, West Va. where they purchased the machinery and fixtures of the Kingwood Brick Company at private sale from the trustees, the Kingwood concern having gone into voluntary liquidation and disposed of its plant in this manner.

The gentlemen interested in the new industry include Messrs. D. E. Bolden, Austin Brown, Truman West, James A. Delawder and John Felty, Jr., they having associated themselves recently for the purpose of manufacturing brick, the need of such an industry being felt here greatly.

The machinery will be brought to Oakland within a week or two and located south of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad opposite the mill of the Oakland Manufacturing Company in the east end of town where a large deposit of the finest clay in this whole section of the country has been discovered and submmitted to rigid tests.

The machinery purchased includes boiler and engine, a brick making machine and grinder combined capable of moulding ten thousand brick per day.

Memorial Day Tuesday.

Memorial Day will be quietly observed in Oakland as has been the custom for several years past. On one occasion at the solicitation of a gentleman of the cloth all saloons and other business places closed at the noon hour and remained closed the balance of the day. This year the people will look for a repetition of the occurence.

Sent to Washington.

Rev. F. A. B. Wunnenberg, a former rector of St. Peter's Catholic church of Oakland, who has been in charge of a church near Baltimore since his leaving Oakland, has been assigned by Cardinal Gibbons to the rectorship of St. Mary's church at Washington, D. C. This is the only German church of the District of Columbia and is one of the most beautiful of the National capital

BLOOMINGTON.

Mr. William Mullen, of Fredericksburg, Va., who has been visiting his father, Mr. Andrew Muilen, of this place, and relatives at Piedmont, Elkins and Pruntytown, W. Va., returned to his home on last Tuesday. "Billie" is a Bloomington boy, born and reared in this place, is now a prosperous and substantial granger in his adopted city.

Mrs. Albert Ingraim, of Davis, accompanied by her two little boys, spent Monday with her sister, Mrs. Cross.

The Juniors will hold a three days' festival and entertainment in their new hall, some time in June, the proceeds to go to paying off an indebtedness on their hall.

Dr. James Rankin, of Luke, a recent graduate of the Baltimore Medical College, is spending a few days in town with Dr. Kemp, preparatory to locating at Hartmonsville, W. Va.

Mr. James Cross has organized a team of base ball players and on account of their weight, not one under 175 pounds, and their special capabilities at the bat, has named them the Bangers. They took a game from a team composed of the best players of Elk Garden and Blaine, at Blaine last week, scoring 17 runs to their opponents' four. Last Saturday they meet the Franklin team at Pea Vine Park and shut the visitors out by a score of 20 to 0. They are practicing every afternoon preparing an attack on the Piedmont team, the latter reported "on the hog" and "dead easy" for most anything

Mr. G. C. Pattison is in Baltimore a few days of this week on business.

Mrs. Gutherie, of Baltimore, mother of Rev. Charles Gutherie, is visiting Dr. and Mrs. Kemp.

Mrs. Arthur Bennett, of Cross, was in town on Monday.

Mrs. John Tompson, who has been very ill for the past week, is reported in an improved condition.

Mr. and Mrs. John Carlisle, of Berryville, Va., arrived in town on Tuesday afternoon, called here on account of the serious illness of his sister, the aged Mrs. Simpson.

A Plucky Postmaster.

About three weeks ago James Lawrence, William Smar and a man named Johnson, it is alleged, went through a store and postoffice in Albright, Preston county, W. Va., and it now turns out that the three men are badly wanted in different sections of the state. Postmaster Lozier, of Albright, a big husky man, took the robbery of his office as a personal affront and started out alone to capture the men. He trailed them thirty miles, captured all three and turned them over to the authorities without any assistance whatever. They have been taken to Weston W. Va., for trial.

RENNINGER & OFFUTT APPOINTED RECEIVERS

For Hinebaugh & Edwards. Hardware Merchants of Oakland. Who Recently Assigned.

CASE IS NOW IN U. S. COURT.

Order Was Signed Monday by Judge Thomas J. Morris Upon Petition Filed by Oakland and Baltimore Creditors of the Firm.

The recent failure of Messrs. Hinebaugh & Edwards, the Oakland hardware merchants, who made a voluntary assignment of their stock of mercandise to Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill, of Oakland, is now in the United State Court for the District of Maryland, Judge Morris having appointed on Monday Messrs. Renninger & Offutt receivers of the concern upon a petition filed by an Oakland and two Baltimore creditors of the firm, thus removing the case from the Circuit Court county and placing Messrs. Renninger & Offutt in charge of the assets.

Prior to making the assignment Messrs. Hinebaugh & Edwards executed a bill of sale on their goods to the Bindley Hardware Company of Pittsburg, Pa., for quite a large amount. This, in connection with their assignment made the Pennsylvania parties preferred creditors and the probabilities are that the other creditors would have received little if anything on their accounts, hence the action in placing the matter in the bankrupt court.

Messrs. Renninger & Offutt qualified this morning as receivers by filing their bond in the sum of $5000, the American Bonding Company of Baltimore becoming their sureties.

DIED.

STEYER—At his home near Stoyer, this county, after a brief illness, Mr. John G. Steyer, aged about seventy-five years, on Tuesday of last week. Mr. Steyer was the father of several children and was one of the pioneer settlers of the Ryans Glade country. His funeral took place on last Thursday afternoon.

ALBRIGHT—At his home near Cranesville, on Tuesday of last week, after a prolonged illness, Mr. Edmund Albright, aged about eighty years. The deceased leaves a number of children.

THOMPSON—Cynthia Thompson, of near Oakland, departed this life on the 19th inst. and was buried at the Red House church on Sabbath morning, May 21st. Rev. E. Manges pastor of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, officiated at the funeral. The esteem in which Miss Thompson was held was attested by the large concourse of people that gathered to pay a last tribute of respect. Only about two-thirds of the people present were able to get inside the church. Miss Thompson was 75 years and 26 days old.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr James Burley, of Moundsville, W. Va., is a guest of the Hicks House.

Mr. Geo. Fulmer has opened a meat market in the room adjoining Hammond's store.

Contractor Liller, of Keyser, W. Va., was a business caller at this place on Monday last.

Dr. J. L. Squires spent last week with his family at this place.

Miss Agnes Neaves and her brothers, Ernest, Charles and Allen, of Charles county, Md., are with Miss Sarah Harris.

Mrs. Laughlin, of Virginia Homes, is a guest of Mrs. P. T. Garthright, of this place.

Mr. Wm. Wetherald, of Charles county, Md., was a recent visitor to this place.

Messrs. Brydon and Henry Gibson, and "Pat" Crane, of this place, are working at Henry, W. Va.

Mr. Harvey Cuppett is fixing up the store room east of the post office for an ice cream room.

Under the new schedule all passenger trains stop at the Park on Sunday to take on and put off passengers east of Cumberland and west of Grafton.

Preaching in the Methodist church next Sabbath morning by Pastor Metheney.

Mr. Albert Schrock is at Pitcarin, Penna.

Messrs. Cunningham and M'Kinney, directors of the Loch Lynn Hotel Co., and Mrs. L. B. C. List and Mr. Charles List, of Washington, D. C., spent the early part of the week at Loch Lynn Hotel, planning for the season of 1905.

Mr. P. E. Willard, of Cameron, W. Va., his rented Mrs. R. G. Richardson's cottage on F street.

Mrs. W. H. H. Sheets and daughter Miss Bessie, of Pittsburg, Pa., opened their cottoge for the summer Friday last.

Mr. Lloyd Crane, of this place, went to Farmtown, Va., last Thursday.

Miss Sarah Harris, of Franklin, Va., reached the Park Thursday last and is getting her house in order for guests.

Mr. T. W. Stewart and wife have moved into one of the Park Improvement Company's cottages in Cozy Row.

Mr. W. H. Malett, of Pittsburg, Pa., has rented Parkview for the summer.

Last Saturday, 3 p. m., Mr. T. H. Mong was buried at Wheeling, W. Va. Mr. M. was well known here as a pleasant and cheerful friend who delighted in spending the summer at this place. At the time of his death he was 80 years of age. He was born in Hagerstown, Md., but for a number of years has made Wheeling his home.

The Blake cottage has been painted and otherwise improved, for the occupancy of Mrs. Good and family, of Wheeling, who for the past several years spent their summer vacation in this delightfully located house.

Mrs. Dr. Nihiser, of Keedysville, Md., is a guest of her sister, Miss. R. Weems, of this place.

June 4th will be Children's Day at Wesley Chapel. An interesting program is being arranged for the occasion. Preaching at 2 p. m. that day instead of 10:30 a. m. Bring your dinner and spend the day.

Mr. D. N. Snyder, of Fairmont, is a guest of Romney cottage.

Mr. Irvine R. Dickie, of Cumberland, Md., has rented one of the Talson cottages for the summer.

Important Personages at Deer Park.

As usual Deer Park will entertain one or more foreign diplomats this season. The German Ambassador will vacate his Washington residence very early this year and install his family in one of the handsome hotel cottages at Deer Park, his attaches and clerical force taking suites of rooms in the east annex of the hotel proper. Other members of the foreign legations at Washington will be numbered among the Deer Park residents during the summer.

Hendricks' New Bank.

Hendricks, W. Va., is to have another bank in the near future. It is to be a National bank. The promoters are the Jennings brothers who are now building the town of Jenningstown, Tucker county.

Wills Admitted to Probate.

In the Orphans' Court Tuesday the wills of John G. Stoyer and Joseph Spiker, both of this county, whose deaths occurred recently, were admitted to probate.

Mr. Marcellus S. Wolf was appointed administrator of the personal estate of the late David Fike.

MANUAL TRAINING.

Some Thoughts Regarding the Value of Manual Training to Pupils

So much can be said in favor of Manual Training, as taught in our Maryland schools, that I will endeavor to give but a brief outline of its many advantages.

We hear the daily cry ringing in our ears, "Give us practical men and women." What other opportunities can be presented to make education more practical than those presented in the Manual Training schools? Without manual education the boy or girl gets only a one-sided education. What we want to give to our pupils is a training that will develop them physically as well as mentally. Manual Training schools afford the means, if we employ them judiciously. Rousseau said: "If, instead of keeping a boy poring over books, I employ him in a workshop, his hands will be busied to the improvement of his understanding; he will become a Philosopher, while he thinks himself only an artisan." Such schools educate the whole being and teach the pupil to see things in their true state, besides training the eye and hand to work together.

Some will say that they don't want their children to learn a trade; that while in school they could be better employed by spending that time in studying their other lessons. Manual Training isn't intended to make mechanics out of the pupils any more than the study of algebra and geometry is intended to make mathamaticians of them, or the study of physics is intended make philosophers of them.

Building castles in the air is the occupation of the great many of our pupils. Some one has said: "Build castles in the air, if you will; then build foundations under them." Now, it seems to me that so much poring over books is like building castles in the air, and putting into practice that which is to be built under them. Why not teach the practical with the theoretical?

"The finest fruit of education is character." Keep a boy busy and he will keep out of mischief. Manual Training supplies this long-felt want.

Professor Woodward, in his treaties on Manual Training, says: "The Manual Training school, when well conducted, seems to me to furnish to its pupils just the opportunity which Walter Scott, in Waverly, says that his young hero was losing forever—the opportunity of acquiring habits of firm and assiduous application; of gaining the art of controlling, directing and concentrating the powers of his mind for earnest investigation, an art far more essential than even that intimate acquaintance with classical learning, which is the primary object of study (at school)."

One more thought. Manual Training will tend to aid the boy in chosing a vocation, in which some costly mistakes are often made, both by the parent and by the child, by developing those innate activities which tends to lie dormant during a purely classical course of study—H. A. Loraditch, Manual Training Teacher, Oakland, Maryland, in Grafton Leader.

Plain Talk By a Baptist Divine.

Baptist services were held at Deer Park last Sunday morning and the pastor, Rev. W. H. Faust, preached to a large congregation. He took for his theme the words "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it."

He said that the training of children was most important; that as a child was trained so would it be in after life; that it was highly necessary that proper training should be accorded to children.

He said that children would get training anyway, and it was important that the training at home should be of the best; good home influences he regarded essential. He made the statement that as far as he was aware the Deer Park public school had not received a single visit from any members of the school board; no doubt they were too busy in their daily vocations to give it attention and he further said that during the school session now closed, not a single parent or any of the pupil, attending the school had taken the trouble to visit it to make any inquiry as to how their children were getting along or give a word of encouragement to the teachers. This he declared indicated a decided lack of interest in the school training of their children. The discourse was listened to throughout and the preacher's burning words made an impression.

CONTRACT FOR GRADING LIBERTY STREET AWARDED

To James O. Hinebaugh at His Bid of 43 Cents Per Cubic Yard.

THE TOTAL COST WILL BE $1300

Or Thereabouts—Contractor to Enter Into Bond For the Faithful Performance of the Contract—Curbing Bids Not Considered.

The special meeting of the Town Council called for the purpose of considering bids and awarding contracts for the grading and curbing of Liberty street from Wilson street to Gilmor street, was held on Monday night when the bids for grading were opened and the contract awarded to Mr. James O. Hinebaugh, of Oakland, at his bid of 43 cents per cubic yard for excavating and filling where necessary.

Other bidders for this work were Messrs. Joseph Cogley and J. W. Whorton, of Oakland, and M. Kennedy & Son, of Parkersburg, W. Va.

The total cost for grading the three blocks on Liberty street will approximate $1300 according to the estimate made by the engineer who laid out the grade lines. Mr. Hinebaugh, by a resolution passed by Council, will be required to execute a bond in the sum of $2500 for the faithful performance of his contract and to have the work completed on or before July 20th or to forfeit to the town the sum of $5 per day for each and every day thereafter that the work remains incomplete.

The bids for curbing the same street submitted by Messrs. Cogley of Oakland, Kennedy & Son of Parkersburg, and Fuller Bros., of Frostburg, were rejected and the clerk instructed to readvertise for bids, which advertisement will be found in these columns today.

Council discussed to some length the advisability of issuing the remaining four thousand dollars of bonds of the original issue of $25,000 authorized by the Act of 1898 to be used in improving the streets and to liquidate the outstanding debt incurred by a former Council for street improvement. This matter will be further discussed and final action taken at the regular meeting of the Council to be held on Monday night, June 5th.

In the absence from town of Mayor McComas and President Lawton of the Council, Joseph E. Harned is now acting Mayor and President pro tem.

CHURCH DEDICATED AT BLOOMINGTON

Last Sunday When Rev. Charles E. Guthrie, of Baltimore, Delivered the Sermon.

The new Methodist Episcopal church at Bloomington, this county, which was recently completed, was dedicated to the service of God on last Sunday, Rev. Charles E. Guthrie, of Baltimore, delivering the sermon. Mr. Guthrie was born at Bloomington, where he has many warm personal friends and admirers. He is a nephew of Gov. W. M. O. Dawson of West Virginia and a brilliant scholar.

The cornerstone of the church was laid on September 25th by the Masonic lodge of Westernport assisted by the Jr. O. U. A. M. Council of Bloomington. The building was erected by Mr. William Sigler of Piedmont.

Rev. Guthrie preached at the morning and afternoon services on Sunday. Special music for the occasion was furnished by the choir of the M. E. church of Piedmont.

At the evening services Rev. A. H. Thompson, of Frostburg, spoke of the necessity of a church in every community, its relation to good morals and intellect. The sum of $80 was lacking to free the building from debt, but this was soon raised when the trustees, Messrs. Dr. H. M. Kemp, Rev. J. W. Howard, James Coffman and George Warnick presented the church to the minister for dedication who was assisted by Rev. Cecil, of Carroll county, Md., and Rev. A. R. Snedegar, the pastor, and other ministers present.

Among all who assisted in the enterprise none deserve greater praise for their untiring energy and faithfulness than Miss Lotta Kemp and Mrs. Fanny Bartlett to whom were entrusted the financial interests.

Mr. William Crim, of Cincinnati, O., arrived here this morning and will remain a few days visiting relatives.

AT FRIENDSHIP'S CALL

By ETHEL BARRINGTON

Copyright, 1901, by Ethel Barrington

Dusk was clouding the landscape as Noah Sterling, powerfully built, with blue eyes in contrast to his gray hairs, stepped on the porch. He leaned against the framework of the door and smoked his pipe, apparently oblivious to the voices floating out from the kitchen. Yet he heard, for his brows lowered and met above his eyes, and his teeth shut sharply on the brier's stem.

"I'll enter no family unwelcomed. Your father has his pride, I mine"—The girlish voice was pitched high and broke suddenly. Then followed indistinct pleadings from her companion, whom she answered: "It's true, all true. But I'm in the mill, a mill hand, while you—some day you will be boss; you'll own all; you"—

"Don't say it, Bess. I am the unhappiest creature in the world, the son of a self made man. Father forgets he was once a laborer, choosing his wife for himself. I'll do the same. Let him do what he will with the property. I've brains and hands. His blood fills my veins, and I'll win out, as he did."

"You are all he has in the world. I'll not come between you"—

Noah Sterling glanced into the dim room. He could see Bess fighting against her love and the stalwart son of the mill owner as he held her hands. Noiselessly he stepped from the porch to the coolness of the little garden. It was quite dark when he returned, but no light greeted him from the open door, but a low sob broke the stillness and guided him to the girl's side. She sat by the table, her head buried in her arms, her slight frame trembling with emotion. Noah watched her silently.

"Oh, Daddy Noah, my heart is broken"— The words were scarcely audible. Sterling sat down heavily, resting his work worn hand on her arm.

"You sent him away bravely. Now you cry for him."

Bess cleared her voice. There was a little laugh of self pity in her tone as she spoke.

"That's the woman of it. Yet it's you who spoiled me. When did I ask for aught—and you not give it to me? Oh, dad, if you could only help me now!"

"You've set your heart on this. You truly love young Thadd?"

"He's all the world"— Sterling withdrew his hand abruptly. Impetuously Bess flung her arms about his neck. "Not that I love you less, dear, or ever could, but you loved my mother—you understand—you must—you are all that is left to me now."

"Understand! Sure I understand." Soothing her, he drew her to his knee and held her in his arms, as he had so often done as a child. Comforted, she prepared to retire.

"Are you not going to bed?" she questioned, her candle illuminating her heavy eyes.

"Presently, child."

Yet he had scarcely stirred when the gray dawn showed in the east; then he rose stiffly, determination in his face. "I've just got to do it. I swore I never would, but I will."

At noon next day Noah Sterling entered the office. Thaddeus Giles, the boss, was writing when the foreman appeared, but he nodded kindly.

"Sit down, Noah. I'll be through in a minute." Sterling took the indicated chair near the desk, absently twirling his cap in his hand.

"Glad to see you, old man. Anything special that you dropped in for?" asked Giles, pushing his papers from him and swinging around in his chair.

"I wanted particular to see you," began Sterling uncertainly. "It's about the young folks—your boy Thadd and Bess Hardy"—

"Stop, Noah," broke in the mill owner sharply. "Some things I allow no interference in. It's none of your business anyhow."

"Hold hard. I'm one of your hands—have been for years—yet we were kids together, you, Tim, and me. Was there ever a scrape that we didn't share?"

"We were sure enough pals." The boss' eyes twinkled at sundry remembrances.

"When Tim died—you don't recollect—you were planning your own big deal. But I knew. There was a baby, Thadd. I ain't never told you. But the night Tim went I sat with him. He worried awful about that baby. Seemed as if he just couldn't die till I set his mind at rest. I swore the child should be first with me, at any sacrifice I'd make her happy and I will—I will." Sterling leaned forward. Giles returned his look questioningly.

"I don't understand what you are after," he said at last.

"Bess is Tim's daughter—Tim and Bessie's baby."

"Bessie Fields that was?"

"The same. You begin to see now."

"Come, Noah, this is ridiculous! Because Tim was our playmate it does not follow I should allow my son to throw himself away upon his daughter, a mill hand. However, for the sake of old times and what I owe to you besides I'll make my position clear." As Giles paused he showed in every line the inflexibility that had gained for him success, but he was reckoned a just man. "I worked and planned night and day, year by year. Now I am rich. My son will be richer still. He is the center of my ambition. He must marry in the world for which I educated him. He must be the gentleman his father had no chance to be."

"What your boy is to you Bess is to me," said Sterling, with an effort. "I loved her mother. The words sort of strangle me, Thadd. I call you that just once, for we are back in the old days. Yes, the words choke me, but for Bess' sake I'll speak them. She said I had always given her what she cried for, though I'm none too sure of myself this time. I am going to try. You want a lady for your boy. You want more—a pure, good woman. Bess is that. She has book learning too. But, Thadd, it cost money, all I'd saved, and when I took the spell of rheumatism cash ran low, and she—bless her grateful heart—she went into the mill till we could pull things straight. It's the factory stamp you have against her—that's how she got it. Thadd, you mind the year of the strike; it's all of twenty years now. You had just opened your first shop, with everything tied up. It was sink or swim, and there was no insurance. You remember the powder the strikers smuggled in and the slow match burning when you and your watchman came suddenly upon it. You were white, and I don't know as I blame you. Death brushed shoulders with us that night. Your watchman stood to his duty. I cut that match"—

"I would have given you a share in the concern," protested the boss, living again the suspense of that awful moment.

"I'm a workman—never could be different. But you were grateful. You gave me a promise—a sort of oath"—Giles sat motionless, the dawn of comprehension in his strong self willed face. Noah held him, eye to eye. "Seems like taking a mean advantage. It's powerful hard to ask. But I loved her mother. Don't decide now. See the girl. Learn to know her. I'll stand aside. I'll not be in your road."

"It's a pretty stiff test," said Giles slowly as he rose, memories, pride, ambition, gratitude, all warring within him. Then he stretched out his hand, and the two locked palms. "You have been a long time calling, but now you have spoken I honor your claim, old friend."

Unappreciated Services.

Chatting across the table in an uptown restaurant, two young men exchanged confidences concerning their activities in a nearby department store. "I can work to the limit of my strength if it is appreciated," said one of them, "but the more one does for the head of my department the more he exacts, and he appreciates nothing." The other young man subscribed to the sentiment and added, "I put the new boy who came a few days ago wise to the situation and advised him not to hustle quite so lively, for if he ever lets up a little it will be concluded that he has lost interest in his job." An employer who overheard the conversation remarked to a friend who was lunching with him: "That is the secret of shirking service. The man who never has an appreciative word for those in his employ when they manifest an interest in his business stunts available usefulness and discounts the diligence of which he would otherwise get the benefit."—New York Tribune.

"Why, I—er—er—er—what do you mean?"

"Oh, nothing! Only if you are you ain't a-going to surprise her. At dinner jus' now she bribed me an' my little brother to go to bed at half past 7. She's hung four Cupid pictures on the parlor wall, moved the sofa over in the darkest corner, got ma an' pa to go callin' next door, shut the dog in the cellar an's been practicing 'Because I Love You' on the pianner all the afternoon. You'll get her all right, only if she tells you 'bout its being sudden tell her it's all bunkum!"—Philadelphia Telegraph.

When the Dutch Owned the Nutmegs.

At one time no one but a citizen of the Netherlands, officially licensed, could own a nutmeg plantation. But this policy could not long be enforced against the interests of commerce. The tree is now cultivated in India, Jamaica, Trinidad and Brazil. The nutmeg is liable to the attacks of a kind of beetle; hence a coating of lime is generally given to the nut to protect it from the ravages of the insect. The tree bears fruit the whole year round, but the chief harvest time comes in November.

Jericho Has A Sensation

Pap Perkins Tells of a Case of Swearing Between Deacon Hardman and Deacon Goodhue.

SEVERAL events have happened since the town of Jericho was found to shake it from center to circumference, but nothing ever produced greater excitement than Deacon Hardman's lawsuit against Deacon Goodhue. Both were steady old men who were looked up to by the community, and they had been friends for years.

One day Deacon Goodhue borrowed the other's hoe to work in the garden and a few minutes later broke it off at the shank. While he contended that it was old and rusty and ready to break, he offered to buy a new one to replace it. Much to his surprise, he was allowed to do so, and he went home to say to his wife:

"Martha, I've known Deacon Hardman for thirty years and have just found him out. He's a human hog, and if he ever goes to heaven I want to go somewhere else."

For two weeks after that the two deacons nodded coldly to each other whenever they met, and it gradually became known to Jericho that their relations were strained. Then one morning Deacon Goodhue set out to drive five hogs over to the weighing scales. He had to pass the other deacon's house, and as he came along the gate was open and all the hogs made a rush for it. He was trying to drive them out of Deacon Hardman's yard when the latter came out and said:

"By gum, Deacon Goodhue, but this is goin' too fur—too fur! You opened that gate and driv your hogs in on me a-purpose!"

"I never did, and you know I didn't!" retorted Deacon Goodhue as he paused in his running.

"Yes, you did."

"No, I didn't."

"Do you call me a liar?"

"Yes, if you call me one!"

"Take it back or I'll mop the ground with you!"

"Come out here and I'll make you see stars!"

Then and there the deacons clinched and rolled on the grass together, and they were choking each other and breathing hard when Moses Schemerhorn came along and separated them. Deacon Hardman went straight to Justice Somerfield and swore out a warrant for assault and battery, and two days later the trial came off, and Jericho had a sensation to beat a landslide or a volcano.

Both men had their friends and the public was divided. The only person who had witnessed the fracas was Deacon Hardman's wife, but there were other witnesses sworn.

Old Mrs. Taylor swore that she had always suspected Deacon Goodhue to be a man of violent temper and that he only needed to be kicked to become a murderer. Moses Hunt was a mile away that morning looking for his cow, but he swore that Deacon Hardman was the sort of man to lose his temper and do awful things if he found a strange hog rooting up his hollyhocks. Abner Crossman, who had known both parties for thirteen years, swore that he had known Deacon Goodhue to fall off a haystack, get mired in a swamp and fight bumblebees for half an hour without losing the smile on his face, and he could not believe that he had begun this fuss. Opposed to him was Trueheart Johnson, who said he had seen Deacon Hardman kicked head over heels by a cow, run over by a hog and knocked down by a ram and that he preserved a humble spirit throughout and even asked the cow to forgive him if he had hurt her feelings.

Mrs. Hardman's testimony was that she was washing the dishes after breakfast when she heard her husband give a grunt and rush from the house. She followed him to the door and heard and saw all that subsequently passed, though in such a nervous state that she could not be sure of anything. She felt almost sure that Deacon Goodhue said "by gum" and "devil" and "old crank," but she wouldn't be positive of it. She was almost as sure that her husband started to sing a hymn and made some Scriptural quotation, but she might have been mistaken. She was not sure who grabbed the other first, but she could swear on the living Bible that they had trodden all the cucumbers into the earth and broken down most of her tiger lilies. She ended by saying that she had had rheumatism for twenty-six years and that whenever she returned a cup of borrowed sugar she always heaped the measure up.

It took two days to try the case, and meanwhile all business, including the sawmill, was suspended. There was no jury, and when almost everybody in town had sworn on one side or the other Justice Somerfield put on his most dignified look and said:

"This case seems to go back to the hoe and to Deacon Goodhue's garden. Was there any need of the deacon working in his garden that day? What had become of his own hoe? Was the borrowed hoe rusty in the shank or was it not? If Deacon Goodhue had not hit a stone with it would it have broken? He offered to buy a new hoe to replace the old one, but wasn't he hoping that Deacon Hardman would refuse it? Deacon Hardman had had that hoe for ten long years, and was he glad that it was broken and that he had a chance to get a new one in its place?

"Then there were the hogs. Any man who had ever set out to drive one hog along the road, to say nothing about five, knew that the animal wouldn't go straight for a rod at a time. He couldn't spy a hole in the fence without wanting to see if it was a fit. He wouldn't be a hog to pass an open gate without making a rush for the opening.

"Then the deacons confronted each other. They were feeling edgewise about the hoe, and it was to be inferred that it didn't take much to get their backs up. As to whether the lie was actually given and who gave it first is a matter in doubt. The same is true as to who grabbed first, but there can be no possible doubt that many cucumbers and tiger lilies were destroyed and that Deacon Hardman emerged from the conflict with a skinned nose. Taken full and by and back and forth, it was about an even thing. The costs will be divided between them, business resumed at 7 o'clock tomorrow morning, and if either has any hard cider in the cellar he will be expected to treat the other, and both make up and let hoes and hogs go to grass forever more." M. QUAD.

Giving Him the Facts.

A young man with a swelled head made a peremptory demand for an increase in salary. The head of the concern did not dispute his argument that he had done much to build up the business of the firm, but tried to convince the young man that every one's position could be filled.

"Suppose, for instance," said he, "you should die. Some one would take your place."

"Oh," replied the young man, "that is a supposition."

"Then you may suppose yourself discharged," was the answer of the employer, "and you will find that is a hard fact."—New York Press.

Fire and Sword at Columbia

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

February 16-17, 1865

[Copyright, 1905, by G. L. Kilmer.]

THE left wing of General Sherman's army, commanded by General H. W. Slocum, marching through the Carolinas to a junction with Grant's army on James river, reached a point about three miles from the city of Columbia, S. C., the 16th of February, 1865. Slocum was confronted by the Saluda river, which was bridgeless at that point. Sherman's right wing, under General O. O. Howard, was also close to Columbia, and a portion of Howard's troops marched through the town and encamped outside.

The movement through the Carolinas, which, if carried out, would bring Sherman up in the rear of the army of General Robert E. Lee, then defending Richmond and Petersburg against the Federal forces commanded by Grant, had begun the 1st of February, and after sixteen days' marching, working and skirmishing the columns that had taken separate routes on leaving Savannah were at last united.

The failure of the Confederates in the Carolinas and Georgia to fall upon Sherman's divided forces and beat them in detail during this march was a subject of controversy at the time and has since attracted the attention of military men. Simultaneously with Sherman's departure from Savannah a conference of Confederate officers was held near Augusta, Ga., to arrange the details of plans for Sherman's defeat. General P. T. Beauregard, who had held command in South Carolina in 1863, came up from the west, to be followed by Confederate troops that had fought at Franklin and Nashville in the closing western campaign of 1864. General W. J. Hardee, the commandant who cleverly slipped out of Savannah with all his army upon the approach of Sherman from western Georgia and represented about 20,000 available troops, was there. General D. H. Hill, one of Robert E. Lee's ablest officers, was also present, and General Gustavus W. Smith, another capable leader, was there at the head of 1,500 Georgia militia.

General Hardee's troops available for immediate use against Sherman numbered 14,500 men, leaving garrisons to hold Charleston and other important posts on the seacoast. General Beauregard promised that 11,000 troops from the former army defending Atlanta against Sherman would soon be in the Carolinas. In fact, half of them were already near Augusta. The cavalry corps of General Joe Wheeler, which had skirmished ahead of Sherman through all the march to the sea, mustered about 6,000 sabers and was already confronting Sherman's outposts.

South Carolina had about 5,000 militia, and General M. T. Butler's division of cavalry, which had been fighting under Lee in Virginia, was included in the force, making a total of about 33,000 troops which could be concentrated, it was thought, upon Sherman's route of march by the middle of February. The southern militia could not be expected to serve outside of their states, and the conscription had exhausted the fighting men of the region.

Although the outlook was discouraging, General Beauregard, sick in mind and body, assumed command as the ranking officer present and determined to make a last effort to hold up Sherman's march. But when the scattered detachments were ready to set out for the point of concentration the game had changed. Sherman was in motion and close to Columbia. General Butler's cavalry division managed to carry through to Wheeler, who all the time skirmished along Sherman's front, a couple of batteries of light artillery and some small detachments of infantry from Hardee's command at Charleston.

Wheeler and Butler together did what they could to burn bridges and hold against the Federals the long causeways through the innumerable swamps which Sherman had to pass in going from the Savannah to the Congaree river. However, the leading division of Sherman's column was always strong enough to outflank the Confederate troopers and drive them off with but little loss, and the laying of pontoons and corduroy went forward, and Sherman's 2,500 wagons rolled on toward the goal.

Beauregard left General Smith with his militia to guard Augusta and personally led the sad remnant of the once proud Confederate Army of the Tennessee by a long detour over country roads through South Carolina without getting a glimpse of Sherman nor Sherman of him, much to his delight, bringing up finally at Charlotte, N. C. General Hardee clung to Charleston, knowing that the day was near when he must abandon old Fort Sumter and the cradle of the southern uprising. His route to the point for concentration would be through Florence to Cheraw by rail and thence to the rendezvous in North Carolina.

A Confederate leader who was not at the Augusta conference, but who came to play an important part in the effort to head off Sherman, General Wade Hampton, reached Columbia, his native place, about the time that Sherman's plans became surmised by the southerners. Hampton was a distinguished cavalry leader with Lee in Virginia. He was a man of personal force and, it was believed, could rally the South Carolinians to the defense of their state. Halting at Columbia, he was soon in communication with Beauregard and other authorities, and his word was to fight and fight at once.

Hampton urged that Hardee abandon Charleston and bring every available man into the swamps in front of Sherman. A small division of the western Army of the Tennessee (Confederate), led by General C. L. Stevenson, and numbering 2,000 men, reached Columbia in advance of either Sherman or Howard. Butler's and Wheeler's cavalry were also on the outside of Sherman's cordon, and a few state troops had been gathered together by Hampton's vigorous appeals. By concentrating these troops Hampton believed that a vigorous blow upon either Slocum or Howard while the Federal wings were separated and entangled in the swamps would force Sherman to retreat to the seacoast.

In Hampton's opinion the key to the military situation in South Carolina was at Branchville, near the Edisto and the junction of railways connecting Charleston, Columbia and Augusta. With Branchville as a starting point the Confederates could fight Slocum on the west or Howard on the south and concentrate after the battle to fight the other wing. Beauregard concurred in Hampton's view, but the movement was not made, and when Sherman reached the vicinity of Columbia the total force of Confederates available at that point was about 5,000 men of all arms.

Columbia itself was bare of troops, for the force at hand was scattered to do picket duty in front of the advancing Federals. Wheeler's troopers fell back slowly before Howard's vanguard, and at the last crossing of the Congaree set fire to the bridge, first sprinkling it with tar and resin to make the flames spread quickly. So rapidly did the fire take hold some of the men at the work were cut off on the Federal side of the river and compelled to make a long circuit upstream to avoid capture.

In Columbia the cavalry fired the railway stations and buildings and also put the torch to a row of cotton bales in the streets. Stevenson's Confederate infantry took the road to Winnsboro, N. C., and Hampton called in the cavalry from the front and backed away in the same direction. Columbia offered no defense, and the mayor surrendered the city to Sherman. Before allowing the troops to enter Columbia Sherman issued the usual orders to the men to respect private dwellings, college libraries, charitable institutions and the like, but that arsenals, foundries and public workshops of value to the enemy should be destroyed. General C. R. Wood's division of Logan's corps entered the city as guards.

GENERAL JOE WHEELER'S CAVALRY BURNING BRIDGES BEFORE COLUMBIA.

A strong wind was blowing, and Wood's men were directed to quench the burning cotton. It is said that the citizens furnished the troops with liquor, but that the intoxicated men were put in arrest. The wind grew stronger during the night, and the smoldering cotton soon burst into flames, which were carried to the wooden houses, and in spite of the heroic work of the troops the city was nearly wiped out by the night of Feb. 17, and the same night the Confederate garrison evacuated Charleston.

Herbert Spencer in "An Autobiography" tells of a gentleman who, having adopted a boy with a view of educating him after a system of his own, found that he had underestimated the magnitude of the undertaking. COMMON SENSE

By James T. Fields

OF "A Few Verses For a Few Friends," by James T. Fields (born 1820, died 1881), the North American Review said, "The poems it contains are gems well worthy the setting—pure thought, gentle feeling, tender remembrance and lambent fancy in natural measures and easy rhythm—such poems as always win a higher fame than they seek and are best appreciated by those whose verdict is of the most significant import."

She came among the gathering crowd,
A maiden fair, without pretence,
And when they asked her humble name,
She whispered mildly, "Common Sense."

Her modest garb drew every eye,
Her ample cloak, her shoes of leather;
And, when they sneered, she simply said,
"I dress according to the weather."

They argued long and reasoned loud,
In dubious Hindoo phrase mysterious,
While she, poor child, could not divine
Why girls so young should be so serious.

They knew the length of Plato's beard,
And how the scholars wrote in Saturn;
She studied authors not so deep,
And took the Bible for her pattern.

And so she said, "Excuse me, friends,
I find all have their proper places,
And Common Sense should stay at home
With cheerful hearts and smiling faces."

Christianity and Patriotism

By Justice D. J. BREWER of the United States Supreme Court.

THERE is no incompatibility between Christianity and patriotism. In time of trouble the faith of the Christian HAS STOOD AS THE ROCK upon which the nation has rested. All NOMINAL Christians do not deserve trust and respect, for some of them hold their religion, like their property, in their wife's name, but I insist that Christianity has been so wrought into the history of this republic, SO IDENTIFIED WITH ITS GROWTH AND PROSPERITY, that it ought not to be spoken of contemptuously or treated with ridicule.

Wherever man has dared to go our flag has gone, AND CHRISTIANITY HAS BEEN ITS GUIDING LIGHT. It stands for purity in our homes, while Mormonism, Mohammedanism and heathenism have been the cloak of polygamy and immorality.

CHRISTIANITY STANDS FOR LIBERTY, EQUALITY, EDUCATION AND PEACE.

A Poem for Today

THE ROPEWALK

By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow

In that building, long and low,
With its windows all a-row,
Like the portholes of a hulk,
Human spiders spin and spin,
Backward down their threads so thin
Dropping, each a hempen bulk.

At the end, an open door;
Squares of sunshine on the floor
Light the long and dusky lane;
And the whirring of a wheel,
Dull and frowsy, makes me feel
All its spokes are in my brain.

As the spinners to the end
Downward go and reascend,
Gleam the long threads in the sun;
While within this brain of mine
Cobwebs brighter and more fine
By the busy wheel are spun.

Two fair maidens in a swing,
Like white doves upon the wing,
First before my vision pass;
Laughing, as their gentle hands
Closely clasp the twisted strands,
At their shadow on the grass.

Then a booth of mountebanks,
With its smell of tan and planks,
And a girl poised high in air
On a cord, in spangled dress,
With a faded loveliness,
And a weary look of care.

Then a homestead among farms,
And a woman with bare arms,
Drawing water from a well;
As the bucket mounts apace,
With it mounts her own fair face,
As at some magician's spell.

Then an old man in a tower,
Ringing loud the noontide hour,
While the rope coils round and round,
Like a serpent at his feet,
And again, in swift retreat,
Nearly lifts him from the ground.

Then within a prison-yard,
Faces fixed, and stern, and hard,
Laughter and indecent mirth;
Ah! it is the gallows-tree!
Breath of Christian charity,
Blow, and sweep it from the earth!

Then a schoolboy, with his kite,
Gleaming in a sky of light,
And an eager, upward look;
Steeds pursued through lane and field;
Fowlers with their snares concealed;
And an angler by a brook.

Ships rejoicing in the breeze,
Wrecks that float o'er unknown seas,
Anchors dragged through faithless sand;
Sea-fog drifting overhead,
And, with lessening line and lead,
Sailors feeling for the land.

All these scenes do I behold,
These, and many left untold,
In that building long and low;
While the wheel goes round and round,
With a drowsy, dreamy sound,
And the spinners backward go.

A Poem for Today

OUR PATTERN

By Phoebe Cary

A WEAVER sat one day at his loom
Among the colors bright,
With the pattern for his copying
Hung fair and plain in sight.

But the weaver's thoughts were wandering
Away on a distant track,
As he threw the shuttle in his hand
Wearily forward and back.

And he turned his dim eyes to the ground,
And his tears fell on the woof,
For his thoughts, alas! were not with his home,
Nor the wife beneath his roof.

When her voice recalled him suddenly
To himself, as she sadly said:
"Ah! woe is me! for your work is spoiled,
And what will we do for bread?"

And then the weaver looked, and saw
His work must be undone;
For the threads were wrong, and the colors dimmed
Where the bitter tears had run.

"Alack! alack!" said the weaver,
"And this had all been right
If I had not looked at my work, but kept
The pattern in my sight!"

Ah! sad it was for the weaver,
And sad for his luckless wife;
And sad it will be for us, if we say,
At the end of our task of life:

"The colors that we had to weave
Were bright in our earlier years;
But we wove the tissue wrong, and stained
The woof with bitter tears.

"We wove a web of doubt and fear—
Not faith, and hope, and love—
Because we looked at our work, and not
At our Pattern up above!"

MR. LAKIN AND CONGRESS.

The political situation throughout the Second Congressional district of West Virginia appears to be very favorably shaping up for our young former fellow-townsman, Mr. Jas. S. Lakin, of Preston county, in his candidacy for Congress. Mr. Lakin is very busily pursuing the old fashioned method of campaigning by shaking hands with the voters throughout his district, having up to this time covered nearly every county of the district and having personally met and grasped by the hand some ten or twelve thousand voters. He has now visited all the eastern counties of the district—Berkeley, Grant, Hardy, Jefferson, Pendleton and has spent a couple of days in Randolph, Barbour and Tucker, devoting the present week to Monongalia, Taylor and Mineral. By the sixth of June—the day of the special election—He will have visited every one of the fourteen counties composing the district and will have personally met some twenty thousand voters.

Judging by the tone of our exchanges from many sections of the Second West Virginia district, the campaign for Congress appears to be very much one-sided affair. At least, so far as outside appearances go this is the case, as one seldom sees the name of the Democratic candidate even in his party papers, while close account is being kept of Mr. Lakin's every action by the progressive Republican papers of each county. The hand-shaking campaign inaugurated some three weeks ago by Mr. Lakin has made him a host of friends, and he is being very kindly greeted wherever he goes. We noticed in last Sunday's Parkersburg News a splendid write-up of his career from the time his father located in Oakland until the present time, and throughout the sketch appeared references to those manly, commendable traits of character so well known and so familiar to the residents of our city. The estimate placed upon the majority Mr Lakin will receive, by the Parkersburg News, is three thousand, but this is considered a low estimate when it is taken into consideration that Preston, his home county, is almost sure to give him a majority of not less than three thousand.

A new registration law went into effect in West Virginia the eighteenth of the present month, giving but nineteen days (including three Sundays) in which to complete the registration of voters before the sixth of June, and every voter participating in the election must be officially registered. Republicans are earnestly urged to see the registration officer without the loss of a single day, and to come out to the polls on the sixth of June and elect to Congress a fitting and brilliant successor to Hon. A. G. Dayton.

A PRESSING QUESTION.

It may be that the first session of the 56th Congress will not reach consideration of the question of National aid to good roads, but it is about as certain as any unconsummated thing can be, that it will be recognized during the life of that body. There is prevalent in the minds of thoughtful men such unanimity of sentiment and conclusion as to the necessity for good roads, and the fact is so well settled that there can be no systematic construction of roads without government co-operation, that it is hard to see how it can be much longer delayed. While agitation for good wagon ways is as old as the first settlement in our system of civilization, it has been until within the past few years subordinate to the wonderful extension of railroad lines. In the earlier days of the republic the duty and obligation of the government to aid in the construction of wagon roads in the States was not seriously denied. The necessity for government aid is admitted almost everywhere, only four or five of the wealthier States pointing to the exception, and these without exception advocate government co-operation. President Roosevelt not long ago, speaking on the subject, declared good roads the main hope of retaining the energies of our young people in the country, and thus stop the flow from country to city; where every avenue of business is already overcrowded. Other eminent men contend for good roads on the ground that the farmer, the first and most important producer of wealth, ought to be placed in position to hold his crop and market it at the most favorable opportunity, whereas under bad roads he is virtually under compulsion to sell it as soon as it is matured, because the roads may become impassible at any time during the fall, winter or spring. The intelligent people of town and city plead for good roads because food they consume must come from the farm and be paid for according as it is able to reach the market. The farmer, the mainstay and dependence of the government in every emergency, feels that his substance is annually swallowed up in the unhappy conditions that deny him reasonable market communication at his best time to sell. He is discontented at his lot when remembering that he pays 60 per cent. of all the taxes, and yet receives no direct consideration at the hands of the government, while unnumbered millions have been given from the National treasury to better conditions everywhere except upon the farm. The man who digs out of the soil that which sustains all progress and prosperity knows that while government aid has been lavished upon railroads and ocean going commerce, not one dollar, since the construction of the old Cumberland road, has been expended by the United States to facilitate commerce between the farm and the market. It is no wonder, in view of all this, that the agricultural classes look upon the National Aid to Good Roads movement as promising their long-deferred material salvation. It is no wonder that the farmer has gotten up from the bedrock of his free-thought and reason fully aroused to the fact that unless he can have better roads his business is a failure, and must therefore be abandoned; and it is this that gives strength to the cause of better roads, because we are all dependent on the farm. The question of National aid to good roads is absolutely above and beyond the realm of party politics. It is advocated by strong men of every political faith, and no man desiring the best in the material develoment and continuing greatness of the country will seek to inject into it any element of party prejudice. To do so would be to detract from a proposition at once seriously important to the commercial, industrial and social advancement of all the people in every part of the land, and would be a sacrilege to be despised. The Good Road question is a pressing question which, soon or late, will have to be recognized by National aid in co-operation with the States. We hope the 59th Congress will enact into law the Brownlow-Latimer bills, with the provisions of which the country is already more or less familiar.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

The demonstration of love, respect, admiration, and trust given to Theodore Roosevelt, Man and President in Chicago was no less wonderful than deserved; it reflects honor and glory upon the people at large, for it shows that republics are not unappreciative and democracies are not ungrateful. The manner in which the demonstration was received adds new luster to the name of Theodore Roosevelt.

He was received with courtesy and consideration, and to all who came he returned courtesy and consideration. He could not be bought with a dinner nor could he be appalled by popular clamor. To the committee of labor men who presented a protest against the employment of Federal troops during the present strike in Chicago he said:

"No request has been made to me for action by the Federal Government. * * * In upholding law and order, in doing what he is able to do to suppress mob violence in any shape or way, the mayor of Chicago, Mayor Dunne, has my hearty support. I am glad to be able to say this to you gentlemen before I say it to any other body. * * * I am an honorary member of one union. But the union must obey the law, just as the corporation must obey the law, just as every man, rich or poor, must obey the law * * * If action is called for by me I shall try to do exact justice under the law to every man so far as I have power. But the first essential is the preservation of law and order, the suppression of violence by mobs and individuals."

The same thing was said later by the President at the banquet given in his honor by the Iroquois Club, an organization of Democrats. He went further, however, and showed the dangers to the Republic of capitalism as well as of unionism. He said:

"No true patriot will fail to do everything in his power to prevent the growth of class spirit in this country. This Government is not, and never shall be, the government of a plutocracy. This government is not, and never shall be, the government of a mob. I believe in corporations. They are indispensable instruments in our modern industrialism, but I believe that they should be so supervised and regulated that they should act for the interest of the community as a whole.

"So I believe in unions. I am proud of the fact that I am an honorary member of one union, but I believe that the union like the individual, must be kept to a strict accountability to the power of the law.

"And there, gentlemen, is a point upon which all good Americans are one. They are all one in the conviction, in the firm determination, that this country shall remain in the future, as it has been in the past, a country of liberty and justice under the form of law. A country in which the rule of the people is supreme, but in which that will finds its expression through the forms of law expressed as provided for in the Constitution of the United States and of the several States that go to make up our nation."

Truly, as Americans, we are proud of Theodore Roosevelt; as men we must honor him for his courage, his wisdom, and his justice.

Deacon Brown Breaks Loose Again.

Deacon Brown, of the Argus, has been keeping tab on Si and his mule Maud. Right after the Democratic convention at Keyser he is reported to have written the following letter to the nominee of the unterrified.

Honorable Town
of Kingwood, W. Va., May, 1905

Honorable Sir:—I see by the honorable papers that you have received the honorable nomination for the honorable Congress of the United States. I have been informed that you was going to put out in this honorable campaign the honorabl sum of $50,000. I am in need of a little more of the honorable coin of the realm and I would like to receive your honorable check with not less than four honorable figures attached to it.

The honorable Jim Lakin has been scouring the honorable huckelberry knobs and it looks as though he would get our honorable county.

I don't care whether you vote to take the honorable tax off the honorable coal or not. But being as you are a coal man I don't hardly think you will. It has been a honorable good thing for the country but we must not own up to it. If some of the honorable Democrats should accuse you of being with the honorable Republicans on the coal deal, just lay low and saw your honorable wood. Hoping to hear from you soon I remain,

Your honorable,
DEACON BROWN.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

Sessions Will Be Held at Deer Park June 16 to 18.

Interest is apparently centering about the proposed Maryland Sunday School Union announced for Deer Park June 16th, 17th and 18th, and the scope of interest has been broadened and strengthened by a favorable publicity in the columns of the county papers. This deeply rooted body in the field of religious advancement in Maryland needs no introduction here. Garrett had just taken her place in the sisterhood of counties when this organization in behalf of youthful training opened the treasure of its teachings to our people. THE REPUBLICAN, of course, cannot conjure up an occurrence so distantly antique because at that early day THE REPUBLICAN had not opened its eyes in the light of experience nor shaken gory locks at a frowning Democracy. If memory correctly serves us that first appearance was in the Presbyterian (Garrett Memorial) church of Oakland.

Looking back over the meanderings of the time-scarred path through the changes and chances of mortal happenings to this date many shadows flitter through the sunshine over the way. Vivid is our recollections of the address of welcome eloquently delivered by Mr. John W. Veitch. Almost annually for more than a decade perhaps two decades, we have heard other speakers acting a similar role at the incipiency of these, on convention proceedings, but none have produced such food for thought and in form so symmetrically rounded and shining as did Mr. Veitch at the threshold of this State institution in our county. Rev. Dr. Scott, Mr. W. A. Baker, Judge Patrick Hamill, with many others who then "were" but now "are not" lent the dignity of their characters and the force of their espousal to keep that series of meetings imbued with the high aims and many discusssons reasoned with the pungent flavor given by Mr. Veitch at their beginning. Shifting in the individuality of the moving column of time are ever visible, but the column is today as yesterday and will continue to the end. Man's mission should be to make better that column always under cleaner, loftier banners. As rivers and streams bear to the most distant lands through which they flow tinge of the soil about their headwaters, human streams display the color of their beginning. Children of today must constitute the church of tomorrow. It must cast a wholesome salutary influence over the probabilities of a community when thoughtful men assemble to discuss and devise the safest method for the religious and moral training of the youth of this community protecting in time the stream from impurities infesting the fountain head.

Such is the object of this organization advocating its policies here more than a generation ago and that will be in Deer Park June 16th, 17th and 18th, pointing to the Sunday School as the prime start for the youth of the land to great citizenship and religious habits.

RELLIM.

FINZELL.

Jack Frost visited us Sunday night and inflicted great damage to growing crops.

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Baer, of Meyersdale, Pa., are visiting their father, Mr. Jacob Steinlas.

Newman & Deeter Lumber Company are cutting their fine tract of timber and expect to finish within the next year.

The Greater Savage Firebrick Company has not resumed operations but expect to do so in a few weeks.

Messrs. Alexander Burdock and Wesley Blocher had a narrow escape from death, being thrown over an enbankment by a runaway horse. The buggy was demolished and the horse badly crippled but the young men escaped without a bruise.

Burglars attempted to rob Layman's saloon between the Savages, but were frightened away after prying open the shutters.

Ira Finzell has purchased a lot in Finzell and will erect a cottage, the Mankymier Bros. being the carpenters.

Mr. and Mrs. Adam Roseberger, Miss Annie Rosenberger and P. E. Finzell and Mrs. Finzell, while out driving on Sunday met with a very close call for death. While descending Little Savage mountain the neck yoke became detached from the carriage and the horses became frightened and ran away, throwing Mr. and Mrs. Rosenberger and Mrs. Finzell out of the carriage. P. E. Finzell hung on to the lines and after the horses ran about a half mile succeeded in getting than under control. The carraige passed over Mr. and Mrs. Rosenberger injuring them severely, Mrs. Finzell escaped with a few bruise Miss Rosenberger remained in the carriage and escaped injury. P. E. Finzell had his scalp slightly lacerated by being thrown against an iron rod. It was only by the hardest work that the team was prevented from dashing into Savage river.

The Piney Run Oil & Gas Company are making preparation to drill their fourth well in the Great Piney Run Valley on a tract of land selected by competent oil men as being an ideal place to drill. They expect to drill the well to a depth of 5000 feet if no oil or gas is struck before reaching that depth.

Diphtheria is raging just north of us in Pennsylvania. A nephew of Hon. S. J. Kendall, of Kendall, Md., is dead of the disease and a niece of Mr. Kendall is very ill at this writing. Four other families are suffering with same disease.

Thomas Creey is moving his mill to cut the McCulloh tract of timber.

Our citizens are up in arms over the removal of the telephone switch from Mr. Moore's, claiming that they will get poor service for their money.

ERIN.

BITTINGER.

A distressing fire occured at Jennings on Monday morning, May 22nd, in which the dwelling occupied by Clarence Broadwater and family was consumed with all its contents. The flame was started from the kitchen stove between five and six o'clock in the morning, while Mr. Broadwater and two small children were yet sleeping, and so rapid was the progress of the flames that the inmates were forced to jump from the windows, all of the family escaping but the youngest, a child three weeks old, the little body being entirely consumed. All the others escaped without injury except Mrs. Broadwater who was slightly burned about the head and arms. This sad accident calls forth many expressions of sympathy for the afflicted family.

The members of the Board of Education passed through and spent one night in our town last week. These honorable gentlemen were in the northern section of the county viewing a site for proposed new school house.

Rev. Gideon Miller passed through here last Sunday afternoon.

Rev. Shoup returned last Thursday evening from a few days' visit to Manchester, Md.

Mr. Gilead Broadwater of Grantsville, was in this section last Monday offering 32 cents per pound for wool.

The lawn fete given by Mrs. Bittinger and daughters on last Saturday evening was largely patronized and successfully conducted.

An unusually hard frost visited this section last Saturday night, Ice was formed in places, but little damage has been reported.

Don't forget that Bittinger will have an appropriate celebration on Tuesday, May 30th, to which all are invited.

Obituary.

William Harvey Savedge, son of William R. and Ella K. Savedge, quietly breathed his last at the home of his parents in Monessen, Penn., May 14th, 1905, aged eleven months and two days. Our deepest sympathy goes out to the bereaved mother and father. The bright little one was given to them for only a short while but the fragrance and sweetness was of the purest. God indeed moves in mysterious ways and with our feeble eye sight dimmed by the veil of mortality we can but see in the death of this innocent one sorrow. Some day when the veil has been superceded by eternity and we cease to look through a glass darkly, then we will realize that it is his principle to pluck the bearded grain and also the flowers that grew between, and behind the mysterious and unfathonable dispensation of God's providence we will see a precious silver lining. He wanted a bright, untarnished jewel to shine in his crown so he called little William home to be among his angels forever. His short life was a benediction to his parents, and his death ha forged another golden link in the chain that binds then to the eternal city.

To the sorrowing ones we would say—

"Grieve not with hopeless sorrow,
Jesus has felt your pain;
He did thy lamb but borrow,
He'll give him back again."

Mr. M. N. Wilson, of Elkins, W. Va., was in Oakland Tuesday on business.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Anderson and their son Calvin, all of near Wilson, were visitors to Oakland yesterday.

Mr. William J. Nair is erecting a new dwelling on his lot in the west end of town, and will complete it yet this week when he will move to town and occupy it with his family.

P. M. Stemple, formerly of Floyd, this county but now a resident of Morgantown, West Va., spent yesterday evening in Oakland. He will return to his home at Morgantown today.

Messrs. James Chisholm, Charles E. Hilleary and E. M. Mickey, of District No. 8, were in Oakland Tuesday eight where they attended the regular communication of Oakland Lodge of Masons.

By advertisement printed in these columns today the Mayor and Town Council invite bids for the curbing and setting of same along Liberty street. See advertisement for particulars.

Mr. Joseph E. Harned is making some very handsome as well as substantial improvements to his residence on Second street by the addition of a bay window and brick foundations to the dwelling.

Mr. J. M. Savage, formerly of Deer Park, but now located at Pinehurst, N. C., is at his home on a visit of ten days. During the summer Mr. Savage will be located at White Sulphur Springs, Va.

Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Vaughn and two children, who were at Wyalusing, Pa., several days recently at which point Mr. Vaughn's mother died and was buried last week, returned to Oakland Sunday last.

Mr. Thomas R. White, who recently closed out his saloon business, has purchased the Kochke meat and grocery store and is in charge. Mr. White invites the patronage of the public and all will be accorded a square deal.

Mr. Stuart F. Hamill, who went to Baltimore last week to take the State examination for admission to the bar as a practicing attorney, returned to Oakland Tuesday morning. The result of the examination has not yet been announced.

Attention is directed to the advertisement of the Friendsville Bank which will be found elsewhere in this paper to-day. Cashier McCandlish of the bank has something to say of interest to people who have money lying idle.

Messrs. M. R. Hamill and E. A. Browning, member and secretary respectively of the Board of School Commissioners, returned to Oakland Saturday noon from New Germany where they had been with Commissioners Bishoff and Ellithorpe selecting a site for the erection of the proposed new school house at that point.

Messrs. Samuel Lawton, Mayor McComas, Henry Lauer and Semmes Hamill went to Frederick City Tuesday night where they will represent Garrett Lodge Knights of Pythias in a District meeting of the lodge now in session in that city. Many members of the subordinate lodges of Western Maryland are in attendance at the meeting, the object being to create new interest in organization throughout this section of the state.

Miss Annie Manges, of York, Pa., arrived here yesterday and will remain during the summer as the guest of her parents, Rev. and Mrs. E. Manges.

Rev. J. B. Workman, who is visiting his old home in Wayne county, W. Va., in a note to the editor states that he is having a pleasant time and will arrive home Friday night of this week.

At Deer Park an asphalt pavement 2700 feet long and 37 feet wide is being constructed at the depot by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to take the place of the wooden structure which has been in service a number years.

Mr. N. G. Steitz, representing the Pittsburg branch of the American Type Founders Company, was a business caller at this office Monday. Mr. Steltz, a practical printer himself of no mean ability, always has some good words for those engaged in the same vocation and takes pleasure in advancing new ideas to the craft.

Mrs. Dr. R. B. Ward returned to Oakland from Fairmont Monday evening bringing with her Mr. G. W. Ward, of West Milford, W. Va., who had been receiving treatment at a hospital in Fairmont for several weeks and who will remain here until his health is restored. He is the father of Dr. Ward and is quite aged.

Mr. J. Arthur Fricker, of San Juan, Porto Rico, is here as the guest of his father-in-law, Prof. J. Frank McBee at his home on Third street. Mr. Fricker is is the resident manager of the Standard Oil Company for Porto Rico and will return to his duties about June 1st. Mrs. Fricker and children, who have been guests of Prof. McBee and family several weeks, will not return to their home until late in the fall.

We have received from Mr. George E. Bishoff, of Hoyes, a well written article describing his personal experience in feeding silage to stock and the manner of preparing and storing the same in the silo. Mr. Bishoff is the pioneer silo farmer of Garrett county and his success in its use should be followed by many of our other farmers and stock raisers.

Rev. H. C. Salem, pastor of the Accident charge Ev. Lutheran church, contributes the following news notes: Rev. M. Grossman and family, of Addison, Pa., were visiting at the Lutheran parsonage last week. Their daughter, Miss Miriam, who had been visiting her cousins Olive and Helen Salem, returned home Friday. Preliminary steps have been taken at Friendsville to organize a Luther League. Up to this date twenty-one have given their names as charter members.

Maxwell Talks of West Virginia Trails

Editor Maxwell of the Morgantown Chronicle delivered a lecture before the Historical and Political Science Association at the University a few days ago. "The Influence of Mountain Trails on Early West Virginia History" was the subject which he discussed most interestingly. Mr. Maxwell has been over the five trails of which he spoke.

First he mentioned the Nemacolin trail from Cumberland to Pittsburg over which Braddock took 100 wagons but over which no merchandise was carried in wagons until 1825. Second he spoke of the Forbes road; third of the McCullough trail from Morefield, Hardy county, to the Upper Potomac in Maryland, passing near Oakland and Kingwood to the Cheat. It was used by Washington in 1784, and by those who settled this county. Fourth was the Seneca trail through Pendleton county, across the Allegheny mountains and via Job and the Cheat forks to Elkins, and then down the Little Kanawha to the Ohio. Fifth, another trail from Pendleton county to Greenbrier county, near Durbin, and then to Lewisburg. This was largely used by traders to the Kanawha valley and Ohio.—Mannington Advocate.

The Crucifixion

The quadruple destruction of the crucifixion is a literary marvel. Though a circumstance of transcendent importance, the narrative of it is surprisingly condensed. There is no spinning out of details, no obtrusion of the personal opinions and sentiments of the narrators. Here is a suggestion of how we ourselves should approach Calvary. It is not a theme for volubility. There should be no striving to magnify its painful horrors, or to compare the physical suffering of its victim with those of others A spiritual interpretation is the thing desirable. A personal appropriation by faith is great riches.

We first have the numbering of Jesus with transgressors. He was crucified between the malefactors, the insurgent robbers and murderers. He who could challenge the world to impeach his sinlessness, was "made sin." He was put to the extremity of a convicted felon. With the shedding of His blood begins His mediatorial prayer, "Father, forgive them." The "inventiveness of love" finds a palliating circumstance in their ignorance "They know not what they do." The prayer sweeps out to include, not the coarse executioners alone, but the cunning conspirators who use them as their tools. It is enough to brand it with infamy that destroying vice of gambling, that it obtruded itself at the crucifixion. The soldiers threw dice to determine which should have the most valuable garment of the sufferer. They "chanced off" the seamless robe.

"He saved others." Unconscious, undesigned encomium! "Let Him save Himself!" Last recurrence of the wilderness temptation? That which is a literal possibility is a moral impossibility. Except He stay upon the cross He can not be a Savior. If He remains not, he can not utter that ineffable cry, "It is finished!" —the work the Father gave Me to do." Keener than mortal pangs are the brutal gibes of rulers, populace, and soldiery. That triple inscription may signify that the story of the cross is destined to go into all languages, as it there appeared in the tongues of conquest, culture, and colloquy.

The "third word" of Jesus from His cross is a lustrous example of filial affection. Even shame and agony of His crucifixion was not sufficient to divert His thought from His mother or to confuse His judgment as to what would be the best provision for her. In touching and significant terms He commended her to the care of His dearest friend.

The sovereign power of redeeming love has a splendid exemplification even in the deepening gloom of Calvary. As the hours wear away, the innocence, the Divinity of his fellow-sufferer dawns upon the mind of the malefactor. It pains him to hear the continued railing of his comrade in crime. He chides him, reminding him of the justness of their condemnation, and affirming the guiltlessness of Jesus. To eye of faith there opens to him a blissful vista beyond the chasm of death. He recognizes the sufferer, spite of His marred visage as monarch of that realm. In the strength of a belief that prompts to action, he joins his fortunes irrevocably with those of the crucified Nazarene, and entreats recognition when He comes to the regal splendors of His coronation. What Jesus did then, He has been doing ever since He opened paradise to a penitent. But His obedience unto death, even the death of the cross, was the key, and the only one, to unlock that paradise.

Nature, as if become sentient on account of the incomparable tragedy now enacting, drapes herself in a veil of impenetrable blackness. In that darkness, the seventh word from the cross is heard. The Son, having drunk to its dregs the cup the Father had given Him, now, in the very hour and article of death, confidently commeds His soul to that Father.

The Teacher's Lantern.

Pilate's ironical inscription had a germ of truth in it. Jesus is King. His dominion is wider than the most ambitious Cæsar ever dreamed of.

* * * * *

What was a taunt to the Jews was a tribute to Jesus. Pilate would fain acknowledge Him a kingly spirit, of whom the Jews were not worthy. To this covered eulogy of the procurator the dying thief added his "Thy kingdom."

* * * * *

The Cross is ever divisive—once seperated a believer from an unbeliever. It does so yet wherever it is preached. People range themselves in two classes. The cross is the divisor.

* * * * *

A study of Calvary reveals the intensive forcefulness of the expression. "Crucify the Son of God afresh." Indifference, unbelief, and apostasy are doing this daily.

* * * * *

It is inconceivable that the spirit of Jesus, just mingled with common air, was dissipated and lost, as to its identity, when He breathed it for, He commended it as an inconceivably precious thing to the care of a personal God, the Father of Spirits.

* * * * *

The Lord of Life helped the dying penitent at his side to stand the shock of dissolution by the assurance of a perpetuation of conscious life beyond and an immediate entrance to Paradise.

* * * * *

When Jesus entered Paradise it was in company with an executed criminal. This trophy of His redeeming love, this evidence of the power of His cross, He presented to all the intelligences of the sky.

* * * * *

The procession to the cross was the most pitiful earth has ever seen. The centurion rode in advance. The guard was numerous enough to make rescue of the prisoners impossible. The condemned had boards daubed with gypsum hung about their necks, on which was record of their crimes in black letters. In the rear came the slaves carrying refreshments for the soldiers, besides the nails, hammers and ropes necessary for the execution. Following all was such an unsavory crowd as a public execution would draw in our own day.

* * * * *

Golgotha is supposed to have its name from the fact that it was a rounded hilltop—bare, rocky, with a shining surface, suggesting a human skull.

* * * * *

There was probably in Jerusalem as in many cities of that day a benevolent guild of women who sought to mitigate the sufferings of the condemned by administering anæsthetics to them. As Jesus desired to preserve His senses during the ordeal, He declined the offices of the agent of such a society.

* * * * *

Two circumstances happening on the way to the cross are mentioned: At sight of an innocent One led to a shocking death, women wept. Jesus turned, and as if with the siege of Jerusalem in view, bade them rather weep for themselves and their children.

* * * * *

The fainting strength of Jesus makes the impressing of some one to bear His cross necessary. Simon was was probably not an African, as is often supposed. For, in Cyrene, Northern Africa, there was a colony of Jews.

Mosaic from Commentaries.

Jesus in the midst: To hold Him up as the worst of the three. Pilate wrote a title: Drew out the inscription in such terms as to inflict another wound on Jewish pride. Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, the language of the country, the current language, the official language. His coat without seam—tunic—woven from top to bottom: Denoting skill and labor necessary to produce such a garment. Work of one or more of the women who ministered to Him. Woman, behold thy Son: What forgetfulness of self! What filial love! From that hour: Either from that moment (in which case Mary was spared the further laceration of her feelings by the sight of her Son's sufferings) or after all was over. That the Scripture might be accomplished: Probably the meaning is that Jesus now permitted Himself to express His sense of bodily suffering ("I thirst") because He knew that His duty was was completely discharged and prophecy fulfilled. Put it upon a hyssop: Though the stock of this plant does not exceed eighteen inches, it would suffice, as the feet of the crucified persons were not raised higher. Had received: Contrast His refusal of the stupefying mixture formerly offered to Him. It is finished: A cry of triumph. "I have overcome the world." Bowed His head: A fact recorded only by John. The visible counterpart of the words recorded by Luke, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My Spirst." Gave up: A voluntary surrender of life.

GARRETT COUNTY AND ITS PRODUCTIVENESS.

Paper Read Before the Recent Meeting of the Maryland State Horticultural Society By VICE PRES. W. M'CULLOH BROWN.

The Paper a Most Excellent One and Could Be Used to Advertised the Great Advantages of Garrett County As a Farming and Fruit Growing Section.

At the meeting of the State Horticultural Society held at the Maryland Agricultural College on December 27-28, 1904, the printed report of which has just been received at this office, Mr. W. McCulloh Brown, vice president of the Society for Garrett county, read a paper setting forth the great advantages of this county as a farming and fruit raising community, which paper we republished below:

The season of 1904 has been a most profitable one for the horticulturist and farmer of Garrett county. The spring was a late one with snow and ice on May 15th, but after that the month turned warm, and constant showers until the middle of August pushed vegetation along rapidly and kept everything growing. A remarkable fact is that throughout the summer there was no continuously rainy day. The crops of fruit, vegetables, hay and grain have been unusually large and generally of good quality.

Systematic and scientific horticulture are in their infancy in Garrett county. The great majority of farmers are still working in "clearings," reducing the forest lands to subjection, the process necessarily being one of destruction and subjugation with hard and laborious work. There are signs of an awakening, however, from which good results will surely follow.

Deer Park, Oakland and Mt. Lake, with their thousands of summer visitors, furnish good local markets for vegetable growers who are now systematically working to provide for this demand, and thus far the market in a head of the supply.

In the line of apple culture I hear, for the first time, of one man who is aiming to, and will shortly be able to ship a car load of one variety of apple to market. The apple tree is as old as the earliest farm, but formerly the orchard seldom contained more than two of one kind, and three-fourths of the whole were summer and fall apples, but now the winter and late keeping varieties are selected, and much larger lots of one particular kind planted.

Taking now the results of the season more in detail, the potato crop has been unusually large, and the potatoes of good size throughout the county. Upon my own place, without any particular care, one hundred and two bushels were the yield from a trifle over a quarter of an acre.

Vegetables generally have done well. Asparagus was good and free from disease, so also was celery. Early celery is profitable, the later varieties, however, come in competition with the Michigan crop, which is sold at a low figure. Tomatoes did well, but a portion of these ripening late caught upon the vines by early frosts. Our soil and climate seem well adapted to cauliflower, and Messrs. Weber & Sons, of Oakland, exhibited some fine specimens at St. Louis, obtaining a silver medal. This firm has sold over $1,000 worth in Philadelphia, and will increase their planting for another season. Raspberries, blackberries and strawberries are native and grow wild in great abundance, the latter often two inches in circumference; consequently, as might be expected, the cultivated varieties are a success. Four men in particular are giving attention to berries with considerable profit, raising fifty to one hundred crates of strawberries each, which sell at $3.20 per crate; from twenty-five to one hundred crates of raspberries, as perfect and fine fruit as can be seen anywhere, at $4.00 per crate, and from twenty-five to seventy-five crates of blackberries selling at $3.20 per crate.

These men supply the summer hotels and cottages, and have not as yet brought the supply up to the demand. All the above fruits do well and are free from parasites and diseases.

Plums have yielded abundantly and could be cultivated with profit. Cherries, peaches and pears have not been raised to any extent.

Apples are the staple fruit and much more attention has been given to old orchards and to the setting out of young trees of approved and late keeping varieties. The Spy, York Imperial, Ben Davis, Grimes Golden, Baldwin, Smokehouse and Fallawater are common. The yield of apples for 1904 was heavy, but the trees were so loaded down with fruit that the size and quality has suffered, and many farmers were unable to properly pick and care for the crop. The local price at present is about fifty cents per bushel, but will rapidly advance to one dollar as late varieties are at a premuim, and little attention has been given to storage and preservation of fruit.

Garrett county has heretofore been fortunate in its exemption from insect pests and plant diseases, which can probably be attributed to two sources; one being the newness of the cultivated land, it as yet not having become contaminated, the other being the altitude, the cold winters and the short growing season. This year we had ice upon May 16th, and the growing season ended with ice again upon September 14th. With such a long dormant season Nature must do her best when once aroused, and the rapidity of growth tends to perfection.

I have made diligent inquiry as to scale, and have heard of no locality where it existed. Mr. G. E. Bishoff, of Hoves, reports twig blight, which they cut off and burn. The blight which Mr. Bishoff mentions is widely spread throughout the County, it is increasing and promises to cause serious damage. As the apple trees are most abundant it has been particularly noticeable upon them but pear, quince and grapes have been affected and even the foremost trees as oak and maple. Some trees in the orchard are affected, while others are entirely exempt, the affected parts seem to be scattered generally over the tree, the leaves turn brown and the branch is killed for ten or twelve inches from the end.

I have observed this trouble especially upon Alexander apple; and the fruit has shown unmistakable signs of bitter rot; I have noticed the diseased bark upon the branches and in the forks of young trees not yet in full bearing. In some instances large parts of trees have been killed. If this blight can be checked our prospects are good. The soil is a clay loam with close subsoil and retains fertilizers. Applications of lime are of great benefit and bring the plant food in the soil into use.

The climate and altitude may eventually play an important part in determining the profitable branches of horticulture. It is interesting to note that the first spraying of my apple trees was upon May 3rd when no leaf buds had opened, and the last upon June 4th when the bloom had hardly fallen from the Spy and late varieties. These facts show the diversity of climate and conditions which our State offers for horticulture, giving us in Garrett county the conditions of New England.

One of the most successful of the berry raisers that I have mentioned obtains his crop at an altitude of three thousand feet. Messrs. Weber & Sons attribute most of their success in flowers to the pure air and altitude at which they are raised, the last of their many triumphs being a first prize at Chicago in November with their new carnation, "My Maryland." Owing to climate they are enabled to market for chrysanthemums at a handsome profit in Philadelphia two weeks ahead of local florists.

What this enterprising firm has done others can do, and, studying local conditions, make an equal success in other lines.

Land is cheap, the soil responds to improvement readily, and all new comers will receive a ready welcome.

Negative Goodness .....Is Not Enough

By BOOKER T. WASHINGTON

IT occurs to me that thousands of people are just like a lamp post. They don't steal, and they don't murder, and they don't lie—and NEITHER DOES THE LAMP POST. We should not be satisfied with this negative goodness; I believe that Christ will curse those who are good only NEGATIVELY.

In connection with my race there is an opportunity for every one to do a great deal of good through a little POSITIVENESS. In this country there are some 10,000,000 negroes, and of them 8,500,000 are in the south. In New York city there are 75,000, and there is an opportunity on every street corner for every one WHO WILL to uplift some one of them.

And, speaking of positiveness, if you will notice you will see that members of my race have accomplished something. You rarely see a NEGRO beggar. The hand stretched out to you on the street is seldom a black hand. This reminds me of an old colored man down in Alabama. Some white men were having a convention near his home, a convention the object of which was to bring white immigrants into the south. The old negro asked Colonel Jones, one of the prime movers, what this convention was doing.

"Why, Jake," replied the colonel, "we are trying to bring in some more people into the country—some more white people."

"Fo' Gawd, boss," answered the negro, "we got 's many white folks down hyar now 's we c'n support!"

Why, I know a graduate of Tuskegee who is now in South Carolina. He teaches school WITHOUT SALARY. Every Saturday he goes to a farmer's and splits wood to pay his board.

HE IS NOT WORKING FOR THOSE PEOPLE ALONE. HE IS DOING A SERVICE TO THE ENTIRE COUNTRY.

We Should Get Back to the Soil

By H. RIDER HAGGARD, Famous Novelist

MUNICIPAL ownership has been tried in England with fair success. The great danger lies in the possibility of one set of men RE-ELECTING THEMSELVES to office. Municipal ownership is a good thing FOR THE PEOPLE, as it unquestionably cheapens the necessities of life for them, and if the danger of one set holding office could be eliminated it would be ideal.

I am for the workingman. Workers unquestionably have the right to organize. It is their ONLY chance of salvation against capital. But I do not think any worker or body of men should have the right to go against the law AND USE VIOLENCE.

WE HEAR MUCH OF SOCIALISM. IF WE COULD GET BACK TO THE SOIL, EACH WITH HIS LITTLE PLOT OF GROUND AND HIS HOUSE AND A CHANCE TO WORK FOR HIMSELF, ALL TALK OF SOCIALISM WOULD END. I BELIEVE WE SHOULD GET BACK TO THE SOIL.

I have been badly misquoted in an alleged interview published the other day. It quoted me as condemning the United States, and I want to deny it. It is a great country and has but one fault—THE PEOPLE ARE TOO HOSPITABLE.

Letter to Thomas White.
Oakland, Md.

Dear Sir: You sell a good many things by the gallon. Being a decent man, you give full measure.

You know what we mean: you know that short weight and short measure are common among—well, we hope there are no short measures and weights in your town.

There are though. Ribbons and laces and trimmings, sold by the "dozen," measure nine or ten yards. There is no complaint, because "they all do it." You have the same plague in your goods—nearly everything, canned or bottled cheats in the quantity. Almost nobody gives full weight, in a factory-package!

We are one of the almost nobodies. We sell paint, by the gallon, to paint your house; and your gallon is just the same size as yours that you measure vinegar with—231 cubic inches.

Good paint too—Devoe lead-and-zinc—takes fewer gallons than mixed paint and wears twice as long as lead-and-oil.

You own a house. That's why we are writing to you.

Yours truly

When the Prince Wooed Peggy

By... RICHARD B. SHELTON

Copyright, 1904, by Richard B. Shelton

Peggy met him first at one of the Wednesday night hops at the Wacomassett inn. He was somewhat more than passably good looking, fair haired, of a military build and German. His name was understood to be Munsterberg. He danced a number of times with Peggy, and finally they began to sit out dances in a quiet corner of the veranda, where, with their chairs close together, he talked to her in English with the faintest of German accents, and she replied in American made German that set them both laughing.

The advent of the German was timely for Peggy. She had just fallen out with Donald Macomber, had sent him back the ring, and, being in the aftermath of a broken engagement, she was sadly in need of diversion. The German seemed to give good promise of this. He was well bred, possessed of that urbane finish that much travel can give, and, moreover, after that first dance with Peggy it was plain to be seen he was very much in love with her.

Peggy, ostensibly to relieve the vacant feeling in her heart, began a desperate flirtation. In a week's time Munsterberg was her slave. Where Peggy went, there went he. He drove with her; he sailed with her on the lake; he climbed the mountain with her. As Peggy's satellite he seemed to have found his true vocation.

No one blamed Munsterberg for falling in love with her. Indeed, at one time or another almost every unmarried man at the lake had offered his heart and his worldly goods to Peggy. She was adorable from the toe of her trim little shoe to her quaint little turn up nose that always gave one an idea of Peggy's superiority.

It is doubtful if Peggy entertained a really serious thought of the German until the day Jack Motley discovered—by means of a crest on a silver brandy flask—that worthy's true identity. Be it said of Jack Motley that he fairly flew to Peggy with the news. He found her in the boathouse combing briers from the poodle's mane.

"Peggy," he exclaimed breathlessly, "who on earth do you suppose you have worshiping at your shrine?"

She smiled wearily.

"Oh, you again, I suppose," she said.

"His royal highness Ludwig Wilhelm, prince of Coburg-Gotha," said Motley, with the air of profaning so sacred a title by letting it slip from his plebeian tongue.

Peggy stared.

"Munsterberg—he's the prince—doing America incog.," Motley went on.

Peggy turned pale. She rose and tripped over the poodle. Motley rattled out the whole story and capped it triumphantly with a confession to the title on the part of his royal highness. By the time he had finished she was the old self possessed Peggy.

"Do you think you've told me any news?" she asked easily. And then, lest she should betray herself, she gathered up the poodle and fled to the house.

Peggy may be forgiven if she dreamed of many things after that—of an old gray castle in the hills of Coburg, of three letters and a royal title preceding her own name, of stationery bearing the crest of the triple headed eagle. In fact, she did dream much of these advantages at first, and the interesting German of that first Wednesday night hop was suddenly vested in her mind with much romance and much eligibility.

Then—oh, heart of woman!—after the first romance of the thing had worn off and his royal highness had begun to repeat his rather slender store of bright remarks she found herself dreaming of Donald Macomber and wondering why he had not come back to her as all the others had. She remembered that Macomber had always been masterful and high handed even as a suitor and that it was because he had been unwilling to yield some trivial point that she had broken with him. She began to think seriously and to compare his royal highness with Donald. And when the comparison, point by point, was ended Peggy was a very unhappy girl, to whom the castle in Coburg was a nightmare.

* * * * * * *

And because of all these things the throne of Coburg-Gotha barely escaped losing its heir.

It happened one August evening. His royal highness was paddling Peggy slowly about the lake, singing as he paddled little sentimental German songs and looking very contented.

Peggy gave the song no heed. She was watching a solitary figure in an approaching canoe. The figure bent to the paddle in an easy, familiar manner. There could be no mistaking those broad shoulders and that curly brown hair. The two canoes drew nearer. The man in the other canoe looked up. Peggy sailed and bowed. The man nodded coldly and began to paddle faster.

Something seemed to clutch her throat. The prince was quite forgotten. She realized only that Donald Macomber was paddling out of her sight and out of her life.

"Donald!" she cried.

He paddled on, with never a glance in her direction.

"Donald!" she cried again, and as he still gave no heed she tremblingly stood up.

His royal highness gasped.

"Sit down—sit down!" he urged.

Peggy deliberately put one little foot on the spreader, and in a moment they were in the water.

When she came to the surface she was seized by a strong arm, and a big, tender voice said evenly:

"Don't struggle, dearest. You are safe with me."

And Peggy closed her eyes and was very happy.

Not so his royal highness of Coburg-Gotha. He was floundering about miserably and shouting spasmodically between choking gurgles:

"Help—in God's name, help! I do not swim!"

The rescuers fished them out, Prince Ludwig Wilhelm of Coburg-Gotha first, for he was far spent. And while at the inn they were rolling him in hot blankets and pouring brandy down his throat Peggy was laughing and crying hysterically on the shoulder of the other prince—although he was not known to the world at large by his title, it is true—and making a most absurd confession. When she had finished Donald's face was very grave.

"But if he had drowned, what then, Peggy?" he questioned.

"Coburg-Gotha could have got along without a prince better than I could without you," she said.

"Niver a happorth do I care about style so long as it's a strong case. Have yez anny wid iron cases?"

"No, ma'am, but all our cases are made extra strong."

"How much is this pianny on the credit system?"

"The price of this piano is £40," answered the clerk. "The installment would be a pound a month."

"Insure the pianny and I'll take it."

"Well, really, ma'am, the purchaser usually insures the instrument; but, to close the bargain, we'll insure this piano and agree to take all risks."

"Ye see, betwane me and you," the purchaser explained as she deposited the receipt for the first installment in her pocket, "I'm glad to be aisy about the insurance, becaze I want to get the betther of me ould man. He said that if I brought a pianny into the house he'd smash it wid an ax, and, faith, he's the b'y to do it!"—Smith's Weekly.

He Saw.

The young and winsome maiden spoke to her father on behalf of George, the youth who had won her heart, but who was not her father's favorite.

"Father," she said gently, "I want to tell you something, and you mustn't be angry."

"Very well," he said. "I promise."

"I want to tell you, father, that George and I wish to get married."

The father forgot his promise in a second and began to storm.

"Haven't I told you I wouldn't have him about the house? Haven't I forbidden you to see him?" he cried excitedly. "Now, once for all, I tell you if he comes here again I'll kick him out."

"Now, father," she said quietly, "you'll do nothing of the sort. George is young and healthy and the champion all round athlete of his club, and we had a conference this morning, and I told him I'd love him just the same even if he had to pound you clean out of shape in defending his rights in this case, so you might as well submit now and save us the necessity of resorting to harsh measures. See?"

He saw.

Welcomed the Kicks.

There was an old southern negro who had been working for a cotton planter time out of mind. One morning he came to his employer and said:

"I's gwine quit, boss."

"What's the matter, Mose?"

"Well, sah, yer manager, Mistah Winter, ain't kicked me in de las' free months."

"I ordered him not to kick you any more. I don't want anything like that around my place. I don't want any one to hurt your feelings, Mose."

"Ef I don't git any more kicks I's gwine to quit. Ebery time Mistah Winter used ter kick and cuff me when he wuz mad he always git 'shamed of his se'f and gimme a qua'tah. I's done los' enuff money a'ready wid dis heah foolishness 'bout hurtin' ma feelin's."—Saturday Evening Post.

For fifty years the Clothcrafters have been building good clothes.
No other manufacturer in America has been at it so long and for so many reasons. No other maker produces clothes of equal merit at equal prices.
The Clothcraft principle has always been to turn out the very best irrespective of cost and then to add merely a legitimate manufacturing profit. Whatever is saved in buying cloth, or in improving methods of making, is taken out of the price. The Clothcrafters are clothing manufacturers and not speculators—they try to make the same percentage of profit on every garment sold.
Every garment is guaranteed. The guarantee is put into every suit and overcoat. It is a definite contract backed by a house fifty years old, with ample capital and a reputation in the trade that makes its every word worth par.
Clothcraft Clothes are guaranteed to give you greater value in style, fit, finish and wear than you can get in any other clothes at the same price.
STYLE is what first interests the buyer and WEAR is what makes him a steady customer.
You will find full measure of both—in Clothcraft.

CALIFORNIA
Do you want to live where the climate is mild the year round—where labor is never oppressed by stress of weather, and where animal vitality is never lost by mere conflict with cold?
Do you want to live in a region where the resources are more varied than in any other equal area in the world, where the division of great ranches affords a fine opportunity to get a small farm that will assure you a competence?
Do you want to live where, with a minimum of labor, you can grow profitable crops of grapes and small fruit, oranges, lemons, olives, prunes and almonds, alfalfa and grain, where crops are sure, business is good and capital easily finds profitable investment?
Then go to California, where both health and opportunity await your coming.
The Chicago, Union Pacific and North-Western Line
is the most direct route to the Pacific Coast, and there are two fast through trains daily via this line, over the famous double-track railway between Chicago and the Missouri River.
Special low round-trip rates are in effect via this line throughout the summer to various Pacific Coast points, and colonist low rate one-way tickets will be on sale during September and October, which give an unusual chance for settlers to make the trip at a minimum of expense.

He said that if I brought a pianny into the house he'd smash it wid an ax, and, faith, he's the b'y to do it!"—Smith's Weekly.

He Saw.

The young and winsome maiden spoke to her father on behalf of George, the youth who had won her heart, but who was not her father's favorite.

"Father," she said gently, "I want to tell you something, and you mustn't be angry."

"Very well," he said. "I promise."

"I want to tell you, father, that George and I wish to get married."

The father forgot his promise in a second and began to storm.

"Haven't I told you I wouldn't have him about the house? Haven't I forbidden you to see him?" he cried excitedly. "Now, once for all, I tell you if he comes here again I'll kick him out."

"Now, father," she said quietly, "you'll do nothing of the sort. George is young and healthy and the champion all round athlete of his club, and we had a conference this morning, and I told him I'd love him just the same even if he had to pound you clean out of shape in defending his rights in this case, so you might as well submit now and save us the necessity of resorting to harsh measures. See?"

He saw.

Welcomed the Kicks.

There was an old southern negro who had been working for a cotton planter time out of mind. One morning he came to his employer and said:

"I's gwine quit, boss."

"What's the matter, Mose?"

"Well, sah, yer manager, Mistah Winter, ain't kicked me in de las' free mumfs."

"I ordered him not to kick you any more. I don't want anything like that around my place. I don't want any one to hurt your feelings, Mose."

"Ef I don't git any more kicks I's gwine to quit. Ebery time Mistah Winter used ter kick and cuff me when he wuz mad he always git 'shamed of his se'f and gimme a qua'tah. I's done los' enuff money a'ready wid dis heah foolishness 'bout hurtin' ma feelin's."—Saturday Evening Post.

A STUDY OF HIS
is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.
All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

For fifty years the Clothcrafters have been building good clothes.
No other manufacturer in America has been at it so long and for so many reasons. No other maker produces clothes of equal merit at equal prices.
The Clothcraft principle has always been to turn out the very best irrespective of cost and then to add merely a legitimate manufacturing profit. Whatever is saved in buying cloth, or in improving methods of making, is taken out of the price. The Clothcrafters are clothing manufacturers and not speculators—they try to make the same percentage of profit on every garment sold.
Every garment is guaranteed. The guarantee is put into every suit and overcoat. It is a definite contract backed by a house fifty years old, with ample capital and a reputation in the trade that makes its every word worth par.
Clothcraft Clothes are guaranteed to give you greater value in style, fit, finish and wear than you can get in any other clothes at the same price.
STYLE is what first interests the buyer and WEAR is what makes him a steady customer.
You will find full measure of both—in Clothcraft.

CALIFORNIA
Do you want to live where the climate is mild the year round—where labor is never oppressed by stress of weather, and where animal vitality is never lost by mere conflict with cold?
Do you want to live in a region where the resources are more varied than in any other equal area in the world, where the division of great ranches affords a fine opportunity to get a small farm that will assure you a competence?
Do you want to live where, with a minimum of labor, you can grow profitable crops of grapes and small fruit, oranges, lemons, olives, prunes and almonds, alfalfa and grain, where crops are sure, business is good and capital easily finds profitable investment?
Then go to California, where both health and opportunity await your coming.
The Chicago, Union Pacific and North-Western Line
is the most direct route to the Pacific Coast, and there are two fast through trains daily via this line, over the famous double-track railway between Chicago and the Missouri River.
Special low round-trip rates are in effect via this line throughout the summer to various Pacific Coast points, and colonist low rate one-way tickets will be on sale during September and October, which give an unusual chance for settlers to make the trip at a minimum of expense.
Daily and personally conducted excursions are operated through to San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Portland without change, on which a double berth in a Pullman tourist sleeping car from Chicago costs only $7.00, via the

Notice To Tax Payers!

This is to notify the tax payers of Garrett county that the Annual Levy for 1905 has been made and published, and to call their attention to the following abstract, Section 45, Chapter 566, Acts of 1890, relating to the discount to be allowed and the interest to be charged on all tax bills:

"All county taxes shall be due and payable on the first day of September next succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and all county taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed, and after the first day of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid. The treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes regularly in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon his books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid. But the discount shall not be allowed unless the whole amount of State and county taxes are paid when same is made.

$2150 ADDITIONAL COST FOR NEW JAIL

This Amount Commissioners Have Agreed to Pay the Contractors.

SIZE OF BUILDING NOT INCREASED

But Contractors Claim the New Site is More Expensive to Build On—Although there is Less Excavating.

The Board of County Commissioners at the meeting of that body held during the month of April agreed with the contractors having under construction the new jail in Oakland to pay them an additional sum of $2150 on the contract, which brings the total amount to be expended up to this time in the building and furnishing of the jail and sheriff's residence considerably over $37,000.

The contractors claims that by the changing of the site the cost of the construction of the building has been increased although the original dimensions of the building are adhered to in every particular.

The matter is not generally known but has been pretty freely discussed by some residents and tax payers of town who criticise the action of the Commissioners severely for thus spending the people's money.

Semi-Annual Meeting Allegany Conference.

The program for the semi-annual meeting of the Allegany Conference of the Evangelical Lutheran church, of which Rev. E. Manges, of Oakland, is president, to be held at Eglon, W. Va., beginning on next Monday, has been issued.

The sessions will be held in the church at Eglon and will extend over a period of three days, closing on Wednesday evening at 7.30 o'clock

In the Conference there are eighteen charges and include those at Cumberland on the east and Fairmont on the west. The missionary work is in charge of Rev. Taylor B. Yeakley.

PUBLIC SALE.

I will offer at public sale on Saturday, the 10th day of June, at my stables in Oakland, 6 head of horses, carriages, buggies, wagons, phætons, sleighs, a lot of harness, saddles, bridles and other articles too numerous to mention.

Terms of sale.—Under $5.00 cash; over that amount, a credit of six months, purchaser to give note with approved security.

DECORATION DAY AT DEER PARK.

The Beautiful Little Village Fittingly Observed the Occasion.

The Deer Park Decoration Day ceremonies this year exceeded the observance of 1904 in the extent of the conciliatory feeling between the advocates of the blue and gray, writes a Deer Park subscriber of the THE REPUBLICAN.

The committee announced the day's program quite extensively and a large concourse of people from adjacent towns were present.

The orator of the day, Rev. W. H. Faust, the Baptist minister, delivered the eulogy at the cemetery, and his language was beautiful and impressive. The Deer Park Concert band discoursed music appropriate to the occasion and a quartet of village maids rendered army songs that were entirely suitable.

The return from the cemetery to the village green renewed the celebration, G. W. Haulenbeck, an ex-Union soldier delivering an address reminiscent of his service in the Army of the Potomac. He was followed by Dr. J. W. Laughlin, whose words fitteed the occasion. Dr. Laughlin is agood speaker.

Mr. C. M. Miller, of Swanton, attracted by the wide publicity of the ceremonies given by the committee composed of J. W. Walter, T. C. Garrett and Wilfred Chadderton, caused him to visit Deer Park merely as a spectator, but he was impressed into the service as a speaker much to the satisfaction of the assemblage. Chairman W. D. Hoye also made a speech and it was a good one.

PAINFULLY HURT.

Mr. Charles E. Hilleary Met With a Serious Accident Monday.

On Monday Mr. Charles E. Hillearv, of District No. 8 this county, met with a serious and quite painful accident whereby his nose was broken and badly lacerated.

He was engaged in driving his team down a sharp hill and putting down the break the bar slipped and in rebounding struck him full on the nose crushing and lacerating it badly, requiring the services of two physicians to dress his injuries.

Mr. Hilleary's many friends will be glad to learn, however, that no serious consequences are likely to follow and that he will recover speedily.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. C. W. Conner, of Brooklyn N. Y., is a guest of the Assembly House.

Mr. Joseph Hartman, Jr., and family of Pittsburg, have moved into the Conner house for the summer.

Mr. H. E. Flowers, of Baltimore, was a Park visitor last Monday.

Mr. D. E. Smith and wife, and Mrs. Crueter of Washington, reached the Park Monday last.

A very enjoyable social was conducted last Sabbath evening in the Auditorium by the Epworth League of this place.

Next Sabbath an all day meeting will be held at Wesley Chapel, two miles south of the Park. At 10 a. m. a children's service will be held. A fine program has been arranged. At 2.30 preaching. Every body invited to bring their dinner and enjoy the service.

The electric light plant has been sold to the Mountain Lake Park Association.

Mr. John Hipsley went to Cumberland on Monday to participate in a shooting tournament.

Preaching in the Methodist church Sunday, 8 p. m. by the pastor.

Messrs. C. M. Rathbun & Sons report their trade 30 per cent. better than at this date last year.

Major J. M. Burns and family of Morgantown, reached the Park yesterday on No. 14.

A. R. Sperry, the B. & O. R. R. agent of this place, has had a phone line put in from his home to the depot.

Mr. John B. Waugh of Cumberland, spent last Friday at the Park.

E. L. Winchell, of the firm of Elliot and Winchell, contractors, and one of our summer visitors, sued the Baltimore & Ohio railroad company in the United States court at Pittsburg for $25,000 damages for injuries sustained by himself and Mrs. Winchell in a wreck several months ago, but just before the case came to trial a compromise was affected whereby Mr. Winchell was given a substantial sum of money. The suit was then dropped.

FRENCH SPOLIATION.

Robert Shriver Has Fund for Distribution.

Robert Shriver, president of the First National Bank, Cumberland, has given notice that he has entered suit to have the funds in his hands, and such as may hereafter come into his possession, as administrator d. b. n. of the late Isaac Causten, his great grandfather, distributed under the order of the Circuit Court for Allegany County. Mr. Shriver was appointed administrator by the Orphans' Court of Baltimore City.

The bill states that about 100 years ago Isaac Causten owned an interest in the cargoes of certain brigs or ships, known as the Rosetta, Aurora, Comrade and Federal George, which were destroyed by French privateers; that the claims were known as the French spoliation claims, and have been recognized by the United States; that there has been paid to him a portion of the claims, and the other portion has been allowed by the government and will soon be paid over, amounting in all to $1,857.10.

The heirs are Robert Shriver and Mrs Eliza Fundenberg of Deer Park, great-grandchildren, and the following great-great-grandchildren: James C. Shriver, Cumberland; Van L. P. Shriver, Pittsburg, Pa.; Henry Shriver, Mount Savage, Md.; Robert S. Shriver, Cumberland; Henrietta C. Shriver, Mount Savage; Alice J. Swartzwelder, Henrietta Shriver, Cumberland; Marquita Carvallo, Josephine Caryallo, Henrietta Benevente, all residing in Chili, South America; Mary C. Kundel, Philadelphia, Pa.; Josephine Young, Washington, D. C.; James C. Young and Josephine Young, of California; Rebecca E. Young and Alice E Fisher, of Philadelphia; Isodora C. Magruder Cincinnati; James H. Causten, Porto Rico, and Eliza B. Buckingham, of Philidelphia.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to extend to the friends and relatives of the dear one that has so recently been taken from us our sincerest thanks for all the kindness you have shown him and us during this sad winter. Should affliction come to your homes as it has to ours, may God raise you up a host of friends to comfort and cheer you as he has certainly done us.

FRIENDSVILLE.

The citizens of Friendsville are having a boom at the present time; lumber business is rushing and the different lumber dealers, viz: The Bear Creek Lumber company, Kendall and Nedrow, Lock Haven Lumber company, successor to Mountain Meadow company, W. E. VanSickel and all others a e doing a good business in all kinds of sawed lumber, ties, props, etc.

D. S. Custer, the popular merchant and manager in the telephone exchange, who had his hands and build ing badly scorched at the late fire, is all right again, the doctor having made his hands all right so that he now can attend to the switches and the insurance company repaired the buildings.

The past week among our business visitors was A. J. Savadge of Meyersdale who represents the Pittsburg Brewing company of Connellsville.

Among others who visited here during the last few days were T. L. Laskey, Cumberland, M. M. Schlock, Mountain Lake Park, C. M. Johnson, Pittsburg and J. F. Bennett, Glen Campbell, Pa.

The different hotels and business are also rushing business.

There has been a feeling of universal gloom cast over our community by Mrs. C. A. Mitchell's death who during a short visit of one year at this place endeared her to every person with whom she came in contact. Her husband and son miss her the most and next to them come those employed in the Crawford House, and all these ever felt her patience and motherly care over them, and the true principles of christianity which she showed to them both by precept and example, will never be forgotten. She has left behind her a monument in the hearts of her husband, sons, domestics and the community at large, that is more enduring than grantle or marble; she is gone but not forgotten.

L. O. Will, district agent of the Mutual Life Insurance Co., of N. Y., visited here during the week.

H. H. VanSickel of Casselman representing W. E. VanSickel, the well-known lumber dealer of Ursina, was a busy man here most of the week supervising the shipments of large consignments of lumber.

E. H. Swift of Parkersburg, W. Va., representing J. W. Murdock & Co., wholesale druggists of that place and R. K. Jones, representing the Park Drug Co., of Baltimore were visitors here Thursday.

Frank Lee is now clerk and bar tender at the Riverside Hotel. W. D. Collier, the proprietor has been keeping this place as a private boarding house for a number of years previous to getting a license.

Miss Bertha and Susan Collier visited Cumberland last week and attended the Ringling circus.

W. F. East, one of our best mechanics in Somerset county, has been doing some fine painting here lately; he has painted the Central Hotel, Fred Haney's residence, C. S. Custer's store and other buildings.

SILOS AND ENSILAGE.

School Commissioner Bishoff Records His Personal Experiences In Silage.

To the Editor of The Republican

I have been requested to write an article on silos and ensilage as has been tested for a period of five years by the writer.

My silos are made in the barn of stone and cement, on each side of the threshing floor, next to the back wall of the bank barn, and extends from the ground to the roof, a depth of twenty-one feet. The capacity of them are forty tons each and after using them five years they are in a good state of preservation. The ensilage keeps as well in them as any I have found elsewhere. The entire cost of them did not exceed two hundred dollars. Silos build of stones can be constructed cheaper but are not so lasting. Persons contemplating building one would do well to get the actual cost of concrete walls, or of brick, where material can be had without too much freight. The principal advantage in procuring and preserving this green feed for winter is it is cheaper and gives the stock a good appetite

I will give you an account of how many tons of corn can be raiesd on an acre of ground and the probable cost of production and putting it in the silo. I have raised seventeen tons on an acre but fifteen tons is considered a good yield. Corn that will produce fifty bushels of corn to the acre will make about sixteen tons if cut before the sap is dried out of it too much.

The corn can be grown at a profit at two dollars per ton as it stands in the field. It can be cut and placed in the silo at a cost of about fifty cents per ton. It can be put in the silo cheaper than preparing it for food, by husking, grinding the corn, and cutting the fodder or stover, and the food from the silo is more digestible.

I have gvien ensilage a fair test as a milk producing food and found that many mangolos or beets are equal, but cost more per ton to produce them. I have found that before I produced ensilage for my cows I had to feed a much stronger grain ration to get good returns. We find so much written about ensilage as a milk producing food that I will not give in detail my experience in this but will give what I have done in fattening steers. With forty pounds of ensilage per day and eight pounds of corn meal and about ten pounds of good hay, a gain of three hundred pounds in five months. The ensilage keeps the digestion so that the cattle will not refuse their feed at any time. For stock cattle, about twenty pounds per day along with the hay will bring them through the winter in good shape.

The ration I gave is for an animal weighing about eight hundred pounds when commenced feeding. With larger cattle a greater gain can be made, but an increased ration is required. A summary—

1. Ensilage is the best and cheapest food.
2. It is relished by the stock.
3. No waste; all will be consumed.
4. It comes off the ground early so the ground can be sown in rye, either to harvest or to plow under for the oats crops.
5. No corn stalks to be in the way in the field or stables.
6. Feeding it is a much better job than tumbling around in the mud and snow in the winter.
7. Grow roots for the stock until you are convinced you need a silo.

DIED.

MYERS.—At her home near Mason school house on Saturday, May 27th, 1904. Mrs. James S. Myers, aged 61 years, 2 months and 23 days. The deceased lady was a member of the United Brethren church for a number of years and was liked by all who knew har. She is survived by her husband and two children—a daughter and a son. Her funeral took place from the Union church at Gortner on Monday, Rev. Cunningham officiating. The pall bearers were Messrs. Henry Ridder, David P. Mosser, James Mason, Christian Martin and Joel Gnegy. The interment was made in the cemetery adjoining the church.

Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Ryland and child accompanied by Miss Mattie Wood, of Pittsburg, came up on Saturday night for a visit with Mr. Ryland's parents. On Monday they enjoyed a drive over to their old home at Grantsville, and returned to their home at Pittsburg on Tuesday evening.—Meyersdale Republican.

DECORATION DAY OBSERVED IN OAKLAND.

Graves of Union Dead and Deceased Members of Societies Decorated Tuesday.

CUSTOM NOT DEPARTED FROM

Grand Army Men, School Children, Members of Knights of Pythias and Junior Order Participated—Decorations Elaborate.

All honor thine, O dead,
Who findeth sepulcher beneath the sod
Made sacred by blood.
Reverently we bow, and low
Upon each grave do humbly lay—
Nor noblest couldst bestow—
A victor's crown.

Tuesday with the dawn of another Decoration Day—the fortieth since the close of the great Civil War, that gigantic strife which drenched the land with the blood of hundreds of thousands of the best and bravest of American youth and manhood, but which cemented together as with bonds of steel the several states of a once disorganized Union, brought with it in all sections of the country the tramp of many feet, hurrying to place tributes of love and affection upon the graves of those who fell in battle, who died of wounds or disease, and of those who participated in the great struggle, have since "passed beyond the river," and likewise upon the graves of departed friends and deceased brethren of beneficial societies.

The exercises of the day as is the usual custom, were under the immediate charge of Crook Post G. A. R., of which Col. A. G. Sturgiss is the Commander and Capt. James A. Hayden is adjutant.

The Keyser band, which was engaged for the occasion, headed the procession from the Post Headquarters to the cemetery, the parade forming as follows:

Crook Post, 25 members.
School children.
Knights of Pythias, 48 members.
Jr. O. U. A. M., 22 members.

Arriving at the cemetery the graves of the soldiers were decorated by details from the ranks of the Post and by the little children, while members of the secret societies decorated the graves of their deceased brethren.

After the graves of all had been strewn with flowers the soldiers gathered at the grave of the unknown and the ritualistic services of the Post were partially carried out, the ceremony being cut short owing to the rain storm which came up about that time.

In the afternoon a game of base ball was played at Jack Oak park by a picked nine from town and a nine from the Weber farm adjoining Oakland, resulting in a score of 5 to 8 for the town team.

BITTINGER.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter P. Loar, of Oakland are visiting their son J. T. Lohr and family at this place for a few days.

Mr. Daniel Miller of Somerset Co., Pa., was visiting friends in this section last week.

Miss Sechler, of Meyersdale, Pa., is the guest of her brother Mr. Chas. J. Sechler this week.

Contractor Simon Brenneman with his force of carpenters went to Grantsville where they will erect a large dwelling and barn for Mr. Christian Livengood.

Comrade Kline of Bloomington, Md., passed through here last Saturday afternoon enroute to Jennings.

Mr. S. L. Bowman removed with his family from this place to a farm recently purchased near McHenry. We regret the loss of this good citizen from our midst.

Edward Wiley has reopened his photograph gallery at Jennings and may be seen there on Thursday and Friday of each week.

Mr. A. J. Orendorf is somewhat inconvenienced by an attack of throat trouble this week.

Louis Maust and family of Springs, Pa., were visiting relatives here last Sunday.

The LUCKY STONE

By HOWARD FIELDING

Copyright, 1904, by Charles W. Hooke

MISS ANNIE JOHNSON, whose station in life was in front of a washtub, had been "off post" all day. She had deserted the tub and had gone out to get some money. Annie had wasted eight hours and had raised 60 cents.

It was an afternoon at the end of summer. The city had been left in the oven a little too long that year; it was overdone; it had begun to smell burned. The coolest looking place that Annie had seen during the day was a high stoop house on the shady side of the street. She herself was upon the sunny side because she had been too much occupied with pecuniary problems to consider the advisability of crossing. She stared at the high stoop house, and she said, "I wonder could Miss Colbert be back from the country yet?" speaking aloud, for she had reached that degree of nervous tension where the safety valve of unintended utterance gives its warning of danger.

Miss Colbert was an actress who had played in the city nearly all of the previous winter, and Annie had been her laundress.

"She would give me a little somethin' in advance," said Annie, "but of course she isn't here."

However, being at her wits' end for a very small sum of money, Annie crossed the street and rang the bell at the basement door of the high stoop house. Nobody answered, and, as the door was ajar, Annie entered the lower hall. Failing to find a servant, she ascended the stairs to the first floor, and as she thus came directly at the door of the large room at the rear of the house, Miss Colbert's room, it seemed simplest to knock.

It was always hard to hear a knock or a call to "Come in!" at this door, for it opened from a small vestibule and there was a portiere at the other end of it. Upon this occasion it is probable that Annie experienced a genuine hallucination. She was so anxious to hear Miss Colbert's voice that she heard it, though the actress was not there, and Annie entered an empty room.

Upon a table standing near the window there was a glass plate, and it was heaped high with jewels. The light of the fervid day surged in and beat upon them, and they dashed it back in a thousand sparkling sprays.

"Gee!" said Annie softly. "Wouldn't that jar you?"

She glanced fearfully toward the window.

"It's a wonder she wouldn't set 'em out in the back yard!" she continued. "I never saw the like of her. Anybody could climb in here."

On the edge of the plate there was a loose stone about the size of an average pea. In comparison with the others it looked very small, and Annie was of the opinion that it could be removed without Miss Colbert's missing it. This, then, represented the extreme of prudence and forbearance. Annie rolled the stone around in the palm of her hand. It may have been perspiration which dulled the glitter of the stone or the phenomenon may have had an explanation within the domain of morals, but the simple fact is that the gem's light faded and its attraction died. Annie laid it back upon the plate at last, with a faint sensation of nausea. The touchstone had revealed her weakness; she lacked the power to steal.

There was a noise under the window, and Annie looked out upon the top of a man's head and upon a long stepladder which he was bringing out of the basement into the yard. He glanced upward, and then his mouth and Annie's opened simultaneously, and their eyes became round.

"Tom Wilson," said Annie, "where'd you come from?"

"I'm workin' for Mrs. Booth," said he.

"You wasn't the last time I heard of you," said she, with a woman's cruelty toward the man she favors.

"That's right," said Tom in a cautious tone. "I was in the Tombs. That's where I was, an' I never done it. They got the wrong man when they got me. An' they took a drop to themselves after awhile an' let me go. I wasn't tried; indictment dismissed. You know what that means."

"It means that they couldn't prove it," replied Annie. "No, Tom; that ain't fair. I won't say it. You wasn't guilty—that's the truth—an' I've always believed it."

"Where's Mrs. Booth now?" said Annie, to change a painful subject.

"She's gone out," he replied, "an' the girls are upstairs. I've been cleanin' up the yard."

A sudden resolution seemed to seize upon him. He turned the ladder about and mounted to the top of it, coming almost to a level with Annie at the window.

"I told Mrs. Booth that I'd been down to Mexico," he said hurriedly, almost in a whisper, "an' now I'm goin' for fair, an' you're goin' with me."

"What d'you mean?" demanded Annie, frightened by his manner.

"What do we want to be so poor for?" said he, white with excitement. "Look at them diamonds! I saw 'em from across the yard. I saw her tryin' some of 'em in her hair an' lookin' at 'em in the sun. What d'you think that outfit's worth? Well, well, I guess we wouldn't do a thing with that money down in Mexico."

"You're dreamin'," retorted Annie. "Who told you I'd go with you even if the money was yours?"

"You as good as told me that once," said he, with fierce intensity, and the next instant, exercising an agility of which he would have been incapable in a calmer moment, he transferred himself from the ladder to the window, where he perched with his feet hanging out.

"If I ever told you that," said Annie, "it was when I took you for an honest man."

"I'm that today," he replied. "I never stole nothin'. I'll swear to that. But I've been behind the bars for three months. I've had my medicine, an' now"—

He choked with a dry throat, and, being unable to proceed, he made his meaning clear by extending a hand toward the plate. Annie caught him by the wrist.

"Don't do that, Tom!" she cried. "You can't get nothin' that way in this world—nothin' that's worth havin'. It ain't the way to get me—that's certain. I wouldn't go with you if you had as many of 'em as would fill a keg o' beer unless they was yours."

"How long would it take you an' me to earn enough money to buy one o' them stones?" he asked angrily. "An' how much work has she ever done to get 'em all? Men give 'em to her. Dudes send 'em round to the stage door with mash notes. I know all about it."

"She's a good girl," said Annie, with at least as much vigor as she would have resented an attack upon her own reputation. "She works hard. I've seen her in the dead o' winter, with both these windows open, walkin' up an' down this room with the sweat runnin' off of her face. I've seen her sit down on the floor an' sob till it near shook her to pieces because she couldn't speak her words the way that she wanted to. She earned those diamonds, she gets big pay, an' she has to have 'em to wear on the stage."

"I don't care how she got 'em," he broke in. "I know how you an' me can get 'em. There'll never be another chance like this."

"Tom," she pleaded, "I do honestly care a lot about you. If you care anything about me now's your time to show it. Don't say another word like you've been sayin'. What's the use? We'd both be mis'rable. We ain't thieves, neither one of us. If there'd been any thief about me you wouldn't have had much show with your stepladder, Tom. I'd 'a' had a big start o' you."

Wilson drew in a hard breath like a long gasp.

"You don't care nothin' about me," he said. "You never did. I didn't have any money. I couldn't take you out. An' you was always tied to the house anyway. That's the way with women. They"—

"Tom," said she, "you're talkin' crazy. I never took any pains to fool you about it. You could see how I felt. All I ever asked o' you was that you should go to work steady an' not hang around at odd jobs—a day's work for Mrs. Booth an' a day somewhere else next week. If you want me you know how to get me—even now, after this. Why, Tom, there ain't anything in stealin', there ain't anything into it at all. An' I know because I've tried. Look at this."

She picked the small stone out of the plate.

"I did my best to see if I couldn't pinch that little bit of a di'mond," she continued, "an' I couldn't."

"I can!" he cried and clutched at it, but she eluded him.

She stepped back from the window and stood trembling, the pallor struggling with the flush of the heat upon her thin cheeks and shining temples. Her blue eyes were big and bright, and they looked him through and through.

"Then this is our finish, Tom," she said. "I never knew you before. It would 'a' been just like me to make a mistake that would 'a' done for me forever. I guess this is my lucky day. I don't feel much as if it was, but there can't be any better luck for a girl than to find out her mistake before she makes it."

He leaned in from the window sill, thrusting his face as near to hers as possible.

"Are you goin' to stand in my way?" he whispered.

"Me?" she said confusedly. "Me stand in your way?"

"I'm goin' to have those di'monds," said he. "It's for you to say whether you'll squeal on me or keep still."

His voice sounded sharp and hard. He was in deadly earnest. Annie was frightened, heartbroken and angry all together.

"Don't count on me, Tom," she said. "This is our finish. I've said that once before, an' I mean it. I'm done."

He gathered himself up in the window, watching her with dire intentness.

"You can get out o' here," he said. "There's nobody in the lower part o' the house. You needn't know anything about this. Go. Now's your chance."

"Don't fool yourself," she retorted angrily. "I'm stayin' right here."

His face took on a peculiar expression. She saw that his lower lip was between his teeth, and suddenly there was blood upon it. The next instant he sprang at her. He had made his plan upon the assumption that she would try to run away, and perhaps this error accounts for the surprising sequel. Annie did not run; she advanced. The collision between them occurred very much earlier than Mr. Wilson anticipated. He was overbalanced; he lost the battle and vanished from the scene of it. There was a horrible crash of the stepladder, and Wilson lay for a few seconds quite still amid its ruins, while Annie, weak with fright, hung over the window sill. She had not intended to push Tom out of the window; she had merely accepted combat with true courage.

A voice from above cried, "Foh de lub o' heaven!" And Annie, looking upward, saw the ebony countenance of Mrs. Booth's cook.

"Tom climbed up on the ladder to speak to me," said the girl. "Tom, you ain't hurt? Say you ain't hurt."

Wilson sat upon the ground and glared up at her.

"I'm no such liar as that," said he, with unconscious humor.

It was passing through his mind that the game was up, that Annie's explanation was the only way of discretion and that he was lucky to be alive. He struggled to his feet and began to brush his clothes. At this moment Annie heard a voice behind her.

MARCIA COLBERT WAS STANDING IN THE DOORWAY.

"Why, it's Annie Johnson! Now, isn't this the greatest luck! I'd lost your address."

Marcia Colbert was standing in the doorway, a vision of loveliness in the eyes of poor Annie.

"I hadn't ought to have come in here," said the girl, "but I knocked, an' I thought I heard your voice. An' after I got in I waited because—because"—

"Well, I'm mighty glad you did," said Miss Colbert. "I've some clothes for you—about a dray load, I should judge. I don't know how you'll carry them."

She removed a gold chain from around her neck. It had supported a little bag which was so full of money that it burst open when it was dropped upon the table. Beholding the display of green notes, Annie passed into a species of trance, which was so long continued that it attracted Miss Colbert's attention.

"I've just drawn some money for clothes," said she. "Had to have it, Annie. I've got to buy costumes in a terrible hurry, and I hadn't a cent. So what could the poor manager do?"

Intensity of thought wrinkled and twisted Annie's brow. She was engaged in the high grade intellectual labor of classification and comparison.

"You don't need any costumes to wear when you wash clothes," she said at last, "and you don't have any manager."

Miss Colbert looked at her steadily, with a broadening smile.

"How much do you need?" she said very kindly, and then, handing Annie a five dollar bill, "Will that help you out?"

The tears came into Annie's eyes.

"I said to myself that if you was home I'd be all right," said she somewhat irrelevantly.

"Well, if you'd come yesterday," replied Miss Colbert, "you'd have found me as poor as yourself. I came mighty near pawning my one poor little diamond, the only one I ever had."

She turned a pretty ring backward and forward upon the third finger of her left hand.

"That's my engagement ring, Annie," said she, "and the dear boy who gave it to me is many miles away. But never mind, he's coming soon, and I wouldn't want him to find his ring in pawn."

"The only one you ever owned," said Annie in a hushed and solemn tone. "How about them? How about all them beautiful ones in that plate? Ain't they yours?"

"They're as glassy as the plate," replied Miss Colbert. "I guess they were made in the same factory. That's stage jewelry, Annie. Some of it is pretty good of it's kind, and I've just been cleaning it up, so that it shines right smart, but the whole lot isn't worth as much as my little ring."

"'Tain't real!" said Annie under her breath. "Blessed mother, think of it! 'Tain't real!"

She picked up the loose stone with which she dimly perceived that she had tested both herself and the man who might have wrecked her life.

"You've always been good to me," she said, "an' I'm after takin' your money today when I ain't got any right to it. You must think queer o' me, an' you'll think queerer if I ask you to give me this."

"That?" exclaimed Marcia. "Why, it isn't worth 4 cents. What could you do with that? You can't wear it."

Annie was very red. She stood there upon her awkward legs, with her thin shoulders working up and down nervously.

"I dunno," said she faintly. "I just want it, that's all. I think there's luck in it."

"Of course you can have it," Marcia said, "and I hope it will bring you luck. The love of a good man is the best luck there is, Annie. I hope you'll have that."

"An' the love of a bad man's the worst," said Annie, tying up the bit of glass in her handkerchief. "May Providence preserve all women from that."

"Amen," said Marcia.

The Swift Revenge Of a Small Boy

I WAS taking luncheon with a friend the other day who has a little boy about three years old, writes A. P. A. in Harper's Magazine. As a very special favor and to please me his mother allowed him to come to the table, telling me that she could not promise that he would behave in the proper manner, as she had never tried him before.

The bright little fellow behaved very well through the first part of the lunch, and his mother was feeling quite proud of him. When the dessert came on the table and proved to be ice cream, his favorite dessert, the small boy wanted a second help. This his mother would not allow him.

"If you don't give me some," he said, "I'll tell on you."

His mother still refused, and the youngster called out:

"If you don't give it to me before I count ten, I'll tell. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten."

His mother still paid no attention to him, and he shouted out:

"My pants are made out of the window curtain!"

Benny on the Grizzly Bear.

The grizzly bear is a large and awkward animal, with long hair and an unpleasant disposition. He is fond of honey and sheep and will attack man if pressed by hunger. When you meet a grizzly bear the best way is to turn aside with great speed unless he is in a cage. But if he comes at you, and you have a gun loaded with real bullets, you can offer a silent prayer and shoot. That is what my grandfather used to do, except that he did not offer the silent prayer. He was not that kind. Once there was a man who went out to hunt a grizzly bear and did not come back. The editor put it in his paper that the man had found the bear, but I don't think the editor knew anything about it. We should be careful to tell the truth and lead a good life if we want to be rich and respected. The grizzly bear will also eat peanuts, and when he is enraged he emits growls with great fierceness.—Chicago Tribune.

A Modern Miracle.

"Yes, sir," he said, "the fish was so big that it pulled him into the creek, and"—

"He was drowned?"

"Oh, no; water wuzn't more 'n two foot deep."

"But how could so big a fish swim in such shallow water?"

That "got" him; but, after a pause, the fish liar said solemnly:

Two Mysteries.

The man who was surveying for a railway paused to inquire:

"Any mosquitoes around here?"

"Yep," answered the resident.

That Tired Feeling.

Don't want to work or nothin',
Don't want to read or walk,
Don't want to drink, don't want to think—
Don't even want to talk.
Don't want to go to dinner,
Don't want to go to bed;
Can't seem to rest—this weather's jest
Natur'ly gone to my head!

You can't hardly call it lazy;
You can't rightly name it sick,
But, good land's sake, how my bones do ache
Whenever I work a lick!
It's just too blame much bother
To do anything but lie
On the flat o' yer back and look through a crack
In the trees at that warm, blue sky!

I know I'd orter make garden,
I know I'd orter rake
The trash that lays in the yard an'
Be helpin' my wife to make
Soft soap. But I jest can't do it—
I ain't in the right condition—
But if some one 'ud dig some bait an' rig
My tackle I'd go'a-fishin'!

Obstacles In the Way of Municipal Ownership

By Professor FRANK J. GOODNOW of Columbia University

I DO not believe that any general taking over of the street railways of New York by the city to operate them under the municipal government at the present time would result in advantage to the public. If any change is to be made toward the municipalization of our street railways it should be made, I think, BY CAUTIOUS STEPS. The superiority of municipal over private operation of these utilities is not yet an established axiom. Even if the municipalization of the entire system be the eventual wish of the people, it should be arrived at by stages. We have had no education in the municipal operation of street railways, and we must learn our lesson little by little—by taking over the lines one by one AND STUDYING THE RESULTS OF EACH STEP.

The management of a great street railway system is a complex affair. It cannot in any way be compared to the conduct of a city's water supply. There technical ability is at a minimum. The chief thing in the management of the water service is to find where the water is to be drawn from and then to conduct it through a system of pipes and mains to those who use it. On the other hand, the operation of a great system of modern street railways, especially those run by the latest and most developed processes of electrical locomotion, involves a vast amount of technical knowledge, which I am not at all sure municipal government can command OR WILL EVEN TAKE THE TROUBLE TO EMPLOY.

Moreover, the operation of our elevated, subway and surface lines requires the services of a vast army of men. The number of men employed in the conduct of any of the other facilities which can be brought under municipal operation cannot compare with the number needed here. This adds a further element to the doubt of the efficiency with which the street railways can be run by the city. In the water department a comparatively small number of men are employed, and in the operation of gas and electric lighting companies the number is scarcely greater.

The greatest difficulty, however, to be encountered in the operation of public utilities by a municipality lies, I believe, in their FINANCIAL management. There is always a tendency under municipal operation where the influence of the ballot can be felt to increase the wages of subordinates to a figure entirely out of proportion to that reached BY SMALLER LABOR IN PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT and a corresponding tendency to lower the salaries of the men at the top to a point incommensurate with that which they can command FROM PRIVATE CONCERNS.

The result of the first of these tendencies is to make it impossible for a city to run its car lines as cheaply as they can be run under private operation and a possible danger of arriving at a deficit at the end of the year, and the very general consequence of the second tendency is to place beyond the command of the municipal government the services of the BEST men for the higher positions in the service so to render the management as a result less efficient.

I DO NOT THINK THAT CIVIC VIRTUE HAS REACHED THAT POINT AMONG US YET AT WHICH THE TECHNICALLY EDUCATED MAN IS WILLING TO SERVE THE CITY AT A SMALLER SALARY THAN HE CAN OBTAIN ELSEWHERE.

A Poem for Today

TO MY MOTHER

By Heinrich Heine

I HAVE been wont to bear my forehead high—
My stubborn temper yields with no good grace,
The king himself might look me in the face,
And yet I would not downward cast mine eye.
But, I confess, dear mother, openly,
However proud my haughty spirit swell,
When I within thy blessed presence dwell,
Oft am I smit with shy humility.
Is it thy soul, with secret influence,
Thy lofty soul piercing all shows of sense,
Which soareth, heaven-born, to heaven again?
Or springs it from sad memories that tell
How many a time I caused thy dear heart pain,
Thy gentle heart, that loveth me so well!

America's Trade With the Orient

By Baron KENTARO KANEKO of Japan

IN the next five or ten years American trade with the far east, particularly with Japan, WILL EXPAND WITH ENORMOUS RAPIDITY.

The reason is plain. We have to depend on America for raw materials, and you have to depend on Japan for raw materials. Our cotton factories depend ENTIRELY upon American raw cotton. We must depend on you for tobacco leaf. We look to you for breadstuffs, for iron and steel, cast, bar and sheet iron and machinery. These things we simply CANNOT make in our country.

On the other hand, we send you raw silk. You cannot raise it. We give you about $50,000,000 worth of tea each year. In other things which never compete we provide your country, and the balance of trade is carried out by this means.

At present we cannot tell when the war will end, but sooner or later normal business conditions must return. We have spent enormous sums of money. We have had a great strain on our financial power. It will take four or five years for us to recover, and by that time the United States will have established A FIRM GRASP ON THE EAST, since you have such low interest on your money, such tremendous money power and skillful business men.

THE UNITED STATES WILL BE THE GAINER AND WILL HAVE TRADE THERE PRETTY MUCH ITS OWN WAY.

Jubal Early's Last Stand

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

March 2, 1865

[Copyright, 1905, by G. L. Kilmer.]

AFTER Sheridan's defeat of the Confederates in the Shenandoah valley led by General Jubal Early, Grant revived the plan to have the principal force of Federals in that region transferred to Petersburg to take part in the siege operations there. In December General Robert E. Lee recalled from Early's command the entire Second Confederate corps, and Grant ordered the Sixth Federal corps to join him on the James. At the beginning of 1865 Sheridan had with him in the valley one division of the Nineteenth infantry corps and 10,000 sabers. The cavalry was led by General Wesley Merritt, with General Custer and General Devin commanding divisions of 5,000 men each.

Attempts had been made in December, 1864, by Sheridan to carry out Grant's wish that he strike the Virginia Central railroad in the vicinity of Gordonsville and isolate Lynchburg from Richmond and Petersburg. Two forces under General Torbert and General Custer moved up the valley, but Custer was checked by Confederate cavalry under the noted General Rosser, and Torbert met with determined resistance at Gordonsville. The campaign took place during a winter storm, and the roads were slippery with ice. The expedition proved that the campaigning season in the valley was ended, and Sheridan's troops went into winter quarters, not to emerge until the end of February.

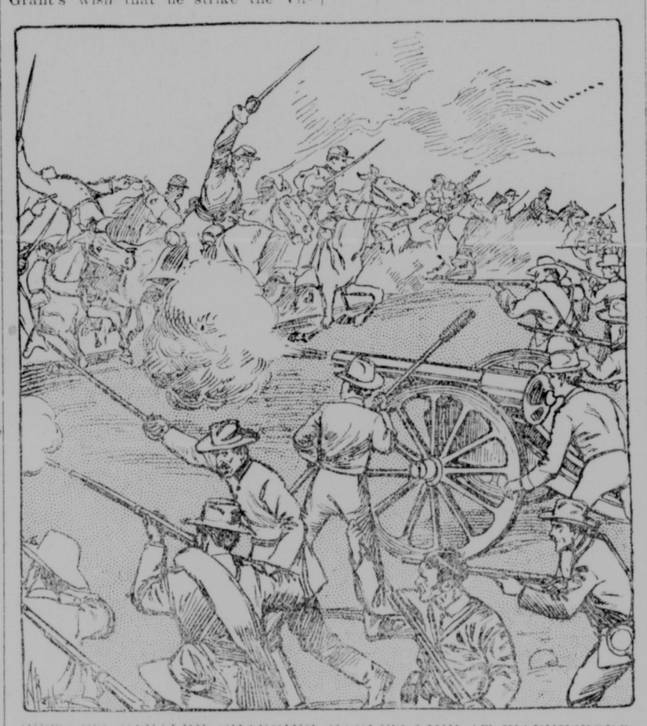
The 27th of February Sheridan again started up the valley from Winchester under orders from Grant to destroy the Virginia Central railroad and the James river canal, then capture Lynchburg and make his way across the enemy's country to Sherman in North Carolina or return to Winchester. On striking Staunton, where General Early had passed the winter, Sheridan found it abandoned by the Confederate troops, who had taken post at Waynesboro, about fifteen miles east of Staunton and near Rockfish gap, in the Blue Ridge.

At the beginning of the year General Early had a consultation with General Lee at Richmond, and it was decided to keep up the appearance of a large force in the valley by a skillful manipulation of the small command remaining out of the force which had met Sheridan at Cedar creek. The great drought of 1864, supplemented by the torch applied by Sheridan, left no forage for the cavalry and artillery horses, and they had to be sent elsewhere for the winter. Early retained Wharton's division of infantry and Nelson's battalion of artillery. The partisan rangers under the noted McNeil and Woodson scattered over the country to subsist themselves. Major Harry Gilmor's raiding band was sent to the line of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad for a field of exploit, but Gilmor was surprised and captured before he had time to repeat his daring raids of the previous year.

Toward the close of February one of Gilmor's bands, led by young Jesse McNeil, son of the captain of McNeil's rangers, made a swoop across the Potomac to Cumberland, Md., and carried off General George Crook and General Kelly as prisoners of war. At the beginning of winter Early had sent the cavalry division of Fitz Lee back to the army defending Petersburg. General Rosser's division was disbanded temporarily, the troopers going home with their mounts to subsist themselves. The cavalry division of General Lomax was retained in the field and distributed through the mountain counties west of Staunton.

General Early received due warning of Sheridan's move toward Staunton and promptly summoned Lomax and Rosser with their troopers to rally at Staunton. For the protection of Lynchburg Early ordered the infantry brigade of General Echols to come up from southwestern Virginia and prepare to resist Sheridan at that point. There were no troops in Staunton except a local provost guard and a company of boys under eighteen years of age.

Rosser drummed up a hundred of his troopers and attempted to hold up Sheridan a few miles below Staunton, but he was swept aside, and on March 1 the enemy was at the gates of the town. General Early set out for Waynesboro, picking up Wharton's two brigades of infantry and Nelson's artillery on the way and taking post on a ridge facing west just outside of the town. The general said that his object in taking position at Waynesboro was to cover the removal from that place of five pieces of artillery which had no teams and some stores still in



CUSTER'S CAVALRY CHARGING EARLY'S LINE AT WAYNESBORO.

Waynesboro and to show a bold front to Sheridan until he could ascertain the object of the Federal movement. He had but 1,000 muskets in line and six guns and did not intend to make his last stand at that time. By holding the enemy in check until night he hoped to get his troops behind Rockfish gap and compel Sheridan to fight for the route to Gordonsville.

Sheridan sent General Custer with three brigades to attack the ridge held by Early, and the Confederate leader rode to the front just in time to see Custer's leading detachment hurled back on the road to Staunton by the fire of Nelson's guns. Custer maneuvered for some hours out of the range of the Confederate artillery, and late in the afternoon one brigade passed around to Early's left, where Wharton's infantry was guarding the line. A message from Early to Wharton to be alert did not reach that officer, and his troops gave back in disorder under Custer's attack. Unfortunately for Early, Custer's advancing line could not be seen by the artillery, and little opposition could be offered to the bold Federal advance.

Custer's flank detachment having distracted the enemy at the front, he sent a brigade on a charge up the ridge. This charge was headed by the Eighth New York and the First Connecticut cavalry, these two regiments sweeping through all opposition and breaking Early's last line of defense in the warfare of the Shenandoah valley. Custer's prizes were all of Early's wagons and subsistence, tents, guns and battleflags and 1,600 prisoners, including sick and wounded noncombatants.

When Early saw Wharton's infantry giving way he rode to the bridge over South river leading to Rockfish gap, hoping to rally his men and check Federal pursuit at that point. But the men could not be rallied, and Custer's troopers forded the stream and got in the rear of the Confederates. Early in person, with his staff, started for the woods and narrowly escaped capture, but succeeded in getting through to Gordonsville, where Wharton joined him. Part of his late command repaired to Petersburg and part rallied at Lynchburg, where Early later took command. Sheridan destroyed the canal and railroad, as directed by Grant, but did not attempt to capture Lynchburg nor to ride through to Sherman's army in North Carolina.

A MOMENTOUS EVENT.

The destruction by the Japanese of the Russian fleet, and practically the Russian naval power, may be said, without any exaggeration due to the near glamour of the victory in the Corean Strait, to be one of the most momentous events not merely in naval history, but also in the history of the world.

Here is a nation which was opened to the civilized world only fifty years ago, has been organized after the plan of Western civilization for less than twenty-five years, only within ten years has had a navy of any considerable rank, that has by one blow put itself in the very foremost of the naval Powers of the world, after having previously demonstrated its superiority on land to the nominally greatest military Power of the world.

This naval engagement in the Corean Strait therefore marks a radical change in the distribution of the military strength and the military possibilities of the world. The complete victory of Japan in the war with Russia which it foreshadows will put Japan far up toward the head of the military Powers; and before this century ends it will hold the first place beyond peradventure, if its development shall continue in anything like the ratio of the progress which it has made since its victory over China ten years ago.

The engagement in the Corean Strait afforded the first full test of the new engines of naval war which has been made since their introduction, certainly since the type of modern battleship has been brought to its present development. Our American destruction of the Spanish fleets at Manila and Santiago could not be called such a test, though our experience there foreshadowed the results in the Japanese waters. That is, both the Spanish and Russian ships were destroyed without significant damage to the opposing fleets. The theory that when modern ships of war actually met squarely in battle each side would be likely to destroy the other, has been disposed of effectually. The victory won by the Japanese is not only one of the most complete in the history of naval war, but it was also won without loss to the victor.

It is demonstrated that Japan is the military superior of Russia on both sea and land. Japan has won the war. Is there another European Power which would have done better than Russia, unless Great Britain, with its vast naval preponderance? When Japan has gone ahead in its development under the impetus of present victory, may not the time come, and in no distant period, when even Great Britain will be distanced? How about ourselves? The naval battle of Saturday and Sunday may change the whole course of civilization during the twentieth century.

The Railroad Business For the Young Man

By PAUL MORTON, Secretary of the Navy

IT seems to me there is a better opportunity NOW for a young man in the railroad business than there has been heretofore. I have known during the last few years of many vacancies where good men were sought at salaries ranging from $10,000 to $40,000 a year. Competition at the top is less than it is at the bottom. IT IS THE FIRST YEARS THAT COUNT, although there can be no suspension of energy and purpose in these days of fierce competition by any man, no matter how high he gets.

In the railroad or in any other business the special talents necessary for worthy achievement are integrity and common sense—I am a great believer in common sense; integrity, of course, is a fundamental virtue—and, second, concentration and industry. In order to succeed at anything ONE MUST REALLY LIKE HIS WORK. A man who serves an enterprise or institution simply that he may earn his livelihood or who works by the clock, waiting for the bell to ring or the whistle to blow AND HAS NOT AN INTENSE INTEREST IN THE TASK HE IS DOING, will not succeed.

It is sometimes necessary for a boy to have "influence" that he may get started, but after he is once fairly started unless he shows unmistakable aptitude for his work and an interest in all that he does and unless he also displays more than ordinary common sense NO AMOUNT OF INFLUENCE WILL DO HIM MUCH GOOD. Merit counts for more than anything else.

In my opinion, then, the railroad business offers a great field to those young men who desire earnestly to attain to prosperity and position. The older men are retiring, and YOUNGER MEN MUST TAKE THEIR PLACES. Personally I am of the opinion that a young man starting in the railroad business should begin on as small a road as he can find. By doing this he will have an opportunity of learning the different branches of the service. Most of the successful railroad presidents of the present day began in that way. Unfortunately, however, the smaller railroads are becoming scarce, through combinations, and unfortunately also a man who starts on a large system is almost sure to become a specialist and to learn only one particular branch of the work.

I want to go a little outside of the subject to say that the railroads of this country are not appreciated. Nowhere else in the world, at no time in the history of the world, has there ever been such a triumph in transportation by land as in America. RATES HERE ARE LOWER THAN THEY ARE IN ANY COUNTRY ON THE GLOBE. Consider this and then bear in mind that the wages paid to railroad employees in the United States are 50 per cent higher than the average paid elsewhere. Remember also that the service is second in quality to no other in the world.

THESE THINGS BEING TRUE, IT SEEMS TO ME THAT THE AMERICAN PEOPLE FAIL TO APPRECIATE WHAT THEIR RAILROADS HAVE DONE FOR THEM.

DUAL DUTIES OF JUDGES.

The recent article by Judge Stockbridge on the law's delay, which appeared in the May number of the Green Bag, has aroused much interest, especially his comments on the dual function of the judges of our Court of Appeals. Maryland is one of the few prominent states in which the judges of the highest appellate court also perform circuit duty—that is to say, preside at trials in courts of first instance. The system has its champions, as well as its critics. Our Court of Appeals is composed of the seven president judges of the county circuits, and an eighth member elected from Baltimore city, who has no circuit duties to perform, but devotes himself entirely to appellate work.

There is probably no state in the Union where appeals are more promptly decided after they have been heard than in Maryland. The delay caused by the long interval between the spring and fall terms is applicable to many of the higher courts. A shortening of that interval might well result from the elimination of circuit duty—the change advocated by Judge Stockbridge. With an independent court, devoting its entire time to appeal cases, it would, indeed, be possible to have practically continuous sessions; or, at all events, terms at more frequent intervals, thus allowing causes to be heard within a short time after they reach the court than can be the case where the terms are "few and far between."

Chief Judge McSherry is on record in favor of the existing system. In his addresses before the State Bar association, a year ago, he asserted that the withdrawal of the judge from contact with practice in the trial court was the chief defect in an independent system. This, he thought had a tendency to make judges theoretical and to make their decision "apt to deal with abstract principles rather than with the practical application of them." If this be a consideration of weight in determining the relative merits of the two systems, it has not had much influence in shaping the construction of the courts of other jurisdictions. Members of the Supreme Court of the United States have, theoretically, certain circuit duty to perform, but in practice this is complied with by a brief visit to the lower courts every two years. In all the larger and richer states the people are content to let their higher courts deal with abstract principles, and to trust them in the practical application of those principles. Since 1867 the Baltimore members of the Court of Appeals have been under what Judge McSherry deems a disadvantage by being free from circuit duty, and yet their work on the bench does not compare unfavorably with that of the other judges, nor give evidence of too much theory.

One peculiarity about our Court of Appeals, to which neither Judge McSherry nor Judge Stockbridge allude, is that under the circuit system the state at large has no voice in determining the composition of the court. Very few states preserve this scheme of representation according to locality. The nearly universal rule is to select the members of the highest court either by appointment—as in Massachusetts—or by election from the state at large. This grows out of the fact that the jurisdiction of the court embraces the entire state. Under such a system of selection the people of this state would never have been on the anxious bench over the re-election of a faithful judge, as they were in 1903, when Judge McSherry's continued tenure in the place he has filled with such preeminent ability hung on the say-so of the two counties composing the Sixth Circuit.

Edmund Albright.

Edmund Albright was born near Cranesville, W. Va., Dec. 16, 1849, the son of Michael and Margaret Albright. He left his father's farm at eighteen years of age, when he entered the Civil War in Co. K, 3d Maryland. Here he spent sixteen months of hard service, but so full of pleasant memories thar he never grew tired of talking of those experiences.

As soon as the war closed he returned home and fitted himself to teach in the public schools. After teaching in the winter and working for his father in the summer for five years he was married to Nancy Jane Albright, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Albright, and settled on the Sammie Crane farm in sight of Cranesville. With determined and tireless efforts he made his work go. During seeding and harvest time the neighbors would ask him when he took his rest: "You are in the field as long as we can see at night and right there in the morning when we first look out."

After four years he purchased the McNear farm and there spent the most of his married life.

His children are Mrs. Wm. Bishop of Terra Alta, Margaret Letitia, now Mrs. F. W. Bishop, of Anthony, Fla.; Georgia Anne, now Mrs. E. B. Hauger, of Terra Alta; Victor Emanuel and Fanny Grace. The family has grown up together linked by the closest ties and the father is the first one to leave the hearthstone.

Seven years ago feeling that the labors of the farm were too great for his declining years, he sold the old homestead to his son-in-law Mr. E. B. Hauger. He built a little summer home on one end of the farm which he had excepted with the intention of spending the winters in Terra Alta and the summers here in the country. The bonds that bound him to his happiest days, those on a farm, proved to be too strong for him to ever break. Soon he found himself building, clearing out, buying more land, and building up old fields, so that at his death he had a well cultivated, beautiful little farm. It is a strange coincidence, that by improving one field each year he should have reached the last one at the back of the farm last year, and this spring he was called away, leaving a waving meadow, side by side with others. Was his work on the farm not done?

For years he had been broken in health, but worked steadily on, finding his greatest pleasure in hard work. One evening early in last December while feeding his cattle, he suddenly became dizzy and short of breath. He retired that night as usual but found that he could not get his breath in that position and was compelled to sit up all night. The next night he was taken with a violent cough and from that time until his death he suffered continually. He was scarcely able to lie down at all during that time, but sat in his chair weak in body and racked with pain for five long winter months.

Early in his sickness it was thought that he could not live but a few days and his children were sent for and a few business matters arranged. He soon made a change for the better, and from that time on he had sinking spells and again days when it seemed that he might recover.

Two years ago in a protracted meeting at Cranesvile he was greatly moved but not fully converted. Since that time he had never failed to kneel by his bed at night and commune with his God. Still he felt that he was not saved. On the night of Jan 2, 1905, with Rev. Weigle and his family around him he was born anew unto the kingdom of heaven. He bore his suffering without a word of complaint, always praying "Thy will be done," and frequently saying "It is the Lord's will; it is for my good and the good of my family."

Sunday afternoon he had a hard chill and inflamation began to set in in his left lung. When news came that the doctors would be there as soon as possible, his youngest daughter went to him and said, "Papa, the doctors will soon be here," looking up with that pale face distorted with pain, he said, "I wish Jesus would come first and take me."

Morphine was administered, but before the opiate acted he talked with a clear mind, bade his family goodbye, and then leaned back in his chair to go to sleep. His heart-broken wife crying by his side seemed to waken him shortly after he had gone to sleep he opened his eyes and looking at her said, "Ma, don't worry, all will be right." These were his last words. Tuesday morning, May 16, shortly after daybreak the Lord answered his prayer and released him and took him home. Just before he died a smile, visible to all in the room, played over his face three consecutive times. Surely he must have seen the angels gathering on that shining shore to welcome him home.

The funeral was preached in the Methodist church at Cranesville, Wednesday at ten a. m. by Rev. Thomas, and his body was laid to rest that afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Terra Alta cemetery. A great crowd gathered at the church to pay their last tribute of respect to a much loved and honored man of the community.

Soldier rest for thy labors are ended,
Weary with marching and toiling on;
The din of the musket and peal of the cannon
Will be heard by thee no more.
Wake with the angels on that shining shore,
When music and gladness reigns ever more;
And hear from the Father "Well done faithful servant
Enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

"OLD AND TRIED AND STRONG."

MUST SUPPLY CARS.

Decision of the U. S. Supreme Court Very Sweeping in its Character.

The decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the Kingwood Coal company, of West Virginia, against the W. Va. N. R. R. Co., is very sweeping in its character and shows that a railroad company must not discriminate against any small shipper, but that they must distribute cars upon a fair basis.

The case of the Kingwood Coal company, which is a West Virginia concern located on a branch of the W. Va. N. R. R., has been pending for about two years. The Company complained that it could not secure enough cars from the railroad company to ship its coal, and charged that it was being discriminated against. This, it said, prevented it from marketing its products satisfactorily, while on the other hand, several of the larger companies, in which some of the railroad's stockholders were interested, received an ample supply of cars. When the case came up in the United States Circuit Court, Judge Goff held that cars must be distributed among the companies without discrimination in proportion to their output, and ordered the railroad to supply 31 per cent. of the cars it had on hand to the Kingwood company, that being its share of the production of the region, whereas only 18 per cent. had been sent there previously. The railroad company appealed from this decision, and took the case to the Supreme Court, but it was decided against the railroad company.

Mr. Earl Martin, of the First National Bank, spent last week at his home in Kingwood, having been called there by the serious illness and subsequent death and burial of his uncle, Mr. Charles E. Vickery, formerly of Terra Alta.

Miss Osa Fisher, who visited Miss Bessie Littman several days last week departed for her home at Kiowa, Kansas, last Thursday morning. Miss Fisher is the daughter of Rev. Fisher recently of Mountian Lake Park. She is remembered as one of Garrett county's most progressive public school teachers.

Mr. B. W. Harvey, of near Deer Park, was here Monday when he contracted with this paper for printing in its columns an advertisement of the Paroid Roofing, for which Mr. Harvey is agent and salesman for this county. The roofing is acknowledged to be one of the best products and is extensively used where known. To get it before the people has employed the best agency—the columns of THE REPUBLICAN.

William H. Wellley, a well-known resident of Somerset, is busy preparing a history of Somerset county, that will be issued in the near future. The author will take up the early history of the county and will have the book illustrated with half tone cuts of some of the old forts that Gen. Forbes and his men erected in the north of the county when they marched through here to Ft. Duquesne. There is a great deal of unwritten history relative to this county, and the author proposes to bring this all out.—Meyersdale Republican.

The Resurrection

The record is charmingly natural when it describes the errand of the women to the sepulcher. They run with additional spices to complete the embalmment, desisted from because of the approach of the Sabbath. They start precipitately, forgetting to take some one with them strong enough to roll away the stone for them. They well reflect in their action the mental state of all the disciples. It is improbable that they had forgotten the saying of Jesus about rising the third day; but it is evident they did not attach a literal signification to His words. Their ingenousness is incontestable. The resurrection was as complete a surprise to them as to their enemies. The very spices in their hands were evidence of their honesty. Their sorrowing suspicion of a theft of the body proved them no party to such a robbery.

That garden near to Calvary witnessed the most remarkable guard-relieving of history. Four Roman soldiers, inured to all common causes of alarm, quaked like old earth herself, and swooned away, and with returning consciousness probably fled into the city, leaving their spears and shields upon the ground. Angels mounted guard in their stead. One of them possibly outshone His fellows. The snowy luster of His raiment matched well His immaculate nature. The glory of His appearance was like an electric coruscation.

Among the holy women conspicuous at the cross and the grave, Mary Magdalene stands easily first. By some pitiful blunder, she has been confused, in art and Christian literature, with "the woman who was a sinner," so that her very name is used to describe a class of social outcasts. There is absolutely no evidence for this. About all we know of her is that she was from Magdala, on the western coast of the Sea of Galilee. It has been said that there is reason to suppose that Mary Magdalene was in less humble circumstances than most of our Lord's disciples. He had set her free from some terrible mental or physical malady, and she gave him the holy love of a warm and generous nature.

She with greater fervor perhaps than the others, started earlier (while it was yet dark) on the errand to the tomb. What was in her heart was richer than what was in her hand.

The description of Mary's recognition of Jesus is one of the most unique and skillful things in literature. Much in little! "Jesus saith unto her, Mary!" She turned herself, and saith unto Him, "My Master."

An entirely unnecessary mystical meaning has been attached to Jesus' words, "Touch Me not!" Paraphrased, they might be read: "Don't cling to me now; there will be opportunity for you to express your affection in the future, for I have not yet left the world. Hurry to My brethren, and tell."

The fiual scene of the first Easter Sunday is an interior one. It is perhaps in that very upper room in which Jesus ate the Last Supper with His disciples. The shepherdless sheep are cowering behind closed doors. They are afraid of eavesdroppers or even a violent assault of their enemies "Peace!" What a word to be spoken to such a company at such a time and by such Person! The "breathing" of Jesus upon His disciples was a symbolical act. It is as if He was instituting a new sacrament, for He says to them just as He did when be handed them the bread and the cup, "Take the Holy Spirit."

The Teacher's Lantern.

These women were in the way of loving service. That is how they came to be the first witnesses of the resurrection. Loyal doing leads to royal knowing. "If any will do, he shall know."

* * * * *

The stone was rolled away to exhibit the emptiness of the tomb. It was not rolled away for Jesus, but for His disciples; not that He might come forth, but that they might enter and see that He was gone.

* * * * *

The Crusades were a fight for a will-o'-the-wisp. The holy sepulcher, so called, is in the heart of the city, and it is now conceded, can not have been the place of entombment. The true site is lost. It is well. We Worship not the place, but the Person.

* * * * *

The Oriental manner of burial is interesting: the winding-sheet and napkin; embalmment; rock-hewn chamber: loculi, like steamship berths, in which bodies were laid. Stone for door, sometime shaped like a millstone and set in a groove, so as to be rolled and held in position by a smaller stone like a chuck under a wheel.

It was just such a place that Jesus forsook on that first Easter morning. He first took precaution to fold the long linen strip with which his body had been swathed, and laid it on the spot where His feet had rested; then He did the same with the smaller strip, called a napkin in our translation. Thus He left an ocular proof that His body had not been removed in haste or by thieves.

* * * * *

The love, faith, fidelity of womanhood is transfigured in the resurrection scene.

* * * * *

Mary mourned what was really her greatest gain. Suppose she had found the body still in the tomb. It would have been the most disastrous "find" of history. What Mary ignorantly deprecated was really the infinite gain of humanity. The very emptiness of Jesus' tomb is its chief glory.

* * * * *

The open tomb was converted into a bureau of information for the troubled disciples. White-liveried attendants were there to point them to the place where the Lord lay and to the grave clothes laid in such orderly fashion as to preclude the idea of a hasty and clandestine removal and to announce the blessed truth, "He is risen!"

* * * * *

A special authority to "remit and retain" was not given to the apostles in the language, "Whosesoever sins ye forgive," etc. It is as if Jesus had said. "You are going out to preach the terms of forgiveness: viz., repentance and faith. If men meet the conditions they will be forgiven. If they do not, their sins will stand against them." Any other interpretation would give a mechanical and arbitrary power of a privileged class over their fellows.

Mosaic from Commentaries.

Mary stood: Revised Version, was standing, on her return to the tomb after telling Peter and John that Jesus was not in the tomb. Such offices (as embalmment) were performed by those who were not closely related to the deceased, so that the absence of our Lord's mother is not wonderful. — Bengel. She stooped and looked: Because she was anxious to see whether she might not, after all, be mistaken about the absence of the body. She stooped because the top of the entrance was so low that she could not otherwise get a near view of the inside of the tomb.—Clark. Even in the midst of her grief she is moved by a natural desire to see if there is any trace of her Lord's body in the tomb. Seeth two angels: To be regarded as a distinct vision to Mary, which, from the fullness with which it is recorded, she probably herself related to the evangelist. She turned: It may be that the angels, looking toward the Lord, showed some sign of His coming.—Westcott. Why weepest thou? This the first words of the risen Lord to a mortal is an inexhaustable text for the resurrection. He has risen again to comfort those who mourn.—Stier. Whom seekest thou? Christ takes the cognizance of his people's cares.—Henry. Borne Him hence: Her answer shows that she thought it possible that it had been found inconvenient to have the body of Jesus in that tomb and that it had been removed to some other place or sepulcher. Take Him away: In order to inter Him elsewhere. Her overflowing love, in the midst of her grief, does not weigh her strength. Jesus saith unto her, Mary: With one word, and that one word her name, the Lord awakens all the consciousness of His presence; calling her in that tone, doubtless, in which her soul had been so often summoned to receive Divine knowledge and precious comfort. — Alford. Unto Him: ["In Hebrew"]. Rabboni: The insertion in Hebrew is of importance as indicating the language spoken between Christ and His disciples. Peace be unto you: Ordinary words of more than ordinary significance. Breathed on them: The Lord in His majesty does not bestow a kiss. His sacred breath is more than that would have been.—Stier. Like the breath of a friend on the cheek, so graciously and confidentially should the Spirit of God come upon the spirit of man. —Braune.

PROPHET HICKS' ADVICE FOR JUNE

Month of Storms and One Should Avoid a Tree as a Place of Shelter.

Rev. Irl R. Hicks, the St. Louis weather expert, makes predictions for June.

First Storm Period is central on the 3rd, 4th and 5th.

On and touching the third look for change to warmer, rain and thunder storms, beginning in the west, and passing eastward across the country on the 3rd, 4th and 5th. Rising barometer and cooler weather will follow the storms yet tend to prolong cloudy and threatening.

The Second Period covers the 8th to 10th. From the 10th to the 15th of June is an annual period of electric perturbation, caused by the approximate turning of the Earth's north pole to the plane of the Sun's equator.

Ordinarily and normally we should look for heavy thunder storms, say on the 9th, 10th and 11th. We predict that many electrical storms and heavy rainfalls will appear at this time, but that they will cover comparatively narrow localities, leaving wide areas of the country to obtain only moderate results.

It is proper to say that the prevailing weather conditions during this period, will indicate the character of storms and weather that may be expected until after the middle of July.

The Third Period is central on the 14th to 17th. The electrical strain of Earth's summer solstice will be felt in frequent and general displays of lightning, all through this part of June.

A crisis of such phenomena will fall 17th. Black, ominous clouds, drenching down pours of rain and violent thunder and wind will visit many places at this time. Reaction to cooler, clearing weather will follow.

The Fourth Period is central on the 21st, the same date being the central day of Earth's summer solstice period.

We will put this period down as a crisis of electrical summer storms. If the barometer falls to very low—a thing to be apprehended at this time—violent, tornadic storms are quite probable in central and western states. It shonld be known to all that the greater part of the vivid and general lightning, at such times in June, is absolutely harmless, and indicates no approaching danger, except in cases where the barometer is very low, and a compact, well-defined storm-cloud is moving up from western and southern directions. On and about June 24th will culminate a series of characteristic June thunder storms. Change to rising barometer and cooler will follow.

The Fifth Storm — Reactionary, is on the 26th, 27th and 28th. The June solstice and the Mars period nearing its center, will be the chief disturber at this time.

There will be thunder and rain storms on and touching the 26th, 27th and 28th, but wide districts of comparative, if not severe dryness will lie in many parts of the country, notably in northern, southern and western extremes.

Often as we have given this bit of admontion, we repeat it again, do not take shelter under trees in thunder storm, especially in June. The danger from lightning is much greater, and many lives are thus destroyed every year during this month.

Letter to Jacob Stump.

Dear Sir: The usual way to buy paint is to take the lowest price by the gallon. Mistake; the buyer loses by it; how much? Depends on the paint; it is so much a gallon, or so much a year. How much a gallon or year, do you think? As much perhaps, as the total price of the paint. It may take twice the number of gallons.

N. Avery, Delhi, N. Y, owns two houses, both exactly alike. He painted one with Devoe and one with another paint, Devoe 6 gallons; the other 12.

Go by the name: Devoe. There's nothing cheaper. Go by the price; there's nothing dearer, except not painting at all. Poor paint is better than none.

What does it cost not to paint at all? Can't figure it out exactly; say a tenth of the building a year, besides looks.

What is poor paint worth, then? Dont know and don't care; you don't want it. Go by the name.

Yours truly

THE SHERIFF'S POSSE

By FRANK H. SWEET

Copyright, 1904, by Frank H. Sweet

Sels Pessner moved haltingly along the face of the cliff, crouching almost to the rock to obtain the slight concealment afforded by a few stunted bushes, until he arrived at a sharp bend, where he rose cautiously to his feet and gave a quick glance down into the valley and back over the way he had come.

It was a wild, rocky way, ending in this long climb up the face of the mountain, but his glance flashed over it in a swift, comprehensive scrutiny. All was desolation, solitude, save at the base of the very slope up which he was struggling, where a compact group of men were following his trail as surely and unrelentingly as bloodhounds. Even as his glance flashed down at them there came the returning flash of sunlight on a leveled rifle barrel into his eyes, and he ducked and slipped around the bend. As he did so a bullet flattened against the rock behind where his head had been.

"Steve Finter," he thought grimly. "No other man can shoot like that. He must have seen my head up. If only I can get up to my cabin I won't mind. I can pick off Steve from there, and maybe some of the others before they close in. I—I hope Luisita ain't to home."

Well up on the face of the opposite mountain was Sels Pessner's cabin. Here he and Steve Finter had worked together in seeming harmony until one day Steve had slipped down to the mining town below and accused his partner of having robbed and attempted to murder him and of being a horse thief and contemplating other bold robberies in the neighborhood. He had so ingratiated himself with the sheriff as to be sworn in as a deputy to aid in the capture.

The first intimation Sels had had of the accusation was seeing the sheriff's posse approach the cabin, and almost at the same time he received a bullet in his shoulder. Other bullets had followed, but in some way he had escaped. He had eluded his pursuers and hurried to the mining town, slipping in at night and conferring with some of his friends. The next day these men had done a little quiet investigating for him while he remained in one of their homes. That night, in spite of their warnings and expostulations, he had started back, his face stern and his eyes full of angry determination. But when he saw the posse and threw up his hands in token of surrender, with a paper held conspicuously in one hand, a bullet from Steve's rifle found lodgment in his ankle, almost bringing him to the ground.

After that he skulked and dodged and climbed for hours, using a piece of broken limb in place of the ankle that was almost useless, suffering agony at every step and with only the hope of reaching his cabin and making the last stand as retaliatory as possible.

Now as he crossed into the small valley he tried to keep within the screen of foliage as much as he could. Luisita lived in the cabin nearest with her Mexican father. She must know and grieve, of course, but he would spare her as long as possible.

However, as he was pushing his way through the undergrowth nearly opposite the cabin he came upon her suddenly, carrying her rifle. At sight of him her face flushed, then paled.

"Senor Sels!" she cried. "Oh, why are you here? They are down in the valley. I saw them not an hour ago from the cliff. They will kill you. Hurry! Hurry! You should not have tried to see me now."

"I did not," striving to keep his voice steady. "I tried to avoid you, Luisita. I wanted to spare you all I could. But this is the only way to my cabin, and"—

"You are hurt," sharply.

"Just a trifle. But listen, Luisita. Whatever the charges against me, I know that you believe me innocent. But yesterday I was in the town and obtained proof positive of Steve's guilt—enough to hang him. Only I cannot get word with the sheriff. I have given up thought of it now. They are hot on my trail and will be here in twenty minutes. All I can do is to try to reach my cabin."

"That will not save you," she expostulated.

"No," grimly, "I know it will not. But it will help me to even up the score a little."

The girl threw out her hands impetuously.

"It shall not be that way!" she cried, her eyes flashing. "You shall be saved and Senor Steve punished. And yet I do not understand. Why should he"—

"For plenty of reasons, Luisita. You promised to marry me after refusing him, and then, only two hours before he left, we found a vein of silver, how rich I do not dare to say, but it made Steve try to kill me and, failing, to run away. He came back with the sheriff and his posse. What story he told I can only guess. But where are you going, Luisita?"

"To the bend round the cliff"—over her shoulder. "It is the only way into the valley, and I shall hold the men until you can get away. Do not go to your cabin, but straight on over the mountain. Hurry! The men will not harm me. When you get to the wilder ravines, hide. I will see that the truth is known."

With a shout of remonstrance he hobbled in pursuit, but Luisita did not even hear. She was already rods away, plunging through the bushes with the one thought of being at the bend in advance of the sheriff's posse.

They were edging cautiously across a narrow shelf only a few rods below when she reached the desired point and threw her rifle in position. It was too good a chance to be lost.

"Hands up!" she ordered sternly.

Ten pairs of eyes flashed at her in consternation as the same number of hands rose into the air, but as they saw the face beyond the rifle barrel the hands went down with simultaneous relief. They had thought it Sels. Some of the men began to laugh.

"I said 'Hands up!'" Luisita repeated slowly. "I am not making words, and most of you know how I can shoot. Senor Sels is escaping from you now, and I shall keep you here until he is safe. "Stop," as a rifle barrel rose a little, "or I shall fire! You may kill me, but I can send half of you from that ledge before you do it, and I will. Now, up! Quick!"

All the hands rose except Steve's. With a bitter curse he threw his rifle into quick position, but before he could fire it slipped from his nerveless fingers, and he sank upon the shelf, only saving himself from falling over the precipice by a desperate effort.

"That is only one," called the girl coldly.

"But look here, Luisita," expostulated the sheriff angrily. "You can't thwart the law like this!"

"You are not upholding the law," contemptuously. "You are merely helping a criminal. If Senor Sels were here"—

"He is here," said a quiet voice at her side, and another rifle barrel joined hers in menacing the whitening faces on the ledge below. "Now, sheriff," the voice suddenly ringing out clear and stern, "you will take your men and hurry back to town. And I would advise you to take Steve Finter along. The truth is known there now, as you will find, and it may be that you and your men will have to explain a few things. Hereafter, when you seek a man, hear his story as well as his accuser's. I have proof of my innocence and Steve's guilt. You and your men will turn and retrace your steps, taking Steve along. You will find proof of everything I say in town. Now go!"

They stood side by side watching the posse down the mountain. Then Sels lowered his rifle.

"I—I think you'll have to help me to the cabin, dear," he said weakly. "I'm a—a little used up."

Any Name Satisfied Him.

The average office boy who enters the employ of a daily newspaper is promptly christened with a name. The name is usually the first one that pops into the head of the first man who sees him.

A short time ago a scarlet haired youngster went to work in a local newspaper office. "Brick" was the first nickname that the little fellow received. Another employee of the paper thought just plain "Red" would be better. "Rusty" came into use later and then "Scarlet." A new man on the force thought "Vermilion" would be a good name, but this fell into disuse on account of its length. "Pinkey" came into use later, and then the discovery was made that the youth carried a middle name, which was Michael. "Mike" and "Mickey" then came into use, as did "Speck," in deference to the boy's freckles. Finally the horse editor thought "Sorrel" a proper name for the boy, and later he was dubbed "Sandy." He now answers any name that has either a cardinal or a freckled turn to it and appears satisfied with any of them.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Quaint Riddles.

These curious riddles, which all have one answer and are familiar to the people of various parts of France, are quoted in the Revue des Traditions Populaires:

What goes from Paris to Lyons without moving or taking a step?

What goes to Paris without once pausing?

I am very long. If I repose up straight I could touch the sky. If I had arms and legs I could catch the thief. If I had eyes and mouth I could tell everything.

White, very white, it encircles the earth.

If I were not crooked I could not exist.

The queen's carpet, always spread, never folded.

What looks very long in the sunshine and has no shadow?

What arrives first at the market and first reaches home?

GLIB MR. JACKSON

By Donald Murray

Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure

A week after I had advertised my house for sale I had a prospective customer in the person of Mr. R. A. Jackson.

Mr. Jackson's business card conveyed the information that he was in the life insurance business, and he gave me to understand that he intended to establish a branch agency at Glenville. He was a man of middle age, had a prosperous look and was a very glib talker. I realized that the glibness was a part of his business, and as to his general appearance I was prepossessed in his favor. I named my price, and he thought it reasonable. He paid me $100 in cash to hold the offer for a week.

I had paid great attention to details in building the house. I had the best of burglar alarms, something new in the way of window fasteners, and the place was connected with a police station and a fire engine house. I needed to be secure. I had a collection of coins and stamps worth $15,000, and any burglar who once got in could have taken the whole away in a common gripsack. The newspapers were always speaking of the collection, and I realized that sooner or later some enterprising man would seek to lay hands on it without the formality of a sale.

Mr. Jackson had told me that he was going to Chicago the day after he inspected the house, but he didn't go. He came back to measure some of the rooms and take a closer look, so that he might satisfy his wife's curiosity when he did go. He paid particular attention to the electric wiring on this occasion, and his words of praise made me feel rather proud.

My battery room, as I called it, was a closet between the dining room and the library, and in here led the telephone wires from the roof. The batteries for the burglar alarm and the various bells about the house rested on shelves in the closet, and I thus had the whole system under my thumb. There was an outside window to this closet, and I showed Mr. Jackson that my alarm was so attuned that he had only to touch a hand to the sash to set the bells jingling.

After a thorough inspection we emerged, and when there had been some further investigations he left the house. This was in the forenoon. There was no need of my entering the closet more than once a month unless something got out of order, but while I was eating dinner at 6 o'clock a feeling of uneasiness came over me, and I rose suddenly and proceeded to the room. Everything appeared all right at first glance; but, looking more closely, I soon discovered that Mr. Jackson had plied his nippers while I was talking. He had cut the alarm wire for that window. That I should discover something wrong and trace it out when I went to set the alarm at 10 o'clock he very well knew. He must have figured, then, on entering the window at an earlier hour.

My collection of coins and stamps was in a room by itself next to this closet, and the door was never locked till bedtime. With the family all in the sitting room the treasure room was almost unguarded. The window by which Mr. Jackson would enter looked out upon a side yard. He could skulk along by the shrubbery and escape being seen. It was a high window, and I therefore carried an empty barrel around for his convenience. Then the cook was ordered to hurry up her work of clearing away, and before 8 o'clock the family occupied the living room, and there was piano playing and singing.

Of course I did not mean that Mr. Jackson should go out as he came in, and I also wanted to capture him without the aid of the police. I therefore procured a bear trap at a hardware store, and this was set under the window in the battery room. He couldn't enter without stepping into it, and the great jaws were certain to give him the warmest kind of greeting.

There was no tedious delay to keep my nerves on edge. It was a dark, rainy night, but at a quarter to 9 Mr. Jackson showed up. I had stretched a string for him to hit with his foot, and when I got the signal we redoubled our noise in the sitting room.

I gave the man fifteen minutes more to break his way in and then proceeded to the treasure room and opened wide the door. Mr. Jackson was all there, and that bear trap had him fast by the leg. I had only got a glimpse of him when he whipped out a gun and sent a bullet so close to my ear that it sizzed, and naturally I lost no time getting out of range. He then fired several bullets into the door, but it was of oak, and they did not come through.

I had captured him, but at the same time he had captured the house. He seemed to have a full box of cartridges with him, and in shooting around promiscuously in the darkness he smashed all the batteries, destroyed all the switches and left the house in darkness. Then I had to get the police, but none of the four who came cared to face his bullets. They talked to him through the open door and the closed window, but he was an obstinate man. He wouldn't come out, and he swore no one should come in. The police and the shooting drew a crowd, and for two hours people were trampling my lawn and uprooting flowers and shrubbery. I would have overlooked Mr. Jackson's lapse from morality had he been reasonable, but he positively refused to argue the case. As a last resort the police sent for a fire engine and led a line of hose from the nearest hydrant. The nozzle was directed into the window, and the water came, and after the liquid had found its way into every room on that floor and stood four feet deep in the cellar Mr. Jackson said he had had enough to last him the rest of his life. The trap had pinched him, the cold water had chilled and half drowned him, and he had fired away his fifty cartridges.

The police took his gun and a score of skeleton keys, and after a few days he was convicted of burglary and got a sentence of seven years. I was rather sorry about it. Before leaving for prison he informed me that he broke into the house for the sole purpose of stealing a clock a hundred years old and that as for my collection he wouldn't have given me 15 cents for the whole outfit.

Johnnie's Discourse on Water.

Water is found most everywhere, especially when it rains, as it did the other day till our cellar was half full. Jane had to wear father's rubber boots to get the onions for dinner. Onions make your eyes water, and so does horseradish when you eat too much. There is a good many kinds of water in the world—rain water, soda water, well water, boiling water and brine. There is a girl in our school named Waterman.

All the boys say, "Waterman you are," and then she gets mad. I don't think girls look good when they are mad. Water is used for a good many things. Sailors use it to go to sea on. If there wasn't any ocean their ships couldn't float and they would have to stay ashore. Water is a good thing to make dams in and to swim in and to fire at boys with a squirt gun and to catch fishes in. My father caught a big one the other day, and when he hauled it up it was an eel. Nobody could be saved from drowning if there wasn't any water to pull them out of. Water is first rate to put fires out with. I love to go to fires and see the men work at the engines. This is all I can think about water—except the flood.

Joke Lost on Him.

An officer on one of the transatlantic liners told a story last week which serves as another illustration of the Englishman's inability to grasp a joke.

The officer while in London after his last outgoing trip dropped into a cheap chophouse in Soho. He took a seat near a table around which were gathered a number of cockneys. One of the number, according to the conversation, had been recently to New York, where he acted as valet. The cockney criticised the city in scathing terms and suddenly poured out a string of invective on the New York policemen. "We 'ave a bad lot 'ere," he said, "but they're not a circumstance to the mokes of bobbies they 'ave over in New York. I was sharpening a bit of a pencil one day in Fourth avenue and Twenty-third street. The blaide slipped, and I halmost bled to death. I ran up to a red faiced bobby—'ang 'is bloomin' 'ide—and asked him in a way as becomes a gentleman which was the quickest way to a 'ospital. 'E laughed loike a foolish one, and sez 'e, 'Go across Broadway by the Flatiron building three times at noon.' And Oi'm blowed yet if I don't think the moke was drunk."—New York Tribune.

Noise and the Nerves.

It was Schopenhauer who said that insensibility to noise was the surest indication of a low and undeveloped nervous organization, on which assumption it is certain that we as a nation can hardly be reckoned very far advanced. Certain it is that we are more tolerant under this head than any other nation professing to call itself civilized, though I fancy the Americans run us pretty close in this respect. Sir Arthur Sullivan was wont to compose in the middle of the night because he could never obtain quiet at any other time, and without expecting the impossible or looking for legislation on a subject which is merely of concern to the community at large, irrespective of party issues, surely it is not too much to ask that the local authorities shall put their heads together on this matter and exercise the powers which they possess. Mr. Bernard Shaw once expressed the opinion that it was the "state aided noises," as he called them, which were the worst offenders—as, for example, the church bells and the military bands.—London Truth

Notice To Tax Payers!

This is to notify the tax payers of Garrett county that the Annual Levy for 1905 has been made and published, and to call their attention to the following abstract, Section 45, Chapter 560, Acts of 1890, relating to the discount to be allowed and the interest to be charged on all tax bills:

"All county taxes shall be due and payable on the first day of September next succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and all county taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed, and after the first day of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid. The treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes regularly in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon his books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid. But the discount shall not be allowed unless the whole amount of State and county taxes are paid when same is made.

The Man Who Makes
A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

Each season for fifty years there has been some improvement in Clothcraft Clothes.

Not alone in snappy stylishness but in mechanical detail. The Clothcraft clothing of today will outwear that of ten or five years ago, even though the cloth quality be the same.

The Clothcrafters study all the while to give permanence to the shape—to strengthen the strain points so there will be no stretch or sag.

There is doubt whether the 1905 Clothcraft product can be improved. It seems as though perfection has been reached.

Clothes made by the highest priced tailors of New York and London have been dissected and every good feature reproduced. To these have been added some new features—made exclusive by United States patents.

When you wear Clothcraft you are well dressed no matter where you choose to go. There is nothing better in style—in fit—in wear.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mrs. Edward Warnick returned home last Monday afternoon after a week's visit to relatives in Baltimore.

Last Monday the Buxton mines did the biggest day's work in the history of the Company. Two hundred and eighty trips, 560 cars and 1100 tons, passed over the plane and were dumped into W. Va. hoppers. Supt. O. Tibbets gave the work his personal attention and supervision during the day and was highly gratified at the result.

Senator John Cornwell, of Romney, manager of the press department of the Congressional campaign of Col. T. B. Davis, spent Tuesday evening with relatives in this place.

Mrs. Andrew Mullen left for Cumberland on last Sunday morning to visit relatives in that city.

Mr. Floyd Kline returned on last Sunday evening from a business trip to Bittinger and Grantsville, this county. Mr. Kline has the appointment of U. S. water gnager, noting the rise and fall of water in the Savage river twice daily and reporting once a week to Washington. The apparatus is located on the Savage river bridge and is under the direction of the U. S. Geological Survey.

Misses Letta Kemp and Gertie Brendlin have been designated by the Junior Order of this place a committee to solicit donations of articles of various kinds for the Junior festival to be held in their hall at this place, June 16th, 17th and 18th.

Mr. Alonzo Warnick, oldest son of the widow Warnick, living a few miles from town, has been quite sick from an attack of pneumonia.

Mrs. N. C. Guthrie, of Baltimore, mother of Rev. Charles Guthrie, the noted pulpit orator and scholarly clergyman of that city, after spending a few days with relatives in this place, left for Terra Alta on Monday morning to visit her sister, Mrs. Nellie Jones. Rev. Guthrie has been invited to participate in the exercises at Mountain Lake Park this summer and it is quite probable that he will accept the invitation and spend the summer season at that delightful resort.

Miss Virginia Zell, a brilliant southern lady of Birmingham, Ala., is a guest of friends in this place.

Rev. Snedegar, pastor in charge of the M. E. church, is on a business trip to Harrisburg, Pa.

Decoration Day was very quietly observed in this place. The dead in the old Bloomington grave yard were not forgotten and many tokens of remembrance in beautful flowers were placed on the graves by friends and relatives.

The miners employed at the Marsteller four foot held a meeting on last Wednesday morning and refused to go to work at the reduction proposed by the company. A committee was appointed to confer with the company report the result of the conference to the miners. The company has arranged for a meeting at the mine on Wednesday evening at 4:15 o'clock. In the meantime the mine is closed awaiting the determination of the operators.

Attorneys Gilmor S. Hamill and E. H. Sincell, of Oakland, were in town on last Friday in the interest of the sale of the surface and mineral rights of the estate of the late Henry Warnick. The surface right was purchased by Charles Barnard for $700. The sale of the mineral rights was withdrawn for want of a satisfactory bid.

Mr. Walter Fike, formerly an employee of the Dodson Coal Co., of Dodson, W. Va., moved to town on last Wednesday.

Messrs. John Miller, Silas Cramer and Freeland Tibbetts, of this place, and Mr. John Rowland, of Piedmont, spent a pleasant day's outing at Shady Spring on the Knobley road near Keyser on last Sunday.

Mr. Marshall Savage, of Deer Park accompanied by his mother, spent part of last week visiting his sister, Mrs. Lewis Baldwin.

Big Jim Cross and his merry crowd of big ball players, met with their first defeat at Green's Highland Park on Decoration Day. Too much self confidence and not enough ginger and headwork put the Bangers on the shoot and the strong Midland team had it greased with lather and soap and kept our boys in the middle of the slide until the bottom was reached. The Bangers will play the Lonaconing team at Pea Vine Park next Saturday afternoon, when they expect to Togonize the Coneyites.

Mr. Henry Barnard, one of the road supervisors of this district, was taken suddenly ill last Friday while repairing the county road at Empire, and had to be carried to his home at Chestnut Grove. He has improved considerably in the last few days and is now able to walk around and supervise work on the farm.

Fish Stories.

MR. BLACK.

WHITE and I went out for trout about a week ago;
White's catch wasn't very heavy; mine was great, you know.
One I hooked—a nine-two pounder—nearly got away;
Here's a picture of the beauty, taken yesterday.
White was pretty sore, I reckon, at my streak of luck;
Said I was the luckiest fisher he had ever struck.
Guess I'll go again next week if I can spare the time;
Last week's trip was elegant—the weather was sublime.

MR. WHITE.

Black and I went out for trout about a week ago.
I was lucky from the start; Black didn't stand a show.
Sixteen speckled beauties—sixteen! Isn't that a few?
Poor old Black, he tramped all day and only landed two.
Here's a picture of a corker; two pounds flat he weighed—
Thought that I would lose him, though—a rattling fight he made.
Black and I went out for trout about a week ago.
I was lucky from the jump, Black didn't stand a show.

THE URCHIN.

Two swell guys came out for trout about a week ago.
All deir tackle it was great, and, gee, dey had de dough!
See dis paper dollar? Well, dem fellers gave me two Jes' for givin' dem some trout I caught in Mason's slough.
One of dem was mighty fresh; he called me "little brat."
Jes' de same, I got his dough, so let it go at dat.
Two swell guys came out for trout about a week ago.
All deir tackle it was great, and, gee, dey had de dough!

The Kind of Work.

"I suppose, Silas, now that you are home you will pitch in and do a lot of work?"

Wholesale.

"Say, Harker, are you going to the same resort this summer that you went to last summer?"

"No, there are too many bills. I received about ten thousand last summer."

"Ten thousand!"

"Yes; one hotel bill, three doctors' bills and the rest were mosquito bills."—Chicago News.

The Pleasure of It.

Knox—We went to see the Kokele last night and enjoyed ourselves hugely.

Cox—The idea! Why, they usually fail dismally at entertaining people.

Knox—Exactly. We enjoyed ourselves talking about them on the way home.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Hard.

Hicks—What's the matter, Grimes? You look awfully down in the mouth.

Grimes—Well, why shouldn't I? I have nothing that I can call my own. Even this plaguy catarrh I inherited from my father, and I only hold it in trust for my children.—Boston Transcript.

Cupid's Conversation.

"Cupid is blind," said the sentimental youth.

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne. "So I have heard. And the conversation of some lovesick people makes me wish that he were also deaf and dumb."—Washington Star.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 29. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1905. NUMBER 14.

COL. DAVIS DEFEATED MR. JAMES S. LAKIN

At the Special Election Held In West Virginia Tuesday for Congress

BY A MAJORITY OF ABOUT 1000.

Lack of Interest on Part of the Republicans Was the Prime Cause—An Exceedingly Light Vote Was Polled.

Mr. James S. Lakin, of Terra Alta, formerly of Oakland, who ran for Congress against Col. Thomas B. Davis, of Keyser, to fill the unexpired term of Judge Dayton, was defeated at the special election held on Tuesday of this week by a majority of about one thousand votes.

A combination of circumstances brought about Mr. Lakin's defeat, prime among them being the lack of interest displayed by the Republican voters in failing to go to the polls. Nothing in Mr. Lakin's personality contributed in the least to his defeat. In his home town, Terra Alta, where nearly 500 ballots were cast, he received the entire number with the exception of 55, these going to his opponent.

Preston county gave him a majority of 1800; Monongalia 1000; Taylor barely 300, while Barbour, the home of Judge Dayton, and normally Republican by a good majority, gave Col. Davis a majority of nearly one hundred.

STRIKE OF STONE CUTTERS.

Men Employed On New Jail Went Out Monday for Higher Wages.

Work on the new jail in Oakland has been at a standstill since Monday morning owing to a strike among the stone cutters and masons engaged in laying the foundation and preparing the stone for the superstructure of the building.

The men asked for a nine hour day at the rate of 45 cents an hour in place of the ten hour day at the rate of 35 cents an hour.

The men are being held off by the contractors who have thus for refused to accede to their demands and the strike may continue several weeks unless other workmen are brought in here to take the strikers' places.

K. OF P. MEMORIAL SERVICES.

Will Be Held by the Local Lodge on Sunday, June 18th, at 3 o'clock.

By an edict issued by the Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias the Tuesday following the second Sunday in June has been established as "Memorial Day" of the order. Acting upon this the Grand Chancellor of the order in Maryland has issued circular letters to the various local lodges throughout the state calling upon the members to assemble at their respective halls on Sunday, the 18th inst., at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and march in a body to some place of worship where appropriate public services may be conducted beginning at 3.30 o'clock.

In accordance with the instructions received from the Grand Chancellor the members of Garrett Lodge are requested to assemble at Sturgiss' Hall in Oakland at the hour of three o'clock and march in a body to St. Paul's M. E. church, where Rev. J. B. Workman will conduct appropriate services and deliver a sermon suitable to the occasion.

It is desired that all members of the lodge as well as visiting brethren be present and participate.

JAIL DELIVERY NARROWLY AVERTED LAST NIGHT.

Those Implicated in the Plot Administrated Dope to Trusted Prisoner and DUG OUT THE SIDE WALL OF JAIL

Actions of "Buckshot" Allen, Who Took the Poison Under Protest, Aroused Sheriff's Suspicions and Investigation Followed.

A Jail delivery was narrowly averted at the county prison in Oakland last night about 8.30 o'clock and but for the prompt action of Sheriff Frantz the "birds" would have been missing this morning and the county left with a corpse on its hands to inter.

McClelland Friend, of Friendsville district, an insane prisoner, who was brought here by Sheriff Frantz Monday evening, is in such condition that an opiate to produce sleep had been prescribed by County Physician Legge. This "dope" got into the possession of some of the other prisoners who by threats of violence forced "Buckshot" John Allen, who is serving a short term for assault and is trusted by the officers at the jail, to swallow so that when it took effect he would be unable to give the alarm of their intended escape. Too much of the medicine was administered, however, which nauseated "Buckshot" and he called for the Sheriff long and loud. The officer went to investigate and upon being informed of the state of affairs existing inspected the inner walls of the prison and found that portions of a side wall had already been removed and with a few more minutes work on the part of the prisoners their escape would have been assured.

A physician was hastily summoned who administered to "Buckshot" and relieved him of his sufferings but he is still quite ill from the effects of the "dope." Sheriff Frantz drove the other prisoners to their cells and securely locked them up where they will be kept until the necessary repairs to the jail can be made.

"Buckshot" in his statement to the Sheriff said that Jesse Flynn, awaiting trial for house breaking, had forced him to take the medicine under threats of violence and that the walls had been dug out by Flynn and Will Ward, who is also charged with house breaking and awaiting trial.

CHILDREN'S DAY SERVICE.

A Sprightly Program To Be Rendered In St. Paul's Church Sunday.

In St. Paul's M. E. church, Oakland, on next Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock a splendid Children's Day program will be rendered by the scholars of the primary and intermediate grades of the Sunday school connected with the church.

Special preparations have been under way for more than a week to make the program interesting and entertaining. A large platform has been erected extending entirely to altar rail thus giving room for the mass of children who are to take part in the rendition of the program. They have been trained by Mrs. Dr. Hinebaugh and Dr. J. G. Robinson, rehearsals taking place every evening.

Following this service the oridnance of baptism will be administered to such children and infants as may be presented by their parents.

In the evening preaching service will be conducted by Rev. Workman, pastor of the church.

A special invitation is extenced to all and for the encouragement of the children the pastor especially desires the presence of their parents at the morning service.

MORE BONDS TO BE ISSUED BY COUNCIL

Determination to Sell Additional $4000 Arrived at Monday Night.

FOR IMPROVEMENT OF STREETS.

Contract for Curbing Liberty Street Awarded John Kenedy of Parkersburg—Joe White Night Policeman—Routine Business.

The City Council met Monday night, ordered bills paid for the month of May, awarded contract for curbing Liberty street, confirmed the appointment of a night policeman, instructed an architectural firm to draw plans for city building, authorized the issuing of bonds for street improvement and transacted routine business and then adjourned.

The Council was in session until well on to midnight with all members and Mayor McComas present.

The monthly bills for electric light, police service, street cleaning, excavation for the city building, etc., were all passed and ordered paid.

In accordance with an order passed at the May meeting of Council Attorney Heindel has prepard and presented to the Council an ordinance authorizing the issuance of bonds to the amount of $4000, the proceeds to be used for the purpose of grading and curbing Liberty street and the improvement of other streets within the town. After reading the ordinance it was passed by a unanimous vote and the attonery was authorized to prepare an advertisement asking for bids for the purchase of the proposed issue. The bonds will be in the denomination of $100 and will be sold to the highest bidder on Monday, July 3rd, by the Council.

The bids asked for curbing Liberty street from Wilson street to Gilmor street were then opened and the contract awarded to John Kennedy, of Parkersburg, W. Va., at his bid of 51 cents per lineal foot, the material to be used being the Indiana limestone of the same dimensions of that now used in other portions of the town. The price of 51 cents includes the setting and lining up of the curbing.

There were several other bidders for this work, among them being Mr. C. Kennedy of Parkersburg, W. Va.; Fuller Bros., of Frostburg, who based their bid on the use of concrete for the curbing, and Mr. Joseph Cogley, of Oakland, who also contemplated using the concrete.

Mr. James O. Hinebaugh, who has the contract for grading Liberty street, filed his bond and agreement with Council which was approved and ordered entered as a matter of record.

Messrs. Sansbury & Sansbury, of Cumberland, were employed by Council to draft plans and made specifications for the new city building, the foundation for which is almost completed. Mr. Joseph Cogley, of Oakland, has this part of the building under contract and will finish it yet this week.

The resignation of J. O. Browning as night policeman was accepted by Council and by the power conferred upon him Mayor McComas nominated and Council confirmed the appointment of Joseph H. White to fill the vacancy.

Council the adjourned to meet in regular session July 3rd.

BARN STRUCK BY LIGHTNING

And Burned With Contents, Including Farm Machinery.

Last Wednesday evening the barn on the Fort Pendleton Farm, owned by Daniel Eger, about twelve miles south east of Oakland, was struck by a bolt of lightning and burned to the ground along with hay, grain, harness, farm machinery including a new hay bailer, and other property, owned by Mr. Eger.

At the time the fire originated Mr. Eger was in the barn and was stunned by the lightning but recovered in time to escape from the building.

The barn was recently erected and there was no insurance on it or its contents.

Grading Well Under Way.

Mr. James O. Hinebaugh, who has the contract to grade Liberty street, has the work well under way notwithstanding the weather. Quite a number of men and horses are employed in the grading and with favorable conditions the contractor will complete the work within the specified time.

WILL PAY ABOUT 60 PER CENT.

Stock of Hardware of Hinebaugh & Edwards Sold for 75 per cent.

By an order passed in the United States Court at Baltimore one day recently and signed by Judge Morris the stock of hardware in the Hinebaugh & Edwards store, which firm made an assigment a few weeks ago and later declared bankrupts upon a petition filed in Judge Morris' court by Messrs. Renninger & Offutt, Oakland attorneys, was sold to the Bindley Hardware Company of Pittsburg for 75 per cent. of its value.

The Pittsburg firm was one of the heaviest creditors of the local concern and held a bill of sale upon the stock of goods but by reason of the matter going into bankrupt court the bill of sale was rendered null and void. All the creditors thus having the same standing and will share equally in the proceeds of the sale.

It is estimated that by making the sale upon the basis of 75 cents upon the dollar the creditors will receive sixty per cent. on their claims.

NEW SCHOOL HOUSES

Contracts Made for the Erection of Five Buildings in As Many Districts.

The Board of County School Commissioners with all members, Messrs. Moses R. Hamill, C. E. Ellithorpe and George E. Bishoff, and Superintendent Ed A. Browning, in attendance, held a meeting at the board room on last Friday and Saturday when considerable business was transacted, the most important being the awarding of contracts for the erection of five one-room school buildings in Districts Nos. 2, 3, 4, 13 and 14. The contracts were awarded by the Board in accordance with the advertisement published in these columns the to following bidders:

Rush, District No. 2 to Mr. John Myers.

New Germany, District No. 3, to Mr. J. W. Stark.

Chestnut Grove, District No. 4, S. F. Broadwater.

Dodson, District No. 13, to Mr. M. V. Grimm.

Dodge, District No. 14, to Mr. Joseph M. Crim.

The bid for the erection of the building at Shade Run, near Aaron Beachy's in District No. 3, was rejected owing to the fact that the Board considered it too high. Commissioner Ellithorpe was appointed a committee to resubmit the matter and ask for other bids.

The Commissioners contemplate under the several contracts to erect nothing but first-class buildings and to have them completed for use when the fall term of school begins.

The dates for holding the examinations for teachers' certificates were fixed as follows:

At Grantsville Monday and Thursday, June 29 and 27.

At Accidnt, Wednesday and Tuesday, June 28 and 29.

At Oakland Friday and Saturday, June 30 and July 1.

Trespassers

By Arthur Boltonwood

Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure

Baxter had followed the stream all the morning with indifferent success. Four trout, by far too small to make matters at all interesting, had risen to the fly and now slid about in the creel as he made his way through the underbrush to the open field, where the stream widened and deepened and gave promise of better sport.

At the edge of the field was a wire fence, and posted conspicuously upon it was the notice:

THESE ARE PRIVATE GROUNDS

No fishing allowed. Trespassers will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

Baxter read the sign and grunted. There was no one in sight, and the stream twisting through the field was decidedly tempting. Moreover, four small trout are very unsatisfactory in a creel made to accommodate more and larger fish. Baxter grinned ironically at the forbidding black letters on the fence and climbed over it.

Halfway down the field was a little clump of pines through which the stream flowed. Baxter entered the shadows of the trees, and scarcely had he cast when his reel whirred merrily and the line cut the water sharply. His pulses quickened. Here was fishing worth talking about. The line slackened, and he began to reel in gently.

At that moment the bushes behind him cracked, and a calm voice said:

"Pardon me, but have you a permit?"

Baxter gave no heed until he had landed the trout; then he turned to find himself face to face with a young woman. She was regarding him steadily, with a little frown of disapproval. A creel hung from a broad strap across her shoulder, and she carried an unjointed rod in a leather case.

Baxter had momentarily forgotten the warning on the fence. Now her words recalled it to his mind. He was evidently caught redhanded at his poaching, and the only thing to do was to frankly admit it. He looked at the girl before him. She was tall, well formed and undeniably attractive. Indeed she was quite striking as she stood there calmly awaiting his reply.

"You have a permit, of course?" she asked again.

Baxter smiled quietly.

"I regret to state," said he, "I am a deep dyed poacher."

The girl lifted her brows.

"You must have noticed the signs," she said.

"I noticed one," said he, "but the stream was too tempting to a man who had landed but four small trout during the morning. I am very sorry that my zeal got the better of my discretion, and I offer every apology for my unwarranted intrusion. Whatever the damages are I'll settle. I plead guilty."

"I should be inclined to follow the signs," she said, "and prosecute you 'to the full extent of the law' but for the way you just landed that trout. It was splendid and shows you to be an experienced angler. If you'd bungled it I should have let the law do its worst. If you promise not to trespass again you're quite free to go this time."

Baxter bowed.

"You are very generous," he declared, "which makes me doubly ashamed of my trespass. Rest assured I shall not repeat the offense. May I ask to whom I'm indebted for allowing me to go unmolested?"

Something in his eyes made the girl flush.

"Oh—it's—it's all right!" she said haltingly. "Now please go—at once."

Still Baxter hesitated. He was not given to pretty speeches nor to staring at young women whom chance threw in his way, but some indefinable charm about the girl made him do the latter and regret his inability to do the former.

"I'm very grateful," he said lamely enough, "and—and"—

"And what?" she said almost sharply.

"I'd like very much," said he, "some time in the future to express my gratitude to you when we stood on an equal footing—that is, you understand, when I'm not poaching your stream."

He spoke so earnestly that the girl flushed again.

"It's all right," she reiterated. "You've been quite grateful enough. Now please go!"

Baxter, trying vainly to think of some plausible excuse for prolonging the conversation, reeled up his line and began to unjoint the rod.

Suddenly a man came crashing through the bushes and stood before them. The girl gave a little startled cry of dismay. Baxter noticed the man wore leather leggings and was clothed in tweeds.

"'As the marster given you fishin' permits?" he asked, glaring at Baxter.

"No," said Baxter, "but the lady"—

The man wheeled to the girl.

"'Ave you got one?" he asked.

"N-no," she said humbly, and, without looking at Baxter, she added, evidently for his benefit, "I'm—I'm a poacher too."

Baxter's heart jumped at the words. He mastered an overpowering desire to laugh and turned to the girl.

"Well, by George!" was all he managed to say.

"It's the marster's order to take you to the house then," said the man solemnly.

"See here"— Baxter began protestingly.

"For $2 apiece I'll let you go this time," the man said insinuatingly.

Baxter handed him a $5 bill, and, after warning them to leave at once, the man departed.

As the man stumbled back through the bushes Baxter turned to the girl. Her face was scarlet and her eyes refused to meet his.

"It was frightfully mean of me," she explained. "I thought it would be a great joke to frighten you off by pretending I owned the stream and then fish it myself. Then that frightful man came—and—and—to tell the truth, I should have been dragged to the house, for I hadn't a cent of money with me."

She lifted her eyes to his.

"Oh, what must you think of me!" she cried contritely.

But Baxter was laughing happily.

The Mask In Italy.

The Italian nation is especially appealed to by the charm of mystery and all those indefinite possibilities which lurk behind the secrecy of the mask. Not but that this license of masks was frequently abused. Alessandro VI., who with Madonna Lucrezia, was so fond of watching the maskers go past from the balcony of Castel St. Angelo, had to forbid masks in 1499 under pain of the gallows, to such an extent did the factions and ill disposed at Rome take advantage of them to pay off old scores, and so many people were killed or seriously wounded every day in the streets.

Connected with the old Saturnalia the masks were the especial characteristic of the Fabulae Atellanae and the less artistocratic Mimae, and nobody who has seen the collection of such antiquities at Rome, Naples and Pompeii will doubt the important part that masks played in the life of the early empire. Thence we may trace them down in the antique farces, which gradually blended with the sacred representations of the middle ages until they ultimately laicised them and removed them from the church.—Gentleman's Magazine.

The Wishbone.

The wishbone in birds is called by scientists furcula and is in reality the union of what are in man the two separate collar bones. These in the birds receive the brunt of the strokes of the wing that turn the creature in its flight. Few realize the strength of stroke of the bird's wing. It is said that a swan has been known to break a man's leg by a blow of its wing, and in like manner the wing beatings of the larger birds are dangerous if they strike the head or face. If, therefore, a large bird is in the habit of making sudden turns to right or left in its flight it must be fitted with a wishbone competent to withstand the great strain of the wing stroke on one side, with no special action on the other side. For this reason we find in the eagle and like birds of quickly turning flight a furcula that is a perfect Roman arch, widely at variance with the Gothic arch, which is the shape of the wishbone of our common fowls. The eagle's furcula is a solid rounded arch, everywhere equally strong and not developing those points of weakness that make our sport of breaking the wishbone possible.

Necessity of Exercise.

The variety of beneficial motions that may be had in muscular exercise is almost unlimited. It is interesting to notice that children, when free to play as they choose, instinctively make so many different motions that they seem to use all their muscles. When people's ideas of propriety shall have become what they should be grown people can exercise like children without being considered daft or silly. Many of the performances of children seem to older persons purposeless and useless.

There is such a state of ignorance and prejudice that many people of considerable education lack very much of having a proper conception of the relation of exercise to life and health. One may learn and practice with benefit a system of exercises, as many do, without having the acquaintance with the principles involved that makes possible the greatest benefit and interest and enjoyment. There is an important advantage in knowing the reasons for the various movements and what muscles make each movement and how muscles use bones as levers.

Colonel Bunker's War Talks

He Relates Reminiscences of Charming Interest---His Many Narrow Escapes.

"YES, suh, it is a long ways back to the wah," said Colonel Bunker as he finished his cocktail and slowly lighted a cigar—"a long ways, suh, and we who fought it are about ready to lay down our knapsacks. I'm not bringing up the question of whether the struggle was right or wrong, but I'm sorry for the brave men who fell in the ranks. And while I do not care to speak of myself—of my personal life, suh—I have every reason to believe that I came out of the wah with credit to myself and the cause.

"I don't refer altogether to my conduct in battle. There were side issues—several side issues—which I had to face and overcome.

"Soon after I became majah of my regiment I met up with Majah Goldwin of an Alabama regiment. We were thrown together by accident, and we became convivial, and it was while in a state of conviviality that Majah Goldwin expressed the wish that we had a Napoleon to lead the Confederate troops. I could only take his words as an imputation on the military skill of the gallant General Lee, and almost as soon as he had uttered them my glove struck his face and I asked him to name the time, place and weapons.

"MY GLOVE STRUCK HIS FACE."

"There we were, Majah Bunker versus Majah Goldwin, and we met at sunrise the next mawnin' with swords as weapons. I was never in better spirits in my life—cool, calm and determined—and I resolved to fo'ce the fighting from the word. I even had the spot selected through which my sword was to pass into the majah's body. I should have killed my man—pierced him through and through—but as we received our swords he remarked to me:

"'Majah Bunker, I wish it to be understood that I had no thought of casting aspersions on the character of our brave general. I meant that Napoleon should only lead under Lee.'

"That put a different look on matters, of co'se," said the colonel, "and after some further conversation the duel was declared off. As a man of honah I had taken the majah as he said; as a man of honah he had said one thing and meant another. General Lee sent for me, but what passed between us I shall hold sacred—sacred as the grave. Don't you think smoking conducive to thirst, suh?"

After the colonel had put in eight minutes assuaging the dryness of his throat he picked up the remnant of his cigar and continued:

"Egad, suh, but give a man a reputation as a duelist and his work will be cut out for him. It soon became noised about that I had brought Majah Goldwin to book, and I had scarcely been promoted to a lieutenant coloneley when Adjutant General Graham of the Third corps took opportunity to criticise the way I led my men into action at Glendale. When we charged, suh, I was at the head of the regiment, suh. I waved my sword five times around my head and then lowered it, and the adjutant contended that I was short by two waves. We had an argument which grew into a dispute, and at length I looked him straight in the eyes and said:

"'Adjutant Graham, should it be your pleasure to meet me on the field of honah I will endeavor to wave my sword until one or the other of us has received full satisfaction!'

"Egad, suh, but I have been told that my remarks were trite and to the point, and I rather reckon they were. We met early next mawnin'. My attitude was the same as befo', suh—the same as befo'—that is, it was calm and determined, with a feeling that I should conquer. To do the adjutant justice, he toed the mark, but there was a great difference in our demeanor—a great difference in my favor. We were about to place ourselves on guard when the adjutant stepped back and said:

"'Colonel Bunker, I am heah at your service—at your service, suh—but as a man of honah I wish to make an explanation. At Glendale you waved your sword five times around your head and called upon your brave men to follow you. I was under the idea, suh, that the tactics called for seven waves, and hence our dispute and this meeting. Last evening I looked up the matter and discovered that we were both wrong. It was six waves of the sword, Colonel Bunker—six waves and a determination to conquer or die.'

"Well, suh," said the colonel as he slowly pushed the ashes off his cigar with his finger, "as we were both wrong and as we were both men of honah the only way to do was to shake hands over the matter and become reconciled. I was pleased and yet not quite satisfied. I had determined to pink the adjutant, suh—to pink him in the right shoulder—and I felt that I had surrendered a privilege. The credit of calling him out was mine, however, and I could not fail to observe that I had gained a point or two. Fo' weeks later I was a full colonel. You can draw your own inference, suh—your own inference. I observe that it is now 2 o'clock in the evening. It is my usual custom at this hour—that is, at 3 o'clock in the evening"—

There was no reason why his usual custom should be broken in upon, and after it had been duly repeated he gracefully crossed his legs and musingly observed:

"I should have killed Colonel Hopson, suh—killed him stone dead at the first fire but for an unlooked for interruption. At the battle of Manassas I had three horses shot under me—three horses, suh. A year later one day while conversing with Colonel Hopson on the incidents of the battle he turned and said:

"'Colonel Bunker, allow me to tip my hat to you, suh. You had eleven horses shot under you at Manassas, and yet you took it as a matter of co'se. You are a chevalier of old, suh—a chevalier of old.'

"'Only three horses, Colonel Hopson—only three,' I replied.

"'Eleven, Colonel Bunker.'

"'Three, Colonel Hopson.'

"And thus we disputed, suh. The colonel had somehow got the number of horses at eleven and wouldn't give up, and of co'se I stuck to three. The result was that I called him out. He was a brave and gallant man, and he was on hand in a minute. He chose pistols, and I felt it my duty to remove him to another sphere of action. A brave and gallant man, suh, but he was killing too many horses for my credit. We had taken our stand and were ready for the word when the Federals suddenly attacked our center. General Lee sent an aid to find me and to order me to hurl my regiment into the thick of the fight, and he came upon us at the critical moment. I was about to shoot Colonel Hopson through the head, but orders from the chief were not to be disobeyed. As I turned away I said:

"'Colonel Hopson, our affair is off for an hour or so.'

"'When we have beaten the Federals back,' he replied.

"But it was not to be, suh—not to be," sighed Colonel Bunker as he rose up. "When we had beaten the Federals back—when my regiment had performed deeds to live in history forever—I returned to the field of honah. Alas, I had no opponent! Colonel Hopson had fallen in the thick of the field, dying as a soldier should, and there was no one for me to shoot at. And, egad, suh, he probably went to his death firmly convinced of the report of the eleven horses—the eleven horses shot from under me at Manassas! Too bad, suh—too bad! It was an utter waste of eight horses!" M. QUAD.

Her Last Argument.

She wished to move from the distant suburb into the roaring midst of Gotham. She had plied all her resources in argument, but Younghusband was still unconvinced. Then, with woman's wit, a last compelling idea occurred.

"And, dear, you know then the two cent morning paper would only cost us a cent."

Then they began to pack the dishware.—Judge.

What She Gave Up.

Husband—I have made all sorts of sacrifices for you. Now, what did you ever give up for me?

Wife—What did I ever give up for you! Well, I never! Why, I gave up half a dozen of the nicest young men in town!—New York Weekly.

Reduced.

Husband—Why in the world are you always borrowing trouble?

Wife — It's the neighbors' fault. They're always out of everything else. —Detroit Free Press.

The Lover—Gee, I've blotted her letter!

His Friend—Aw, jest write under it, "Dis is a kiss," an' let it go at dat!—New York World.

At First Sight.

A few of us were talking at the club the other night
On how each came to choose the girl he wed.
Brown vowed that his affinity he knew at once and quite
At first sight fell in love with her, he said.

Now, be it known, with beauty Mrs. B. is not endowed,
And Jones, in an aside, occasion took
To whisper, "Brown's confessing love at first sight does him proud—We'd hate to think he took a second look!"

Parents Should Have Large Families

By Rev. WILLIAM MITCHELL of Trinity Methodist Church, Millville, N. J.

AMONG the Hebrews a child was considered heaven's best gift. Hannah and Rachel desired such a blessing from the Lord. Hebrew poetry says, "Happy is the man whose quiver is full of them." WE SEEM TO BE GOING TO THE OTHER EXTREME. There are women in America who would sooner fondle a pug dog than raise a child.

President Roosevelt, recognizing the tendency of the times to exalt culture and belittle womanhood and motherhood, has coined a new phrase—"race suicide." At the National Council of Women held at Washington his utterances were criticised by some of the delegates, who said that QUALITY WAS BETTER THAN QUANTITY. Mrs. Flo Jamison Miller, the past national president of the Women's Relief corps, is quoted as saying, "Better have two or three splendid children than a dozen incompetents."

If Susannah Wesley had been filled with the ideas of these modern women that three children are enough for a home, we never would have had Methodism, for its founder, John Wesley, was her TENTH child.

And we would never have had Charles Wesley, the famous hymn writer, for he was her EIGHTEENTH child. As we sing his grand hymns we thank God for Susannah Wesley and that she gave to the world her eighteenth child, proving that QUANTITY AND QUALITY GO TOGETHER.

A Poem for Today

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY

By Francis Miles Finch

FRANCIS MILES FINCH has from his youth been a lyrical poet of note. He was born in Ithaca, N. Y., in 1827, was class poet at the time of his graduation from Yale in 1849 and has been successively lawyer, judge of court of appeals in New York, college librarian and dean of the law school at Cornell university. "The Blue and the Gray" was inspired by a newspaper clipping to the effect that on the last preceding Memorial day the women of Columbus, Miss., had impartially placed floral tributes upon the graves of Confederates and northern soldiers alike. The poem first appeared in the Atlantic Monthly.

By the flow of the inland river
Whence the fleets of iron have fled,
Where the blades of the grave grass quiver,
Asleep are the ranks of the dead—
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the one the Blue,
Under the other the Gray.

These in the robings of glory,
Those in the gloom of defeat—
All with the battle blood gory
In the dusk of eternity meet.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the laurel the Blue,
Under the willow the Gray.

From the silence of sorrowful hours
The desolate mourners go
Lovingly laden with flowers
Alike for the friend and the foe.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the roses the Blue,
Under the lilies the Gray.

So with an equal splendor
The morning sun rays fall
With a touch impartially tender
On the blossoms blooming for all.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Broidered with gold the Blue,
Mellowed with gold the Gray.

So, when the summer calleth
On forest and field of grain,
With an equal murmur falleth
The cooling drip of the rain.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Wet with the rain the Blue,
Wet with the rain the Gray.

Sadly, but not with upbraiding,
The generous deed was done;
In the storm of the years that are fading
No braver battle was won.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the blossoms the Blue,
Under the garlands the Gray.

No more shall the warcry sever
Or the winding rivers be red;
They banish our anger forever
When they laurel the graves of our dead!
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Love and tears for the Blue,
Tears and love for the Gray.

Need of Help For Large Universities

By Professor GOLDWIN SMITH

THE thing now most urgently needed in the sphere of higher education is help for the great universities. The small university, however good its management, however strong the attachment of its alumni may be to it, CAN HARDLY MEET THE NEEDS of the present day.

Formerly, when only classics and mathematics were taught, a limited staff sufficient for teaching and the contents of a few bookcases were an adequate outfit. Now that science, practical as well as theoretical, is taught and the university has become, instead of a gymnasium of culture, AN EMPORIUM OF KNOWLEDGE a very large staff and very expensive outfit are required.

THE GREAT UNIVERSITIES ARE EVIDENTLY FEELING THE FINANCIAL STRAIN.

The Capture of Wilmington

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

February 22, 1865

[Copyright, 1905, by G. L. Kilmer.]

WILMINGTON, N. C., the last port of the Confederacy to be closed against blockade runners, fell Feb. 22, 1865, as a sequel to the Federal capture of Fort Fisher on Jan. 15. Before the collapse of Fort Fisher, the grim sentry at the mouth of Cape Fear river, General Schofield had been ordered to bring the Twenty-third army corps from Tennessee to North Carolina with a view to securing a base for Sherman, who was to march northward through the Carolinas.

After the fall of Fort Fisher Wilmington's defense rested with Fort Anderson, on the west bank of Cape Fear river, and a force of Confederates, led by General Hoke, posted on the east bank below the city. Uniting the victors at Fort Fisher, under General Terry, with his own men from the west, Schofield attempted to march up the east bank and cross near the city. Finding the route difficult owing to storms and high tide, he transferred two divisions, led by General Cox and General Ames, the last among the captors of Fort Fisher, to the west bank near the village of Smithville and below Fort Anderson.

Admiral Porter's warships had from time to time bombarded Fort Anderson at long range and renewed their fire as the land force advanced. General Cox took the lead in the march upon the fort and on the 17th got within two miles of the outworks, his line resting upon Cape Fear river and in communication with the fleet. A reconnoissance revealed to General Cox a line of Confederate infantry well intrenched leading from the bank of the river to the foot of Orton pond, a lake several miles long. Owing to the protection of this body of water the trenches could not be turned except by a long march. The line was further protected by abatis and manned with field artillery, which kept up a rapid fire of shrapnel whenever the Federals showed within range.

Two of General Cox's brigades were intrenched in front of Fort Anderson, and two others marched for the head of Orton pond, a distance of fifteen miles. It was night when the column reached the causeway at the head of the pond. The enemy resisted General

GENERAL COX'S ATTACK IN PONTOON BOATS.

Cox's advance across the swamp with cavalry, but this was finally outflanked, and the troops passed the swamp to high ground beyond. Throughout the day the fleet kept up a rain of fire upon Fort Anderson, and the Confederates abandoned the place during the night, leaving ten pieces of heavy artillery to the enemy.

The garrison of Fort Anderson retreated along the river bank to a stream called Town creek, which flows at right angles with Cape Fear river, a few miles below Wilmington. On the east side of the river the Confederates under General Hoke also fell back and took up a position opposite the mouth of Town creek. General Terry followed up Hoke in his retreat, and General Ames' division crossed from the west bank of the river to the east to support Terry. General Cox pursued the garrison column to the banks of Town creek.

Before evacuating Fort Anderson the Confederates built a strong line of works on the north bank of Town creek and manned them with a Whitworth rifled cannon and two field-pieces. The creek was deep and unfordable. The planking was removed from the bridge over the creek, and guns in the works swept the long causeway over the marsh leading to the bridge. A single Confederate brigade led by General Hagood held the works at Town creek.

General Cox's skirmishers worked their way through the marsh to the edge of the creek and picked up an abandoned flatboat which was used on the 20th to ferry troops across. As the boat could carry but fifty men, it consumed half a day to put two brigades across. During this movement Cox's sharpshooters on the south bank crept so close to the creek as to make it hot for the Confederates to show themselves above the parapet. The Whitworth gun in the works was disabled by artillery fire, and the Federal navy steamed up within range, compelling the Confederates on both sides of Cape Fear river to take positions out of reach.

The Confederates behind Town creek made the mistake of thinking that the ground on the flanks of their position was impossible for the Federals to march over. General Cox didn't find the region picketed and soon struck the highroad two miles in rear of the works. The Confederates had begun a line of breastworks facing to the rear and turned about to meet Cox when they discovered his line moving down from Wilmington way. A single charge of the Federals broke the line, and the commander surrendered with 400 men and 3 cannon. Part of the Confederates escaped to Wilmington.

During the night General Cox repaired the bridge over Town creek and, with his whole force, trains and artillery, set out for Wilmington. Meanwhile General Hoke's Confederates still held General Terry back on the east of the river. After a march of six miles Cox was again held up by Mill creek, an unfordable stream with its bridge burned. Two hours were passed in repairing the bridge, and the column marched on to Brunswick Ferry, in front of Wilmington. Here the railway bridge fired by the Confederates was still burning, but several boats of a pontoon bridge used by the Confederates had been overlooked, and with these the troops were poled across to Eagle island, midway of the river and about a mile wide.

General Cox immediately began to repair the pontoon bridge and cross his column to the island. Meanwhile the detachment which had been ferried over marched on toward the city ferry and were met by a party of Confederates having a couple of cannon in position behind a rude work they had constructed to defend the road. While the riflemen of the Federal vanguard attempted to drive the Confederate gunners from their pieces General Cox opened with artillery from the west bank, and the explosion of the shells so close to the city warned the authorities that an enemy was at their gates.

Persistent rumors had been afloat around Wilmington that the Confederate General Hardee, who had evacuated Charleston and moved north with several thousand men, was about to succor the threatened city. General Terry could make no headway in trying to push Hoke's Confederates on the east bank of the river, and it was supposed that Hoke had been reenforced. General Cox's story of the day is that the commanding officer of the expedition, General Schofield, ordered him (Cox) after he had secured a lodgment upon Eagle island to draw back and ferry his troops to the east bank of Cape Fear river to reenforce Terry.

Being convinced from what he had seen on the west bank, General Cox says that he purposely delayed obeying orders promptly, put one brigade in motion and reported the circumstance fully to his superior. The river bank being lined with swamps, it was midnight of the 21st before Cox's couriers reached his headquarters with fresh directions from Schofield. The chief approved Cox's action, although he had sent repeated orders to him to recross the river and support Terry in an attack on Hoke. These orders had been the more urgent the afternoon of the 21st because Hoke resumed the aggressive at that time as a cover to his retreat and the abandonment of Wilmington to its fate. General Hoke marched away during the night, and Terry's troops followed up, entering the city at the dawn of Washington's birthday.

Wilmington having been secured as a base for Sherman in case of need, General Schofield turned his attention to securing a better one at Newbern, N. C., then in Federal possession, but cut off from Goldsboro, where Sherman was expected to halt by a Confederate post at Kingston. Leaving Terry in command of Wilmington, Schofield detached General Cox to Newbern to open the road to Goldsboro. This was effected after a stubborn battle at Kingston, and Schofield united the column under Terry with Sherman's army at Goldsboro, with communications open to both Newbern and Wilmington.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

The Sounds of Battle.

Only those who lie in the firing line and near the constant screech of the shells as they cleave their terrible way through the air above know the true sounds of modern war. The whiplike smack of the bursting shell, the swish of the scattering bullets, are nothing to the mocking screech of these fearful messengers of death as they pursue each other, as if in competition to complete the awful object of their hideous mission. The whole welkin is discordant with their tumult. You feel the rush of misplaced air, splinters sing in your ears, the earth is in constant tremble with the violence of the discharge; you feel it pulsate against your cheek pressed to the moist mud of the parapet, and then a bullet saps the lifeblood of a comrade whose elbow has touched yours day and night for forty hours. There is a limit to human endurance in these straits. — World's Work.

AUSTIN BROWN.

Oakland, Md., May 2, 1905.

COL. THOMAS B. DAVIS of Keyser, has at last broken into Congress.

JUDGING by the returns of election from the honorable county of Preston some of the honorable money of the Honorable Thomas B. Davis found its way into the honorable hands of the honorable Democracy of that independent State. Thus the honorable Deacon Brown of the honorable Arizona-Kicker-Argus evidently received an honorable answer to his recent honorable letter to the honorable Col. Tom.

THE defeat of Mr. James S. Lakin for Congress of Terra Alta, in the Second Congressional District of West Virginia, is explained by the indifference of the Republican voters in staying away from the polls on Tuesday and the work done among the Democrats in the interest of Mr. Lakin's opponent, Col. Thomas B. Davis Keyser, West Va. Another thing that worked hardship to Mr. Lakin's candidacy was the energy displayed by the Democratic press in exploiting before the voters the evils that will ensue by the enactment of the State tax law, a matter with which Mr. Lakin has nothing whatever to do, but the Democrats saw there chance and rose to the occasion. The new tax law has not become effective and the hardships to be endured under it are entirely mythical so far as any practical demonstration is apparent. To our friend Jim we extend condolences.

Robbery at Wilson, W. Va.

The postoffice and general store of Burt Wilson at Wilson, W. Va., was broken open and robbed on Saturday night. The robbers secured $18.50 in postoffice money and $25 in cash from Mr. Wilson, who is postmaster. They also secured a quantity of tobacco, cigars and snuff. Jefferson Kline was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Kimmell, for the crime. He was given a hearing before Justice Aronhalt, who sentenced him to the State Reform school. Kline, who is 17 years old, was caught in a trap. He implicates others in the robbery and more arrests are expected.

Dr. Henry W. McComas, who returned from a trip east on last Friday morning, purchased an automobile while he was absent, the machine arriving here Sunday morning by freight from New York. The auto is a very handsome one and comfortably seats five persons. A trial was given the machine Monday evening, Dr. Cross, of Piedmont, who is an expert manipulator of "buzz" wagons, coming up here to give Dr Henry some instructions. The auto moved over the streets at a pretty lively pace, climbing the hills with ease and proving satisfactory in every respect.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

Program Will Embrace a Number of Interesting Subjects.

The program for the Garrett County Sunday School Convention, which will meet at Deer Park on the evening of Friday, June 16th, and all day Saturday and Sunday following, is being built and will embrace a number of interesting subjects and live speakers. Among the speakers from abroad will be State Supt. George H. Nock, who is well known in our county, and Rev. T. M. Beadenkoff, one of the popular speakers of Baltimore City.

On Friday evening, the 16th, an address will be delivered by Rev. T. M. Beadenkoff. Brief addresses also by others.

The sermon on Saturday morning will be delivered by Rev. P. W. Metheny. State Supt. Nock will conduct a Round Table on "Sunday School Problems Seeking Solution." Slips will accompany programs containing fifty problems covering every possible Sunday school need and difficulty. These will be distributed through the audience and the workers can ask any question they desire by number. This feature of the program will be made exceedingly interesting.

In the afternoon session Rev. J. B. Shoup will discuss "The Sunday School as a Soul Winner." Mr. Geo. E. Bishoff will discuss "The Country Sunday School, its Opportunities and Responsibilities."

Among the other speakers of the Convention will be Mr. C. M. Miller, Rev. Wm. H. Faust, Rev. Edmund Manges and others.

On Sunday Rev. T. M. Beadenkoff will preach the convention sermon. There will be a children's service in the afternoon and at night a most enthusiastic, up-lifting and soul-stirring mass meeting.

The Friday night service will be held in the Union church, Saturday meetings in the M. E. church and the Sunday meeting in the Lutheran church.

Every Sunday School in the county is invited to send two delegates and to report their names to Rev. Wm. H. Faust, Deer Park.

The schools are requested to send their statistical report to State Supt. G. H. Nock, 316 N. Charles street, Baltimore, Md.

Should any school fail to receive notice it will be because it does not appear upon the State Superintendent's list, or there may have been a change in the superintendent. Such schools are requested to send in the name of their delegates to Rev. Mr. Faust.

The time was when Sunday school conventions were matters of great interest to the people of this county. Let it be so again, and let all combine to make the coming convention the greatest and most effective yet held.

Deer Park Hotel, Deer Park, Md.

This famous Allegheny Mountain Hosterly will open on June 24, with prospects for the most brilliant season in its history. The hotel and cottages have been renovated and painted, inside and out. Two of the choicest cottages can be secured if application is made at once. Many suites of rooms have been engaged in the hotel building and both annexes.

The popularity of Deer Park is due to its splendid location, 2,800 feet above the sea level, out of range of malaria and mosquitoes. Every convenience is provided for guests. The rooms are delightful and the cuisine excellent. The Hotel is provided with all modern improvements for comfort; with Bowling Alleys, Billiard Rooms, Tennis Courts, Golf Links, Swimming pools, etc., for amusement. An entirely new Livery Equipment has been installed.

Deer Park is on the direct line of the Baltimore & Ohio between New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Wheeling, Columbus and Chicago, having the excellent advantage of through vestibuled trains from each of these cities with through Pullman service during the season from and to Pittsburg.

BLOOMINGTON.

Rev. Howard has been confined to his room for the past few days on account of ill health.

Messrs. Bond Bros., of Bond, this district, have purchased the fine tract of timber bordering on the northwest side of Savage river, extending from the old Lochiel dam to Everett tunnel. Mr. N. U. Bond, the business manager of the firm, was in town on Tuesday and rented a room in the M. E parsonage which will be converted into an office. The main office at Bond will be moved to this place and the Bond plant and the proposed new mill operated from the Bloomington office as headquarters. The new plant will be installed at once on the west side of the river opposite the B. & O. watchbox, about one-half mile west of town. This new enterprise will come in the nature of a boom to our place and to the district and will add very materially to the business interests of Bloomington and vicinity.

Mr. John Raley, 1st baseman for the Cardinals, of Cumberland, spent Sunday at home.

Mr. James Green, of the Wabash office, Baltimore, en route to Elkins, spent Sunday in town. Mr. Green has been promoted to the position of traveling auditor for the Wabash and the W. Va. C. R. R., with headquarters at Elkins. Mrs. Green accompanied her husband as far as this place when she will remain with her sister, Mrs. Sallie Matthews, until a suitable house has been obtained at their new location, when they will go to housekeeping.

The miners of the Marstellar Coal Co. went to work on Monday at the reduced rate of 50 cents a ton.

Mrs. Jacob Clark and children are visiting relatives at Winchester, Va.

Messrs. Geo. Oss and W. C. West of Oss' Mill, were in town on Sunday.

'Squire Fazenbaker, of Firm Rock, had business in town on last Monday.

A terrific hail, rain and thunder storm passed over our town on last Wednesday morning between 3 and 4 o'clock. Much damage was done to the garden crops in this vicinity from the heavy downpour.

Elizabeth Jane Simpson, aged 67½ died at her home in this place on last Sunday afternoon about 1 o'clock. For the past twenty years she had been an invalid, suffering from stomach trouble which finally proved fatal. Twenty-two years ago her husband, Mr. Samuel B. Simpson died from injuries received while at work in Franklin Mine. Mrs. Simpson and her husband came to this place from Berryville, Va., about 25 years ago and during all that time had been prominently identified with the interests of the M. E. church. She was president of the Ladies' Aid Society and in many ways added to the spiritual and material growth of the Methodist church in this community. Her children, Mrs. Joseph Paugh, Mrs. William Morehead, Messrs. Calvin and Samuel Simpson, of this place, and Mrs. Walter Moore, of Piedmont, were present at her death bed. Her funeral took place from the church on last Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. Snedegar, the pastor officiating. She was buried in tae Bloomington grave yard beside her husband.

FINZELL.

The cool weather seems to retard the growth of vegetation and the farmers say there will be only a half crop of hay.

The Minick Bros. will open up a five foot vein of good coal on the east side of Big Savage mountain which will be a great advantage to our farmers.

Two prospectors from Pittsburg, Pa., have found a fine vein of coal in the Piney Run Valley which they pronounce the finest Pittsburg gas coal. A company is now being formed to open the coal and clay in that great valley.

Frederick Warner, Sr., disposed of his household goods on Saturday.

Edward Finzel is building a new house on his farm. Thomas Johnson has the contract.

Miss Mary McKenzie and Mrs. Jane Finzel went to Cumberland, on a shopping trip.

Alen Robinson is building a new barn.

A party composed of Misses Margaret, Lulu Finzel and Nellie Machin and Messrs. Joseph Finzel, Robert Hochsetler, Lewis McKenzie and William Thoreany went to Castleman River on a fishing trip. They report a good time but few fish.

A party composed of forty-six ladies and gentleman from Berlin, Pa., visited "Samson's Rock" and was much pleased with the grand scenery that abounds about this place.

James McKenzie's family is afflicted with the black diphtheria.

A number of our most prominent business men and farmers propose to organize a telephone company, the local telephone company having left their patrons without any service for almost two months all on account of not being willing to pay our central girl a few more dollars in wages per month. She has one been of the busiest operators along the line.

John Arklie was painfully hurt in the mines of the Union Mining Co., by a discharge of dynamite, the fire-clay cutting him in many places and injuring his eyes very much. Dr. Murray rendered surgical aid and they have taken Mr. Arklie to Cumberland to the Western Marvland Hospital to be treated by Dr. Fechtig.

Miss Viola Rosenberger possesses the finest poultry farm in district number nine. She keeps about one hundred old chickens and has over five hundred young chickens. Her income from the sale of eggs amounts to fifty dollars a month.

Mr. Eugene Cune, of Meyersdale, Pa., accompanied by his best girl visited his parents last week.

Daniel Allbright, an enterprising young man, is engaged in ginseng farming. He has over fifteen hundred plants and expects to plant quite a number of seeds this fall.

Henry Baker has purchased the fine tract of timber on the Catharine Miller farm.

A number of prominent business men were up in the Accidemt district looking over a fine tract of timber which they expect to purchase.

NOTICE OF Bond Sale!

Notice as to the Sale of Bonds to Pay for the Improvements of the Streets of the Town of Oakland, Maryland.

Notice is hereby given that the Mayor and Town Council of the Town of Oakland, Garrett County, Maryland, will meet at their Council Chamber in said town on

MONDAY,
the 3d Day of July, 1905
AT 8 O'CLOCK P. M.

of said day, to receive and examine sealed bids for the purchase of Four Thousand Dollars of the Municipal Bonds of said Town as authorized by Chapter 24 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, 1898, for the purpose of paying for the improvement of the streets of said town.

The said Bonds will be issued in the denomination of One Hundred Dollars each. Said Bonds to be drawn in accordance with the provisions of the aforesaid Act of Assembly and the ordinance of said town providing for said issue with interest bearing coupon bonds attached at four per cent. interest payable semi-annually on the first days of July and January of each year after the date of said issue, but not to bear interest until after the first day of January, 1906, but none of said bonds will be payable before the first day of January, 1925, after that date they will be paid at the rate of one thousand dollars per year, but redeemable at the pleasure of the Mayor and Town Council of said town.

The principal and interest will be payable at the Garrett National Bank, Oakland, Maryland.

The bonds are to be paid for within ten days after the notice that the same are ready for delivery.

Said bonds will be awarded to the highest responsible bidder or bidders at a sum not less than their par value and interest after the first day of January, 1906, said bids to be without conditions or qualifications. All such bids shall be accompanied by the currency or a certified check payable to the order of the Mayor and Town Council of Oakland without condition for an amount equal to ten per cent. of the amount of said bid and in all cases where said bids are not received or accepted said money or check will be returned to the owner or owners.

In case any of said bonds are awarded to a bidder or bidders and they refuse to accept and pay for the same when ready for delivery and upon being notified of the same either by writing or orally, then the amount of ten per cent. so advanced on said bids shall be forfeited to the town of Oakland, and shall be turned over to the credit of the Mayor and Town Council of Oakland as liquidated damages for breach of contract on the part of said bidder and bidders.

The right to reject any and all bids is hereby reserved to the Mayor and Town Council of Oakland, Maryland.

Attest: HENRY W. McCOMAS, Mayor.
S. LAWTON, President Town Council of Oakland, Maryland.

Test: J. C. DUNHAM, Clerk.

OPPOSING THE SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT.

The Democratic State Central Committee met in Baltimore last Thursday and there was a good attendance of faithful party men. Among the notable absentees was Governor Warfield who is not in accord with his party in its effort to impose upon the people the Poe Suffrage Amendment. Prominent Democrats are beginning to speak out in opposition to the scheme of the managers and they don't mince words in denouncing the proposal to adopt such a dangerous and radical measure in Maryland. State's Attorney Owens, Mr. Alfred S. Niles and Mr. Archibald H. Taylor, all prominent Democrats and leaders of the Baltimore bar gave out interviews recently giving strong reasons for opposing the Amendment. Civic organizations are speaking out against it, including the Baltimore Reform League, the Citizen's Union, an organization made up of a number of German societies, the Methodist Minister's Association and other prominent organizations. These associations have come out against it in the most vigorous manner. The Democratic managers have raised a large fund and are determined to win in their fight to make Maryland a one party State. Their appeal to race prejudice is merely a cloak to hide their ulterior motive. Seeing the success of the movement in Southern States to disfranchise the colored voter, they seize upon the idea and endeavor to apply it, with amendments, to Maryland, where the negro is out-numbered five to one and where he has never dominated public affairs and never will. In their greed the framers of the Poe law have gone farther than the people of the South have gone and have added qualifications that will disfranchise negroes, Germans, Irish and other nationalities who have become residents of Maryland later than Jan. 1, 1869. These are the tests to by applied by officers of registration:

First—A person able to read any section of the Constitution of this State submitted to him by the officers of registration and to give a reasonable explanation of the same; or, if unable from physical disability to read such section, but able to understand and give a reasonable explanation thereof when read to him by the registration officers; or

Second—A person who on the first day of January, 1869, or prior thereto, was entitled to vote under the laws of this State or of any other State of the United States where he then resided; or Third—Any male lineal descendant of such last mentioned person. No person not thus qualified by coming under some one of the above descriptions shall be entitled to be registered as a qualified voter nor be entitled to vote.

Do you want to have your right to vote depend upon these provisions or the whim of the registration officers? Do you want to clothe the present Democratic party organization with absolute power to control public affairs indefinitely? If you don't, then you owe it to yourself and to your State to oppose the scheme with the weight of your personal influence and vote. Take the first test: Under this test registration officers, who are sworn to perform their duties impartially are "expected" to eliminate such negroes as are objectionable to the Democratic bosses. There are many in this State whom they need in their business and use regularly. If they use their registratres to get rid of only those negroes whom they don't want, isn't it fair to assume that they will, when the political necessity for it arises, use this power against the white man, too? The right to vote ought not to depend upon the whim or caprice of any set of men, but should be stated in clear, definite terms, applicable to all alike. The second test confers the right to vote upon any one—illiterate or literate who had the right to vote on or prior to Jan. 1, 1869. No matter how unworthy or how igorant or what his moral character is now. Is this fair? Does such a provision truly intepret the true civic spirit and sense of justice of the people of Maryland? What becomes of the plea for an intelligent electorate? The third test is even worse. Any male lineal descendant of such persons as could vote on or before Jan. 1, 1869 can be registered. Hard-working, industrious citizens and their sons who have come among us from foreign lands are barred out while some ignoramus, the "son of somebody" is favored, no matter how unworthy. Maryland justice will not let negro prejudice entice them to do such a palpable wrong. The Democratic managers must bear the odium of proposing this disreputable measure for the sole purpose of entrenching themselves in power. The people will defeat it. A Democratic Governer of their own choosing says it is dangerous, a Democratic Attorney-General agrees with him and private citizens of all parties are rallying to defeat it. Independents have no notion of being trapped into a scheme to lessen their influence in public affairs while the Republican party, as has often happened before in Maryland, is the wheelhorse in the movement to defeat this latest effort if Mr. Gorman and his associate ringsters to have Maryland in their undisputed control. On which side are you going to line up?

MARYLAAND'S OLD STATE SENATE HALL

The Work of Restoring It Will Begin At Once.

THE PLANS AND ESTIMATES.

Old State House Discovered by Architects and Builders to Have been in Tumble-Down Condition—Character of the Work to be done.

The State House Building Commission held a meeting in the Government House at Annapolis Thursday and authorized the remodeling of the old Senate Chamber and its restoration to the form it was in when Congress was in session in it and General Washington surrendered his commission. The work of restoration will begin at once. The estimated cost of the improvement ordered is $12,565, divided as follows:

To restore the rostrum, niche and balcony	$2,500
To replace windows, doors, window trimmings, etc	700
To construct chimney breast, fireplace from cellar to second floor	400
Mantelpiece	100
Painting and decorating woodwork and plaster	500
To replace ceiling, remove girders and fire-proofing	3,500
Much of the brickwork of the oldbuilding has rotten woodwork in it and there has been estimated for contingencies	1,100
Fireproof first floor	2,075
Replastering, carrying chimney through the roof and contingencies	1,690

Mr. J. Appleton Wilson and Mr. Josias Pennington of the advisory committee, were present and submitted an interesting report, showing the character of the work to be done, illustrated by drawings and plans. Mr. Wilson had some photographs which were taken in the old chamber before it was changed showing in accurate detail the room as it will be when restored.

Mr. George Shaffer of the Land Office, another member of the advisory committee, had fortunately preserved two of the fluted columns which supported the gallery, or balcony, as well as a portion of the railing and the cornice. These articles, along with the photographs and other data which the committee secured will make possible the exact restoration of the room to its original form. The old building is in a very bad condition and the architects believe that the work on the ceiling of the Senate Chamber is necessary for safety. It is likely that the Legislature next winter will find it necessary to provide for the strengthening of the old State House, the removal of rotten timbers and the support of the side walls by underpinning if the historic old building is to be preserved.

In this connection it may be stated, as the opinion of the architect as well as the builder, that the States owes it to Senator Spencer C. Jones that the State House did not tumble down. When the additions were removed for building the new annex the north wall was found to be in a tottering condition and had to be rebuilt. If this had not been done the whole structure would probably have fallen.

Preserve The Shade Trees.

One of the most powerful elements in civic improvement and in beautifying a city is shade, and it is one to which least attention is paid. Some people do not know the value of shade trees in a city, leaving out the question of beauty altogether. It should be apparent that paving the streets and sidewalks increases the necessity for shade. The sun shining on the smooth stone or brick pavements is reflected with an intensity that is never felt where it shines only on the soft earth, and for that reason alone, if there was none other, putting down pavements and preserving or planting trees should go together. In short, shade trees add to the beauty, comfort and healthfulness of any city, and it is almost a crime to destroy them. In this country some plant and build while others dig up and tear down but please spare the shade trees.

The Message of the Risen Christ

The Book of Revelation is the clasp of the whole volume—a clasp made of gold from the street of the New Jerusalem, studded with jewels from its walls, and graven with the mystic emblems of beasts and elders. The position it holds in the sacred canon is evidently the very one Inspiration designed it should occupy. The last book corresponds to the first with its paradise, tree, and river. And the beatitude upon the reader is not for the one who peruses Revelation only, but the whole volume. The curse upon the one who adds to or detracts from refers not to the Apocalypse alone, but to the entire Scripture. Revelation binds the volume together.

The place of its composition was previously so obscure that the writer must needs inform the earliest readers that Patmos is an island. But ever since that Ægean rock which served the last seer as a watch-tower from which to view the double panorama, celestial and terrestial, has been covered with a "solemn glory." The person of the composer, too, has a fascinating charm. "The Thunderer" and yet, "the beloved disciple;" the last link between the apostolic and post-apostolic age; all his associates in the college of the apostles dead, and that, too, by violence; he, in age and feebleness extreme, an exile by the cruelty of Domitian, possibly a common laborer in the quarry—such a one on the Lord's-day, caught up into the Lord's presence in the third heaven, and not, like Paul, reticent as to what he saw, but "forcing and torturing language to express his colossal conceptions in the grandest and most energetic forms."

The Christophany, of course, eclipses all the rest of the book, crowded though it is with dazzling wonders.

John taxes human language to the uttermost in his attempted portraiture of the glorified person of Jesus Christ. He lays color to color, adds jewel to jewel. He affects not the beautiful, but the ineffably glorious. Never did painter, whether with pigment or word, have such a study. The Lord of life and glory deigns to give His disciple "a sitting." The Christophany was mercifully gradual. Mortal eye could not have supported it had it been instantaneous. It was announced by a trumpet-voice, the greatness and unearthliness of which prepared the revelator for something supernatural; a voice that charged him to be as alert as a modern stenographer in taking down what he saw and heard. When he turned to look, his eyes were further schooled to splender by seeing only certain subsidiary objects. The seven golden lamp-stands all ablaze was a goodly enought sight in itself. They represent the vehicle through which God shines—His Churches; golden, to show he prizes them; separate, to suggest their autonomy; seven of them, to represent the whole Church. The eye of rapt exile passes slowly from the shining candelabra to the more than regal form, the glorified person of Jesus Christ as it gradually materializes. Even here the apostle passes from the accessary to the principal, from the clothing to the person. You have seen the gown woven out of spun glass. This glorious sacerdotal robe was woven out of sunbeams. Not, as on Hermon's sacred height, for a moment, but forever His raiment continues white as the light. The regal golden girdle high above his breast "braces the frame together and symbolizes collected power." The girdle also so placed disposes the garment for "calm, majestic movement".

Like Aaron's robe and girdle, these, too, are "for glory and beauty."

And now John dares glance at Jesus' brow. He admires the coronal glory. Any modern electrical display would fade before it, as the stars do when the sun rises. It is a dazzling silvery whiteness, as white fleece, sparkling as the snow does when the sun sets its myriad tiny stars ablaze. The large and lustrous eyes are all aflame, not in wrath, but with Divine genius. His bare feet fairly gleamed like metal at white heat. And His voice resounds like the multitudinous waves even then pounding on the rock-girt isle. In the palm of His outstretched right hand lies a chaplet of seven stars—signifying that each Church and the whole Church is in His keeping. Whedon suggests that the sword from the mouth is "not a stiff, steel fixture, but His Divine and powerful breath making itself, as it were, visible." The tout ensemble is as the sun in the meridian, unobscured by mist or cloud.

But the glorified person of the monarch of heaven, earth, and hell, now fully developed, was of insufferable majesty. As nearly sixty years before, on the Mount of Transfiguration, so again, John falls like one dead. But the majestic figure bends over the benumbed disciple, and the gentle voice he was wont to hear beside the sea calls him back to consciousness with its familiar cadence. "Fear not!" and its identification of Himself with the Messiah, and the affirmation of His eternity and His sovereignty over death and the underworld. Directions follow as to the immediate record of the things seen and heard, and explanations of the symbolism of the stars and lampstands.

The Teacher's Lantern.

Prepared messages always come to prepared person. It was no accident that this man had this vision. By a long course of schooling to which he submitted intelligently, he became singularly open the Divine.

* * * * *

By the same process he was prepared to transmit what he received. He proved a faithful witness.

* * * * *

Revelation is the normal end of the New Testament. Gospels are a fourfold biography of Jesus. Acts is the photograph of the Apostolic Church. Epistles are the indoctrination of that Church. Revelation opens the vista of the future: picture Jesus triumphant. Thus, in spite of its composite authorship and variant form, the New Testament keeps its unity.

* * * * *

The Apocalypse has been aptly called a "tract for bad times." It was written in an age of persecution and impending cataclysms. Its purpose was to assure foreboding minds of ultimate victory in spite of current contraditions.

* * * * *

Some have hesitated to believe that the author of Revelation and the Gospel and the Epistles of John can be one and the same person. The latter are in pure Greek, while the former is Hebraized. It has been aptly suggested that in Revelation John returns to the style of his youth before it became softened by Greek culture. It is also in perhaps unconcious imitation of the style of the prophets.

* * * * *

As a piece of literature, Revelation has a unique beauty and value, and has been highly praised. "The last book of grace."—Gregory. "It has as many mysteries as words; all praise falls short of its merits."—Jerome. Viewed as a work of descriptive art, it is congruous and æsthetically magnificent. — Whedon. This book belongs peculiarly to those who are under the cross. It was given to banished man, and men in affliction understand and relish it.—Wesley.

* * * * *

Given to the world at such a time, it must have attracted attention. It was written by the sole survivor of the apostles, and sketched the program for the Church at the very moment when the Church was bitterly in need of something definite and authoritative.

Fine Tribute to the Sugar Maple.

"Rispah," the well known Stoverstown newspaper correspondent, pays the following very eloquently and deserved tribute to the sugar maple tree:

"Some one has said that the Lord might have created a finer tree than the sugar maple, but He didn't. Those who have seen a natural grove of several hundred of these trees will readily agree with this saying. Stately in size, symmetrical in form, magnificent in verdure, venerable in age. In the early spring yielding a nectar of aromatic sweetness fit for gods to sip, in June covered with a mass of darkest green foliage among which squirrels delight to gambol and silver-tongued birds of brightest plumage carol their sweetest songs to their mates, in October changing their leafy cloak to a mosiac of hues and tints that no painter could invoke from pallet. The grandest of trees—shall it be said that the greed for a few paltry dollars at the beginning of the Twentieth century caused the extinction of this monarch of the forests in Somerset county."

Awful Warning to Boys.

James, a young son of Timothy Sullivan, of Youngstown, met with a sad accident, some days ago. Having chopped a pile of kindling, he proceeded to carry it into the house, when he fell and broke his left arm. This should be a warning to boys who are inclined to interfere with the duties of their parents and sisters.—Greenburg Democrat.

High Up. Yes.

He—I suppose so. The Japanese are great fighters, you know!—Yonkers Statesman.

One View of It.

"But if she makes all her own dresses I should think she'd be a good wife for you. It shows she's industrious and sensible."

"Not for me, thank you. It simply shows how poor her father must be."—Boston Herald.

Quiet Scraps.

"Yes, the walls of our flat are so thin that my husband and I learned the deaf and dumb alphabet."

"What for?"

"So we could do our quarreling without being overheard."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Repudiated Advice.

Friend—If you weren't such a good fellow you'd make twice the money you do. Why don't you take a brace?

Gaysome—Bracers, my boy, are the very things that keep me from working!—Detroit Free Press.

Another About the Moon.

On going out one evening for a walk with her mother Marion, aged five, was shown the new quarter moon.

"Oh, Marion, look at the new moon!"

"No, mamma; that is not new. I have seen that before."

The Man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

Journalism Is On the Upward Grade

By ST. CLAIR M'KELWAY, Brooklyn Editor and Author

COMPARE the boastfulness of the most sensational journalism with the business announcements of what are regarded as the MOST CONSERVATIVE firms. Compare the editorials of boastful journalism with the advertisements of such firms. You will find the advertisements exceed the jubilant editorials in claims of merit AND OF EXCLUSIVE MERIT to a large degree. I am not finding fault with advertisements. Neither am I apologizing for boastful journalism. I am but pointing out the truth that boastfulness is not exclusively journalistic and that the exploitation of news or of views is bottomed on the same effects or defects that the exploitation of goods or of prices is.

THE EXPERIMENT OF SANE, MODEST AND SELF RESPECTING JOURNALISM IS GENERALLY SUCCESSFUL.

The experiment of moderate, modest and suggestive rather than flamboyant business advertisements may have been made, but it has escaped observation in the columns of newspapers. I DO NOT ADVOCATE THE MAKING OF IT. To a newspaper the value of an advertisement is the space it takes. The occupation of such space is increased by large types and wide columns. If advertisers in competing with one another for purchasers can be made to compete with one another in newspapers for space my revenues are not decreased and your revenue need not be drained if you can govern the estimate of luxurious necessities and of necessary luxuries formed in the mind and in the imagination of those members of your families that equally augment both your felicity AND YOUR EXPENSES.

I believe in journalistic reform. But we must reform MORE THAN OUR JOURNALISM before we can effectually reform even it. We must reform the tendencies in ourselves toward what for want of a better name is called "yellowism" before we can reform it in any special class of interest. The beam has to be cast out of our neighbor's eye as well as out of our own, out of your eyes as well as out of mine. You compliment the press by demanding more of it than you do of yourselves. The press in a sense compliments you in too many instances by expressing its news and its views in the same style in which you prefer those of whom you would buy or to whom you would sell should express theirs concerning their articles or specialties. IN JOURNALISM THE EXPRESSION DEPENDS ON THE MAN. In business announcements it largely depends either upon the articles to be sold or upon the customers to be addressed. Journalism may be affected by or toward its constituency as much as business is toward its customers, but journalism leaves to business men their announcements or their customers and is acquitted of the exaggeration of those business men to whom it rents space.

JOURNALISM AT ITS WORST WOULD NOT LIKE TO BE CHARGED WITH THOSE EXAGGERATIONS, AND JOURNALISM AT TS WORST SELDOM EQUALS THEM.

JOURNALISM IS ON THE UPWARD GRADE. There are flagrant instances of corrupt sensationalism, but the number of them is few, and they mutually eviscerate one another. The excess of their evil is its own bane and the antidote of itself to others. SANE, CLEAR AND FAIR PAPERS ARE GROWING. Biased reporting is far less than it was. What is brazen, jobbing, truculent or without conscience, whether in official service or in journalistic service—public service both—has to coin a counterfeit of the virtues it has not. The best influences in press and politics were never more feared BY THE WORST. The closely related but largely different, yet always interdependent, functions of public men and of public writers play their part in a very interesting stage of the history of the world.

AS THEY WELL AND CONSCIENTIOUSLY FULFILL THAT PART, THEIR RELATIONS TO ONE ANOTHER SHOULD BE OR SHOULD BECOME SUCH AS NEED NOT BRING TO THEMSELVES SHAME OR JUSTIFY IN THOSE TO WHOM THEY APPEAL ANY DIMINUTION OF HOPE OR ANY ECLIPSE OF FAITH.

The Laborer and the Capitalist

By Professor J. H. GRAY of Northwestern University

THE strike admittedly is a relic of barbarism. Still, even with the violence, bloodshed and destruction which often attend, it is hard to prove that the laborer behaves MORE IMPROPERLY than the capitalist.

So long as employers refuse to confer with their men we shall have strikes. I believe, however, that the phenomena of such demonstrations on the part of organized labor continually will become less and less.

I defend the sympathetic strike, the boycott and the closed shop ETHICALLY, contending that labor monopoly is the only antidote for capitalistic monopoly.

THE GREAT PROBLEM WHICH THE FUTURE MUST FACE IS A UNION OF COMBINED LABOR AND COMBINED CAPITAL AGAINST THE CONSUMERS.

War's Benefits Are Of Doubtful Value

By JOHN D. LONG, President McKinley's First Secretary of the Navy

THE benefits from war are of very DOUBTFUL value. They are not the steady flowing stream upon which you can rely. They are rather like THE TORRENT THAT DESTROYS as much as it carries. I think we may all rejoice that our country now is in a condition of peace; that ALL the tendencies of our national life are in that direction. It is my earnest hope that we shall continue, and that is one of the reasons why I think we are carrying this Monroe doctrine a little too far. There is great danger that it may be carried to the point where it will result in unpleasant complications.

Notice To Tax Payers!

This is to notify the tax payers of Garrett county that the Annual Levy for 1905 has been made and published, and to call their attention to the following abstract, Section 45, Chapter 595, Acts of 1896, relating to the discount to be allowed and the interest to be charged on all tax bills:

"All county taxes shall be due and payable on the first day of September next succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and all county taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed, and after the first day of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid. The treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes regularly in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon his books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid. But the discount shall not be allowed unless the whole amount of State and county taxes are paid when same is made.

9-3t E. A. WEIMER, Treasurer.

It is in the details that clothes quality shows. All coats are pretty much alike in general plan. They all have backs and fronts and sleeves and collars.

The Fifth Avenue tailor gets a hundred dollars per suit for his clothes, because of the perfection of detail. The collar hugs the neck, the lapels lie smooth and flat, the shoulders have a shapely form—and hold it, the front is braced with haircloth and canvas, and does not break or sag. The buttons stay on and the buttonholes are steadfast. Pockets are reinforced and do not tear down.

Well dressed men like these things and so the tailor gets his price.

Now Clothcraft Clothes are designed and built on the Fifth Avenue plan, but not at the Fifth Avenue price. Every detail has attention and you will find in the set of the collar, the shape of the shoulder, the hang of the sleeves and the general balance of the coat, the same admirable qualities you have noticed in the garments of the highest priced tailor.

The Clothcrafters Know just how he gets his good results and they put into Clothcraft Clothes every feature that is good. But they apply system and machinery and turn out large quantities—therefore the price comes down. Clothcraft is the only ready-to-wear brand of clothing in which these things are done at moderate cost.

EXCURSIONS TO THE WEST

To the Pacific Coast—to California, Oregon, Washington—round-trip, long transit and return limits, liberal stop-over privileges.

The rate is practically on the basis of one fare for the round trip. Of course, if you wish to visit both California and Oregon or Washington, the cost is slightly more.

These reduced rates are in effect on certain dates in months of May to October, inclusive. They apply from all Eastern points via Chicago, St. Louis or Memphis gateways. The Rock Island System will take you up in either Chicago or St. Louis, or at hundreds of other Middle West points and carry you to the Coast in through Standard or Tourist Sleepers with unexcelled Dining Car service. The Rock Island also affords a choice of routes: on the "Scenic" route you can stop off in Colorado—see Salt Lake City—visit Yellowstone National Park; on the "Southern" route you can go via El Paso, thru New Mexico, then "up coast" to San Francisco and on to Portland or Seattle if desired.

In short, these Pacific Coast excursions offer an unusually good chance to see our western country in a comprehensive manner.

If you desire to go only as far as Colorado, there are excursion rates in effect to that section and return, all summer long, specially reduced June 30 to July 4, August 12 and 13, and August 30 to September 4. Extension trips to Ogden or Salt Lake and return at low cost also.

From September 15 to October 31, 1905, one-way tourist or "colonist" tickets will be on sale to California and the Pacific Northwest—about half regular fare.

If interested, send name and address on this coupon, designating which booklet wanted and to what point you plan to go. Name probable date of start also, so we can advise definitely with respect to rates, etc.

WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES.

A Correspondent Writes of Matters of Interest at the Nation's Capital.

Considerable satisfaction is expressed in Washington at the general results on the Ohio convention. In the main, the Ohio platform is a hearty endorsement of the administration and its expressions on the subject of rate legislation are particularly gratifying. The platform would have been even more satisfactory had it endorsed the administration's recommendations in favor of tariff readjustment but it is as a whole, so satisfactory that there is no disposition to criticise its one defect. Secretary Taft's frank statement, made as chairman of the convention, that the majority in Congress will be compelled to take some action with a view to obviating the steady deficit does not agree with that made at St. Louis by Secretary Shaw, recently, when he said, "We are not worried about the deficit," but Mr. Taft's version is the one entertained by the members of his cabinet. Secretary Taft told the Ohio Convention that Congress would have to restore the war taxes, increase the internal revenue taxes, or so readjust the tariff as to augment its revenue producing power.

Speaking to a high protection state like Ohio, Secretary Taft doubtless deemed it wise to go no further than to present the alternatives, but there is no doubt in the minds of those who have discussed the subject recently with Mr. Taft, that he believes the tariff schedules should be readjusted, as do all the Cabinet, except Secretaries Shaw, Wilson and Metcalf, all of whom are invoterate stand patters

There are strong indications that the tariff readjustment policy will receive considerable help from a new and unexpected source, namely from some of the most influential of the protected interests. Several managers of legitimate beneficiaries of the protective tariff have advised the President that their industries are over protected. Paridoxical as they may seem their second statement on the subject seems even more so. They say that there are too large profits in their respective lines. In elucidation of this statement, however they make it clear to anyone who takes the trouble to think. They say that with the tariff so high as to present the alluring possibility of inordinate profits, new and inexperienced business men are prone to rush into the industry and establish small plants which invariably come to financial grief in a short time. Were these little fellows allowed to pass through a period of financial stress, ultimately fail, they would naturally sell their products at reduced prices to secure the much needed "ready cash" and so demoralize the entire market. To avoid this undesirable result, the large producers buy up the smaller and weak competitors and are often compelled to do so at serious loss, because the little fellows invariably overvalue their plant and stock. Moreover, even a fair valuation, these additional plants are seldom worth much more to the larger concerns which are already provided with all the machinery, etc. that they require. To make these purchases the larger concerns are compelled as a rule to issue additional stocks or bonds and these increased liabilities are prejudicial to the interest of the stockholders. Therefore, argue the protected manufacturers, it would be more beneficial were the tariff schedules reduced to a reasonable basis, the overplus of domestic competition curtailed and the market kept steady. It will of course be obvious to the reader that this argument is advanced only by the managers of legitimate manufacturing concerns which makes their profit out of their business and that such reasoning is obnoxious to all of those trusts whose profits are largely comprised of the margins on stock manipulations in Wall Street.

The Senate committee on Interstate Commerce has finally adjourned, after taking testimony on the railway rate question for upward of thirty days, without action. At the executive session of the committee held after the last hearing, however, it was developed that the committee is unanimously opposed to the character of legislation recommended by the President. The committee will meet again two weeks before Congress convenes and will report a bill with which it hopes to head off the passage by the House of a measure in accord with the views of the President. This bill will amplify the Elkins anti-rebate law so as to prevent any possibility of rebates, which curtail the profits of the railroads.

It will place the private car lines under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the results of which will be problematical. It will not delegate to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to a fix maximum rate where the existing rate is found to be unjust and instead of increasing the salaries of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, so that body may be made more efficient, as the President desires, it will diminish the duties of the Commission and makes it less important body.

What will the result be when the irresistible force in the White House meets the immovable force in the Senate, no man can foretell. That will be one of the most extensive subject of speculation throughout the next session and the result promised to be interesting to themselves and in their effect, whatever they may be. Of course the railroad men are delighted with what they are pleased to term a vindication of their opinions, but those who have been long familiar with the committee and its views never anticipated any other result. Strong pressure is being brought to bear on the President to forego his purpose of calling Congress in special session on October 19, but he is "standing pat."

THREE CHILDREN BURNED TO DEATH

Fearful Catastrophe at a Farm House Near Beckman.

FAMILY OF HENRY KERSHMAN

Two Girls and One Boy Incinerated In the Beds at Their Home Last Friday Morning.

Friday morning, June 9th, 1905, about three miles north of Swanton, was a tragedy so harrowingly repellent that it should be if possible neither remembered nor repeated.

Less than a mile west of the "North Glade" church, and on the road of that name, stood the residence of Henry Kershman. Mrs. Kershman was the mother of an infant less than two days old. Two children slept with the parents on the lower floor, while three, a boy and two girls ranging from three to about seven years of age, occupied a bed on the upper floor. As the morning was cool with considerable frost, Mr Kershman kindled a fire in the stove with a pipe running through the building. In a short while, soon after five o'clock in the morning he was horrified by the roar of fire in the roof of his home. Access to the children by the stairway was found to be impossible and the agonized father ran out quickly reached and broke in an upper window through which smoke and flames no man could face and live burst upon him, but he pressed into this devouring blaze and choking smoke calling beseeching to his children while his own hands and face were burning, without hearing an answer or human sound from the consuming fires within.

His burns were most painful, particularly deep and severe on the right hand.

Fortunately at this juncture in the peril, neighbors reached the scene and rescued the ill mother, baby and two children from the falling fires over head, and also succeded in saving a few articles from that room. In an amazingly short time the board structure was in embers and ashes on the ground and when the subsiding heat admitted approach, there side by side, with the wire work of the spring bed on which they slept, were the three charred remnants of what a few minutes, less than an hour, before had been living bodies. These blackened fragments were gathered and placed in a white casket and interred that afternoon in the North Glade cemetery, the Rev. Mr. Price, of the Methodist church, conducting a most reverent and impressive service.

The universal bewilderment of mind and expression of grief manifested by those assembled at this one grave of three young children, beggars mention. Women lost control of their pent-up emotions and strong men ceased for the time to be men and shook convulsively and wept bitterly, while the broken hearted father, with bandaged hand and scarred face, wailed in wild despair. Listening to the lamentations of a father to broken in spirit and blinded in grief to know that justice and mercy may yet appear as spiritual flowers over the ashes of this burning, a fable was recalled, no less suggestive from being a fable: A flute, the story ran, hopelessly complained that it had been lacerated, scraped and gashed until its former shape and self were gone. But a voice exclaimed, "Oh foolish, foolish flute! you know not of what you complain. Before touched by the fashioning hand that gave you such grace and polish, you were but a piece of ebony, common in the general forest. What a transformation now? What you call scraping took away the dross of your being, every laceration is a brace of beauty, and what you call gashes are but the music valves through which the clearest notes and most heavenly harmonies come."

RELLIM.

BLOOMINGTON.

Deputy Sheriff Frantz arrested Charles Morehead, of this place, on last Friday evening and took him to Oakland on warrants sworn out by his wife, charging him with non support and wife beating. His trial came up on Monday before Squire Teats, of Oakland, who held him for the grand jury.

Mrs. Niland, of Savage, wife of Supervisor Niland of the W. Va. C. R. R., and Mrs. Radcliffe, wife of Engineer John Radcliffe, of the same place, were in town visiting friends on Saturday.

Misses Hana and Myrtle Wagner, of Westernport, are guests of Misses Lotta Alma Kemp.

Saturday, June 10, was pay day at the Davis Coal and Coke Co's mines.

The Red Devils, a junior base ball team of Bloomington, met the Franklin nine at Pea Vine Park on last Saturday afternoon, and had an easy time defeating that team. Score 17 to 1.

Mr. Russell Pattison, the batting pitcher of the Cumberland team, was home over Sunday.

Mr. Joseph Tibbett, mine boss of Montgomery's Run, six-foot, was the guest of relatives on Sunday.

Rev. and Mrs. J. A. McClelland will arrive in Oakland on Friday next and will go to housekeeping in the manse on Third street.

OAKLAND HOTEL OPENED FOR GUESTS TO DAY.

Great Improvements Made to the House and Grounds by the Lessees.

SEASON WILL BE A GOOD ONE

The Hotel Renovated From Cellar to Attic and the Grounds Are More Beautiful Than Ever Before, Due to the Efforts of Messrs. Eckles & Devries.

The famous Oakland Hotel, which formerly enjoyed the patronage of prominent people from all sections of the United States who came here to seek health and derive physical benefit from the climate and pure air will regain its lost prestige and notoriety as the leading summer hotel of the country if labor and a desire to have everything in prime condition count for anything, for during the past sixty days a vast amount of work has been done at the hotel by the new proprietors, Messrs. G. W. Eckles and C. K. Devries, who have leased the property for a term of years.

The hotel opened this morning for the reception of guests and by reports gathered from the proprietors a most successful season awaits them.

During the past two months a large force of men have been engaged in making necessary repairs to the building besides laying new carpets in all the rooms on the first and second floors, revarnishing and repairing the furniture in all parts of the house and in many other ways makng the property more pleasing to the eye.

In the large lobby the greatest improvement may be noticed. This room has been newly papered with a design in keeping with its surroundings. The dining room has been newly furnished with a specially designed service of china and linen while in the culinary and pastry departments everything has been replaced with new material.

In addition to this the front of the building and the veranda running its entire length, has been freshened up with paint which in itself adds greatly to the property.

A large and strong storage tank for water has been erected on the hill in the rear of the hotel from which the supply of water for bathing, culinary and housekeeping purpores will be drawn. Its location is such that water is now furnished to every floor in the hotel

The grounds fronting the building have been trimmed up, the grass mowed smoothly and a large number of flowers have been set out in the beds bordering the driveways leading to the front entrance.

The REPUBLICAN, along with the rest of the citizens of Oakland wish the proprietors all the success they so richly deserve for their unceasing labor and faith in the town as a summer resort of more than ordinary merit.

G. A. R. Day at Friendsville.

The following communication concerning the Decoration Day services at Friendsville, was delayed in the mails which explains its late appearance in these columns:

Sherman Post No. 11, G. A. R., Department of Maryland, held its Memorial services at Friendsville on the 30th. The Post assembled at the school house and then marched to the M. E. church, the Sunday school scholars joining in the procession. Short addresses in the morning and afternoon were made by the ministers of the town and vicinity and by Prof. Loraditch, of the manual training school. A literary and musical program was rendered. There were sixteen old soldiers present at the services. During the past year five members of the Post died. The graves of fifty four soldiers were decorated by a detail from the Post.

WILD GAME AND THE GAME LAWS

When Panthers and Wolves Were Numerous.

THE WOLF'S DREAD OF IRON.

Every Description of Game Becoming Scarcer—Fish Also Becoming Extinct—Laws to Save and Protect Them—Difficulty in Enforcing Same.

The game and fish problem of the State of Maryland is one of considerable import to the people of the State, especially, Allegany county. The fact that game and fish are becoming scarcer each year, does not lessen the interest on the subject, but increases it rather. The State, through its agents under the laws, is doing all she can to check the dimunition.

It might be a matter of interest to many people to know something of the laws of the State on the subject, especially the local laws of Allegany and Garrett counties. The first was a general law for the State for the preservation of wild deer, passed in 1785; five years before Allegany county was organized. The next general law was passed in 1789, chapter 5. Next the act of 1795, chapter 46. This was for the preservation of deer in Washington and Allegany counties by prohibiting them from being killed, except in Augest, September, October, November and December. This law contained severe penalties for its violatian. Later laws added further limits to the time when deer could be legally taken. Now the limit is from 15th of October to the first of the following year. The purpose of the early legislation was to preserve the deer hunters from killing that game out of the natural season.

The worst animal enemies to the deer were the wolves and panthers. So the next legislation was for their destruction. Large premiums were offered for their scalps. At one time the rate for a wolf $30, and for a panther $15. No more legislation in behalf of the deer till the act of 1833, chapter 203. A local law for Allegany county of 1862, chapter 239, fixed the rate of a wolf's scalp at $20, and a panther at $5, a wild cat $1.50 and a fox $1.00. It can here be stated truthfully, that there has not been a wolf seen or taken in Garrett county where they were formerly so numerous and destructive, for 25 years. The same thing as to the panther. The last one known was killed while he was feasting upon a deer he had killed near the old Shade Mills in the county named. The taxpayers therein have been relieved of a considerable burden on this line.

Holmes Wiley, a noted hunter and trapper in his day, received one year over $100 for the scalps of an old female wolf with a half dozen pups. A large day's work. He had a theory about the disappearance of the wolves, that when the B. & O. Railroad Company built its road over the mountains the iron rails drove the wolves away. They were afraid to cross or approach the iron track. It is a known fact that a wolf is always in a great fear of iron, hence the difficulty of capturing in a trap of that metal. The trap needed to be covered with water or something else to deceive the wary animal. The present costs for scalps, foxes and wild cats in Garrett county, is only about $250 per year. Allegany about the same as in Garrett county.

The high rate for the scalps of wolves and panthers have a two fold purpose: First to protect game, and second domestic animals; such as sheep, lambs, hogs, calves, etc. Wolves and panthers were lovers of mutton, venison and the like. A pack of wolves would sometimes kill half a flock of sheep, much more than wanted at the time, but the insiduous panther would be contented with one victim, and would hide it away for future meals.

There has been a great deal of legislation in our State both of a general and local character. The act of 1896, chapter 293, the following for its title, which will explain it: An act to provide for the appointment of a game warden and deputy game wardens. And to provide for a more vigorous enforcement of the game and fish laws of this State." This is the first and only law on this subject, and Col. Jno. W. Avirett, of this city, is the efficient incumbent. He is having a considerable amount of combatism with the violators of the game and fish laws.

The local game and fish laws for the two counties are as follows: For Alleganv, the Act of 1870, Chaper 310, 1872, Chapter 18; 1878, Chapter 408; 1884, Chapter 137. Birds and game: 1896, Chapter 36; 1902, Chapters 279 and 179. Fish and fishing: 1902, Chapters 274 and 543. Fishing regulated, 1904, Chapters 372 and 617.

Garrett county—Birds, 1896, Chapter 4; 1894, Chapter 640; 1900, Chapter 189. Birds and game: 1902, Chapter 116. Game laws amended. Space and time would not allow these many laws to be set out in anything like fullness but they can be easily referred to and read.

Notwithstanding these drastic laws game and fish have been on the decline in the counties mentioned. Garrett county, which in time past, was the very garden of deer, does not now have one unless it be a tramp. All gone on account of different causes, among them the noises of the different railroads and steam saw mills. They are extremely sensitive and fearful of loud shrieking noises they will leave their old haunts on these occasions.

The building of the West Virginia Central railroad through immense forests of heavy timber for many miles, causes the deer to retire to more quiet and safer grounds. The deer is deemed to be the wildest of all animals, yet they are the easiest tamed and domesticated. This I know from an experiment long years ago. Still there are a few deer left in the mountains in the lower end of Allegany county and on the Pennsylvania side of the line, also over in West Virginia. Last season Merchant Edward Neff, of our city handled 18 undressed deer from the regions mentioned, but his dealings on this line grow less year by year.

There are in existence stringent laws in Garrett county for the preservation of game, but still the bird kind is becoming scarcer each passing year. Very few turkeys left, pheasants much fewer, partridges about gone, squirrels diminishing like the rest, though there appears to be less hunting than in former times. Fish are rapidly diminishing, notwithstanding the replenishing process. Polluted streams, the cause. Fish can no more live in polluted waters than human beings in poisoned atmosphere. But there are animals of the non-game kind, which do not appear to diminish as wished; such as foxes, polecats, minks and wild cats. They destroy hundreds if not thousands of dollars worth of property, much more than their scalps cost the county. Last season an enterprising poultry producer of Garrett county lest her whole turkey flock, as well as many chickens, from nightly raids of foxes and skunks. These "varmints," with the hawks, are great drawback to the success of the poultry business, a profitable one in the absence of these night enemies.

Now, a word about the wild pigeon, which in times past were so numerous in all this region of country, especially in Garrett county. They were beyond enumeration or even estimate. In the year 1870 they were unusually plentiful, but they suddenly and wholely disappeared that season. None as a flock ever since. No one now seems to know what became of them. It was said at that time a great many of them died from some disease at a great roosting place near Swanton. They were a migratory bird. In the summer season they lived in a cool climate, and in winter in a warm one. More than any other birds they live and stay in large flocks.

BREAD ON THE WATERS

By A. M. Davies Ogden

Copyright, 1904, by A. M. Davies Ogden

As the footman turned to come down the steps after leaving the cards he had held Miss Mallory leaned back in the victoria with a sigh of relief. It had been a long, tiresome afternoon, but she had used her last card now, and, these people being fortunately "out," she would go home and forget her thoughts, for somehow Roland Humason had been much in her mind lately. Strange that after three years of absence the recollection of his clear dark eyes and clean cut features should linger thus vividly. And again Miss Mallory sighed.

Why had he gone so suddenly and sent no word? Looking up to give the order for home, the girl suddenly became aware of a woman standing but a few feet away with gaze hungrily fixed upon herself. As their eyes met the woman came slowly forward.

"Will you lend me $5?" she asked abruptly. The voice was sweet and well modulated, as Miss Mallory noted through her surprise. Nor did the woman's appearance suggest that of a beggar. The girl hesitated. She had always been cautioned not to give in the street. "Indiscriminate giving is the ruin of many," was her father's dictum. Yet in this case there was a curious, half wild look in the woman's eyes, as though she were enduring some strain almost beyond her strength, and Miss Mallory felt her sympathies quicken. Roland Humason would give his money. He never refused to help a woman even while he laughed at himself for a credulous simpleton. Swayed by an uncomprehended impulse, the girl pulled out a crisp five dollar bill.

"Take it," she said gently. Into the tired face opposite leaped a light of wonder, almost fear; then the tense lines relaxed.

"Thank you," was the simple response, but Miss Mallory could feel all that was compressed into the words. "I will send it back. You shall see But you must give me your name."

More to humor her than from any expectation of receiving the money, Miss Mallory glanced into her cardcase. It was as she thought. Her own cards were all gone. Hastily pulling out one of her father's cards, she scribbled her name and address on the back and held it toward the woman.

"Here," she said kindly. Then, with a nod to the expectant footman, who stood watching with severe disapproval, they were gone, while the woman, the slow tears welling into her tired eyes, turned steadily in the direction of the nearest ferry.

"WILL YOU LEND ME $5?" SHE ASKED ABRUPTLY.

All through dinner and into the next day the woman's face haunted Miss Mallory with a strange persistency. She could not feel that she had done wrong. If ever person looked in need of help that woman had done so. The girl was conscious only of a regret for not having questioned her, tried to find out something about her that real assistance might be rendered. But there had been an air about the stranger, suppliant though she was, which forbade intrusion upon her personality.

Lying near the window in the gathering dusk, Miss Mallory let her fancy wander whither it would, wondering a little at the odd tangle in her thoughts which seemed somehow to link this woman to Roland Humason, and then, looking up, she saw him coming across the room to her. For a moment she stared, incredulous, but his warm hand clasp was very real.

"The butler told me that I should find you here," he exclaimed in a glad voice. "Oh, how good it is to see you again!" The girl, recovering, drew her hands away.

"How do you do?" she said, with chilly civility. The man's expression changed.

"Pardon me," he returned more formally. "The excitement of being here must have gone to my head." Miss Mallory's lip curled.

"There can hardly be much excitement in doing what you could have done any day in the last three years," she declared a bit disdainfully. Humason's color deepened.

"No," he said simply, "you are wrong. I have not been in New York. Three years ago my father died," he added, meeting the surprised question in her eyes. "It changed all my life. I found myself with my mother and a widowed sister to care for, left with barely a pittance. It was necessary I should try at least to carry on the old business at home. I came to bid you goodby, and you were out. And what could I have said? You, beautiful, courted, the only child of an indulgent father, I merely one of the many who surrounded you. How could I dream that you would ever spare me even a thought? So I went away, resolved to forget. And then"—

"Yes," queried the girl as he paused, "and then?" Her eyes were hidden, but there was a note in the soft voice that aroused his courage.

"I found out that I could not forget," said the man. "Yet what claim had I? And then, yesterday—oh, how can I thank you properly?" he broke off earnestly. "Yesterday—the woman you helped—she was my sister"—speaking with steady tone. "Not long ago her child died, and, half mad from the loss, she came to the city, resolved to destroy herself here, where we would not know of it. But when she reached New York the commonplace, everyday aspect of things seemed to calm her mood, and her resolution faltered. Yet she had expended what money she had, not even the price of a ticket home being left. Determining to put fate to the test, she wandered about, seeking a familiar face—my sister alone in this great city, where she knew no one—resolved, should her plea for help be refused, to put an end to her life. And then she saw you."

For a moment the man was silent as a shudder seized him at the thought of what might have happened.

"Oh, if she had not met you—if— But I dare not think of it. I—I have a photograph of you. I bribed your maid for it," he confessed shamefacedly. "From having seen it so often my sister felt vaguely that here at last was a friend, although, of course, unwitting why. And so she dared to ask." Miss Mallory, who was sobbing unrestrainedly, lifted her face.

"Oh, the dear woman!" she exclaimed brokenly. "How glad I am! How glad I am! And is she safe?"

"Quite safe," was the thankful answer. "The shock, your kindness, something, must have strengthened and braced her. She returned last night. And you can fancy what it meant to us. But when she showed me the blessed card which told me who it was that had saved her it seemed to me as if I also had been sent a message. Was I wrong, dear?" and the man's voice was wonderfully tender. The girl, puzzled, shook her head.

"I don't understand," she said faintly. Humason laid a visiting card in her hand.

"Look!" he said. It was the card upon which she had scribbled her address. "Turn it over," as the girl seemed bewildered. A low cry broke from the red lips.

"Oh," she stammered, while the color flooded up to her pretty curly hair. "I—I was in a hurry. I thought that it was one of father's. I"— Her confusion increased pitiably. But the man's strong clasp had again caught the fluttering little hands.

"I thought that if you had cared enough to carry a man's card in your cardcase for three years that you must have cared a little for the man himself," he said eagerly. "Was I wrong, sweetheart? Are you going to send me away again?"

The girl, her eyes fixed on the betraying bit of pasteboard whereon in fine script ran the words, "Mr. Roland Humason," drooped her head.

"No," she answered shyly. "Please—please stay."

Too Much For the Cook.

He was a new waiter in a downtown restaurant, and after he had waited on a man who was seated at one of the tables the other noon he went behind the cold lunch counter to eat his own dinner. Presently he dropped down from his stool and whistled up the tube to the cook on the second floor. "Where's that pie I ordered?" he asked. "Hurry it up." The cook's reply could not be heard. He was evidently a suspicious cook, and he provoked the new waiter. The volley the latter fired into the tin funnel sounded like a bunch of firecrackers going off in a barrel. "Heavens!" he spluttered. "Did you think I wanted it for myself? I haven't been here long, but I've seen your pies. I haven't been disappointed in love, and I haven't got any domestic troubles. When I'm desperate, I'll take something easier to swallow than one of your pies. There's a customer here waiting for it. He's no friend of mine or I'd switch him off on to crackers and cheese. You'll know me better if I don't get discharged." The pie came down with a rattle, and the new waiter resumed his meal.—Providence Journal.

Gems and Their Days.

In the old mystic books of the ancients it is found that they believed in the power of precious stones to bring good fortune through planetary affinities of certain days. They imagined that gems as well as metals were produced through the chemical operations of the planets working secretly in the body of the earth. Therefore certain stones must be worn on certain days of the week for good luck.

The table of stones as given by the Hermetic brethren is as follows:

Sunday, the sun's day, gold and all yellow stones.

Monday, the moon's day, pearls and all white stones except diamonds.

Tuesday, Mars' or Tyr's day, rubies.

Wednesday, Woden's day, sapphires and all blue stones.

Thursday, Thor's day, garnet and all red stones except rubies.

Friday, Freja's day, emeralds and all green stones.

Saturday, Saturn's day, diamonds.

Bowser vs. Poor Food

He Gets Excited After Reading a Commissioner's Report on the Subject

STARTS A CAMPAIGN

Visits the Butcher and Grocer---Has a Struggle With the Coal Man.

MR. BOWSER had come home in good nature and eaten a hearty dinner and found no fault, and Mrs. Bowser was paving the way to ask him to drop into a neighbor's with her for an hour or two when he opened his evening paper and had scarcely glanced at the headings when he exclaimed:

"By John, but they are at it again, are they!"

"What is it?" was asked.

"Did you read this report of the pure food commission?"

"No."

"Well, there are about a thousand men in this country who ought to be hung up by the neck without trial. The commission reports that out of fifty-two articles of food examined each and every one was adulterated. They did not find one single sample of beer, wine or whisky that was pure. Sugar, flour, coffee, tea, milk—all were adulterated, and some of the jams and preserves were positively injurious to health. I say that these rascals ought to be hanged."

"SIR, I AM OBLIGED TO CALL YOU A SCOUNDREL!"

"Aren't there laws against adulteration?" asked Mrs. Bowser.

"Of course there are laws, but the scoundrels manage to evade them in one way or another, and they will continue to do so until more radical measures are taken. Every householder ought to go for them with an ax."

"I wouldn't get excited about it if I were you."

"How can I help it? Here is a case where they found ten pounds of bone dust in fifty pounds of flour and another where a package of supposed Java coffee contained not one ounce of the real thing. Can I help but get excited when I read these things? Who knows what bones were ground up in that flour? Why, by thunder, they may have been the bones of that old horse that fell dead at our gate last summer."

"It is dreadful, but I don't see what you can do about it."

"And how much of that impure food comes into this house, Mrs. Bowser—how much? You do all the marketing, and do you ever take any pains to find out what is pure and what is poisoned?"

"How can I? We want oatmeal, and I buy a package. We want sugar and flour, and I buy them. How can I tell whether they have been adulterated or not?"

"How can you? How can you? But it is your business to find out these things. Say, now, there's the keynote of the whole thing."

"What things?"

"The way I've been feeling for the last five years. I've laid it to rheumatism and a dozen other things, and I've been examined by doctors and paid out hundreds of dollars, and nothing has helped me because I've been a victim of food poison all the time. The puzzle is solved at last."

"But I've eaten just what you have and have felt no ill effects," she answered.

"That's nothing to do with it. Because you have a stomach like a horse it don't follow that I must have. Yes, Mrs. Bowser, for years and years you have been poisoning me with the food brought into this house. And there's another thing—how much clear bone has been contained in the meat brought into this house in the last year?"

"Why, how should I know?"

"But it is your business to know. You have a set of scales in the kitchen. Has the butcher worked off a ton of clear bone on you in the last twelve months—bone that we have had to pay for at the rate of 20 cents a pound?"

"You never told me to weigh the bone, and you know that no butcher will sell meat without some bone."

"Mrs. Bowser, it was your business as overseer of this house to weigh that bone and keep track of the amount, and that you have not done so proves that you have no care for my purse. Did you ever ask the grocer whether the flour you were ordering was pure or mixed with bone dust?"

"I—I don't remember."

"Did you ever throw out a hint that if we found sand in the sugar it would be the last order he would get?"

"No. He would have felt insulted."

"Insulted be hanged! I'll make a little trip around this neighborhood and see who'll feel insulted. By the seven wall eyed cats, but if they think I'm going to stand for such things they'll have their eyes opened!"

"What's the use of going around and raising a fuss when you know it can't do any good? Let the government get after these men and punish them as they deserve."

"I'll show you what good it'll do, and I am no man to wait for the government when a thing is to be done."

"Mr. Bowser, you are foolish. If you will wait"—

But he wouldn't. He pulled on his overcoat, and away he went. The butcher was the first one visited. He was leaning on his cleaver and wondering how many of the heads of the Chicago meat trust would be sent to jail when Mr. Bowser blew in and began:

"Sir, I have paid you hundreds and hundreds of dollars this last year for bones—the bones of cows, steers, sheep and hogs—and I'll be hanged if you get another cent out of me! You either send me clear meat or you get no more of my custom."

"You give me a pain, Bowser."

"What's that? Don't think to turn me off that way, sir. What with the adulterated food sold on every side and the old bones you ring in on us the people are being regularly highway robbed. If others want to stand it, well and good, but don't try it on me any longer. I'm patient and long suffering, but there comes a time at last when the worm turns."

"You'd better buy liver all the time. There's no bone in that."

"And you'd better go out of the scoundrel business before you bring up in state's prison! When I want liver, sir, I will buy liver. Good night, sir!"

There was no doubt in Mr. Bowser's mind that he had given the butcher a good polishing off and there would be no more bone sent with his orders, and his next visit was to the grocer's. He was given a pleasant good evening, but in response he replied:

"Sir, have you got one single article of food or drink in this shebang which is not adulterated?"

"I think so."

"Well, I don't. You, sir, have been killing me by slow degrees for the last five years. Every article Mrs. Bowser has ordered from you has sapped at my health. You have known right along that you had bone dust in your flour, sand in your sugar and chicory in your coffee, and yet you have warranted them pure and wholesome. Sir, I am obliged to call you a scoundrel!"

"There are certain things I can recommend," quickly replied the grocer, who knew pretty well how to take Bowman.

"I don't believe it. I don't believe you can show one thing which some unhung scoundrel has not tampered with.

"There are the potatoes, turnips and onions."

"Don't beg the question, sir. I called here to say that the next time you send me adulterated goods I will take your trail and follow it until the doors of prison close upon you."

"I will try to do better, Mr. Bowser."

"See that you do, sir—see that you do. It is only now and then that I take the law into my own hands, but when I do such men as you want to look out for me. Don't drive me to the dead line, sir."

There was another place to be visited, and Mr. Bowser walked in on the coal man, who was at work on his books, and said:

"Sir, in the last year you have cheated me out of hundreds of dollars by sending me short weight."

"Sir," replied the coal man as he laid down his pen, "you are an infernal liar!"

"What! What!"

"An infernal liar, sir!"

They went outdoors together and had a struggle for life. At the finis of it Mr. Bowser was borne homeward at the hands of two men, and when they reached the front door one of them said to Mrs. Bowser, who answered the ring:

"Are you the wife of Mr. Bowser?"

"Yes, sir."

"Short, fat, baldheaded man who is always kicking?"

"Yes."

"Then here he is, and you'd better take him in at once." M. QUAD.

The Negro Will Not Return to Africa

By BOOKER T. WASHINGTON

ESCHEW cheap jewels. Quit taking five dollar buggy rides on $6 a week. Don't put a five dollar hat on a five cent head. Get a bank account. GET A HOME of your own. GET SOME PROPERTY. Get a start in the world in some way. What good is it to northern negroes that they live in cities with paved streets if they don't OWN anything? Don't be satisfied with the shadows of civilization; get some of the SUBSTANCE. Just as soon as we do we will be recognized and encouraged whether we are in the north or south. These are SOME of things our people should remember.

Now, some people are bold enough to say that there is not room enough in this country for the negro and that the best thing he can do is to return to Africa. The negro race is not preparing to go to Africa. WE SHALL REMAIN HERE. Whatever problems grow out of our presence will have to be worked out between the white race and ours.

I BELIEVE THERE IS COMMON SENSE ENOUGH AMONG THE AMERICAN PEOPLE AND FAIRNESS ENOUGH TO ENABLE THE TWO RACES TO LIVE SIDE BY SIDE AND WORK OUT OUR DESTINY.

LET THEM SNEER AT ACCUMULATED WEALTH, BUT I SAY THE ONLY EVIL MILLION IS THE IDLE MILLION.

By Rev. Dr. LYMAN ABBOTT

WEALTH AND SELF SATISFACTION ARE THE MOST DANGEROUS THINGS IN LIFE.

I do not mean that we should shun worldly goods, but that man is to be pitied who finds his pleasure ONLY in wealth. I do not mean that we should go around with long faces all the time, but he who does not know SOMETHING of the sorrows of life and of the sorrows in the lives of others is not a true man. I do not mean that we should never be content with our lot in life, but we should ALWAYS BE STRIVING FORWARD, never satisfied with what we have achieved.

A Poem for Today

A DAILY POEM FOR LOVERS

By Leigh Hunt

IF you become a nun, dear,
A friar I will be;
In any cell you run, dear,
Pray look behind for me.
The roses all turn pale, too;
The doves all take the veil, too;
The blind will see the show;
What! you become a nun, my dear,
I'll not believe it, no!

If you become a nun, dear,
The bishop Love will be;
The Cupids every one, dear,
Will chant, "We trust in thee!"
The incense will go sighing,
The candles fall a-dying,
The water turn to wine,
What! you go take the vows, my dear?
You may—but they'll be mine.

A Poem for Today

SHE WAS NOT FAIR

By Bryan Waller Procter

LORD JEFFREY, the eminent critic, wrote thus of Bryan Waller Procter (Barry Cornwall): "If it be the peculiar province of poetry to give delight, this author should rank very high among our poets. And, in spite of his neglect of the terrible passions, he does rank very high, in our estimation. He has a beautiful fancy and a beautiful diction and a fine ear for the music of verse and great tenderness and delicacy of feeling. The character of his poetry is to soothe and melt and delight, to make us kind and thoughtful and imaginative, to purge away the dross of our earthly passions by the refining fires of a pure imagination." Procter was born in 1787 and died in 1874. He was the father of Adelaide Anne Procter.

SHE was not fair, nor full of grace,
Nor crowned with thought or aught beside;
Nor wealth had she of mind or face,
To win our love or raise our pride;
No lover's thought her cheek did touch;
No poet's dream was round her thrown;
And yet we miss her,—ah, too much,
Now—she hath flown!

We miss her when the morning calls,
As one that mingled in our mirth;
We miss her when the evening falls,—
A trifle wanted on the earth!
Some fancy small, or subtle thought,
Is checked ere to its blossom grown;
Some chain is broken that we wrought,
Now—she hath flown!

No solid good, nor hope defined,
Is marred, now she has sunk in night;
And yet the strong immortal Mind
Is stopped in its triumphant flight!
Perhaps some grain lost to its sphere
Might cast the great Sun from his throne;
For all we know is—"She was here,"
And—"She hath flown!"

Sherman's March Held Up

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

March 19, 1865

[Copyright, 1905, by G. L. Kilmer.]

"THE bravest deed of individual valor that came to my notice during the whole war," said the late General Henry W. Slocum, "was performed by a soldier in the ranks. It was at Bentonville, N. C., the last battle of Sherman's army, fought on the 19th of March, 1865.

"On the march through the Carolinas from Savannah toward Goldsboro I commanded the left wing of Sherman's army and General Howard the right. We traveled upon roads many miles apart. That was the stage of the great march which was to unite the army of the west with that of the east in front of Richmond. That union of the forces once effected the Confederacy would be doomed. On the 15th of March we brushed General Hardee's Confederates out of Averysboro after a lively skirmish, and Sherman was of the opinion that Hardee would not stop again until he reached Raleigh.

"Directing me to reach the Neuse river the following day, Sherman left me on the morning of the 19th to join Howard. At that moment there were some skirmishing and light cannonading on my front, but Sherman thought it trivial, for he said that I had nothing to oppose me but a little cavalry. The Confederate skirmishers soon gave way, and I sent an aid to ride after Sherman and tell him that I should not need assistance, but would be at the Neuse river on time.

"Just about that time one of my officers brought before me a young man dressed in Confederate gray. He was haggard and sickly looking, the reason for which was soon made known. He had been very anxious to see me, and after much begging on his part his guardians had gratified him. In answer to my questions he said he had originally been in the Federal army; that while on a scouting expedition he had been captured and narrowly missed summary death as a spy. To save his life, or at least escape the horrors of a prison dungeon, he had enlisted in the Confederate service with the intention of deserting to his own at the first chance.

"I had met such characters before and was skeptical. He told me that he had enlisted at Syracuse, N. Y., and had been in the service all through the war. I was a resident of Syracuse myself, but did not recognize the man. However, Major William G. Tracy of my staff came up and saw in the 'galvanized Yank' a soldier who had enlisted with him in the Third New York volunteers in 1861. His name was John T. Williams. Having established confidence, Williams said, 'There is a very large Confederate force immediately in your front, all under command of General Joe Johnston.' He added that Johnston had made a speech to his army that morning, and the officers had told the men that it was 'old Joe's' intention to smash my column before support could reach it and then go for Howard's.

"Of course I was sorry I had sent the message to Sherman stating that I needed no help and remedied the blunder at once by sending a second message. This was carried by a boy member of my staff, Lieutenant Joseph B. Foraker. As he started off I said to him, 'Ride well to the right and don't let the enemy get you, and, above all, don't spare horseflesh.' He rode like Paul Revere on his famous gallop from Boston to Lexington and reached Sherman's camp just at sundown. Sherman immediately started a column to my aid.

"Lieutenant Foraker had scarcely got out of sight of my camp when the Confederates advanced with terrific force and drove back my leading division. Johnston had under him that day the best fighting army of Confederates in the field at that time. General Hardee's division had been in front of us at Savannah and all the way through the Carolinas, but there had been no fierce fighting. So it was fresh. General Bragg had brought down Hoke's splendid division of veterans from the Army of Northern Virginia. These troops had left the trenches at Petersburg the December previous and had been lying idle at Wilmington, and they were fresh.

"There was also a division under General A. P. Stewart from Hood's old Tennessee command, men who had a good share of pluck left or they would not have made their way from Louisiana to the coast in search of more fighting. Besides that, there was a splendid body of cavalry under General Wade Hampton, comprising General Joe Wheeler's corps and the division of General M. C. Butler, that had fought under Jeb Stuart and Hampton in Virginia. The force was about 20,000 men. They fought like an army of 40,000, for their leaders had filled them with the hope that Sherman would be given a crushing blow if they destroyed me there at Bentonville.

"The battle took place in a dense thicket, which was very favorable to me, for it offered cover to my troops and enabled them to throw up hasty breastworks out of view of the enemy. Johnston's guns were well served, and the valor of his soldiers in charging my lines would have counted for more had his columns not been broken in passing through the thicket. As it was, they charged again and again until a late hour. When night came on I had my army well in hand and intrenched. Still I had a strong foe in my front and could not keep my engagement to meet Sherman on the Neuse river next day. The fierceness of the battle confirmed the story of the deserter Williams that the enemy had made every preparation to smash me, and, while I might have ignored the warning and attempted to cut my way through, I thought it was a time when I could afford to be too slow rather than too fast and not risk another Bull's Bluff disaster.

"The idea is generally accepted that the march of Sherman through the Carolinas at that time, threatening to come up in the rear of Lee's army along the James and catch it between two fires, decided the issue between Lee and Grant and led to the surrender at Appomattox. That view of the case makes it plain that a blow like the one Johnston would have been able to strike had I not been warned of his presence and continued my march with the columns strung out would have been a terrible disaster just at that time.

"Williams was the hero of that crisis, and he took his life in his hands in more respects than one when he set out from the Confederate camps to warn me of my danger. There was firing going on between the Confederate skirmishers and ours. Of course a man risked his life passing between the lines. Besides, if discovered by the southern people while getting away they would shoot him down, and the northerners would do the same unless they understood his signals. It was most fortunate for Williams as well as for my army and the cause that he happened to run right into the arms of an old fellow soldier, so that the identification of him and acceptance of his story did not take five minutes. For his own safety he might better have waited until the battle was on before attempting to rejoin his old friends, if that was his sole object. It would have been an easy matter then, but he was true to the flag and his former calling of scout. Having learned vital news for the Federal commander, he risked his life to carry it to the opposing camp.

"The dispatching of Foraker to Sherman for help was the next act in the drama, and after a night march Sherman came up with Logan's corps and joined me on the battlefield at Bentonville the morning of March 20. As soon as he arrived we developed the enemy's lines and found them very strong, as Williams reported, but when we began to push things Johnston discovered that he was just a day too late, for Sherman's army was united. He then retreated hastily toward Raleigh."

Two days later Lee attempted to break Grant's hold on Petersburg by a night sortie. He failed and attempted to back off and march south to meet Johnston. That plan Sheridan foiled at Five Forks on April 1. So the game was up for the southern Confederacy.

Williams' name does not appear on the list of winners of medals of honor. He was in the service all through the war, having re-enlisted at the expiration of his first term. He returned to Syracuse to engage in business, in which he met with varying fortunes.

War Motor Car.

The Austrian war department has just sanctioned the construction of an armored motor car specially designed to carry a quick firing gun, mounted on a pivot, capable of being raised or lowered and turning in all directions. The driver's seat is also so arranged that it can be lowered sufficiently to sink the man below the line of fire. Heavy haulage work, such as that of stores, munitions and even heavy guns, is already done by motor in the Austrian army.

OF INTEREST TO MANUFACTURERS

Perhaps no class of people, the farmer not excepted, has a greater interest in highway improvement than those engaged in industrial enterprise. If the common roads of the country were brought to a condition that would enable farmers to market their products at all seasons of the year, the cost of living in town and city would be greatly lessened, and discontent among laboring people and operatives in industrial concerns would largely decrease if it did not entirely disappear.

Why and how?

Present road conditions compel farmers to rush their products to market as soon as harvested, when the roads are at their best, as by waiting a convenient time they may not get there at all. If one farmer must do this, his neighbors must do likewise. This naturally congests the market, forcing low prices to the great detriment of the producer and without benefit to the consumer, because the average family in town or city buys only a small quantity at one time, say a day's or a week's supply.

What is the result?

The speculator, finding prices low and knowing in a little while the bad-road season will be on when competing products will be kept away from trade centers, buys up the surplus and stores it away for the day which he knows is surely coming when he can demand and received his own price for his holding—the stuff for which men toil; which they are compelled to have. And when the citizen in town, the mechanic and operative of the shops and factories, is forced in winter and spring to pay exorbitant prices for those articles of household necessity which went begging for buyers at low prices the preceding fall, he figures the increased cost of living in comparison and grows restless and discontented and is easily led into strikes and other labor disturbances. We all know what usually follows.

This, of course, is not all that enters into strike causes, but it contributes a full share. It ought to be perfectly plain to American manfacturers that the continuous, orderly operation of industrial business depends on measurably contented operatives; that men are never contented when the cost of living is above their eanring capacity; and that prices of food stuff from the farm would be always at decent living level to all concerned if we had systematically improved highways over which farmers could travel to market any day in the year. These farmers would realize better prices for their products than they do and still be able to sell to all classes of consumers at lower prices than is forced by speculators in bad-roads season. If this position is sound, then the duty of manufacturers seems to be to lend their every influence to the support of the Brownlow-Latimer bills which seek to bring about systematic and scientific highway construction and improvement in co-operation with the States. It is no less in their own interest than that of the farmers', who are their best patrons after all. And it is no less the interest of all consumers of farm products in every town and city in the Unied States, and of every railroad and other corporation employed labor of any kind, and of every railroad and building contractor and others having men in their employ.

We are advised that Hon. W. P. Brownlow, member of Congress from Tennessee, is desirous of hearing from manufactures on this question and will appreciate any expression of ylews thereon that may be sent to him at Washington.

BITTINGER.

On last Monday afternoon Constable Stahl, of Grantsville, came to this place and took into custody Walter Facenbaker and Jack Thustin and conveyed his prisoners to Grantsville for a hearing before 'Squire Nathan upon a criminal charge.

Miss Ida Ralston went to Oakland last Saturday where she will enter as a student in the Oakland Normal school for the remainder of the summer term.

Mrs. William Cunningham, who has been ailing for some days, is reported to be better at this writing.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter G. Stark and son George were shopping at Jennings last Monday.

Mr. Lewis Mullinburg, the traveling saddler, was a caller in town early this week.

Mr. Samuel Broadwater, of the New Germany settlement, was seen on our streets last Monday.

Rev. Shoup recently purchased a driving horse from Mr. Cyrus Stark.

Miss Ruth Shoup accompanied her father, Rev. Shoup, on his visit to the Meadow Mountain appointment last Sunday.

Miss Savannah Tressler, of Grantsville, was a pleasant visitor in our midst last Sabbath.

Your regular correspondent at Bittinger has of late been "busy here and there," and our items have slept by him unreported.

It was especially desired by our community that the great world around us should know what fine things we achieved on Memorial Day. It was all new to this "neck o' woods," but the community did itself proud on the occasion. For, notwithstanding the day was somewhat rainy, there was really a great concourse of people. The G. A. R. ritual, both in cemetery and church, was quite fully rendered and well received. The song "Maryland, my Maryland" was especially commended, and your townsman, Rev. E. Manges of the Lutheran church, gave us a beautiful Memorial address. Both the tender and patriotic sentiment of his address and his very genial and brotherly disposition will always make him a welcome visitor among us.

But the "Old Boys," Mr. Editor, they were a frisky ten, and stepped out cavalierly. Ice cream, coffee and sandwiches were just in their line, and some of the old camp spirit was manifested. Had a couple stout blankets been at hand, a little hazing might have been indulged in. The younger sports saw clearly that it will not do to be too free with the "Lads of Uncle Abraham." But peace reign in the camp. Memorial Day is an established institution at Bittinger. Only three mounds in our "Gottes Acher" claim the flag as yet but other candidates for this proud distinction are waiting 'round, and in the years to come the memorial flags will multiply.

SCRIBBLER JUNIOR.

Fourth of July at Bittinger.

To the Editor of The Republican:

We Bittingerites want to say, and say it loud, to all the rest of Garrett county, that nothing will be doing all over our wide and hilly heritage on the coming 4th of July only just right here.

We shall have the whole Independence Day outfit, including the band wagon, and whoso cometh hither shall feel no pangs of disappointment.

Our dominie is in correspondence with a brace of noted speakers for the occasion, and there will be saying, as well as doing.

As to music, there will be waves and volumes of it, both vocal and instrumental; right brave, brassy old-time Fourth of July noises.

Refreshments in abundance for man, beast and everybody else.

N. B. (which is nota bene)—The old fashioned jug will be eliminated.

Come to our Fourth!

MACHINE IS NOT FOR SHOW ALONE

Greatest Of Locomotives Fulfills Practical Expectations.

Work In Hauling Heavy Freight Trains Over Mountains Attracts Attention Of Railroad Men.

That the greatest locomotive in the world which attracted so much attention in the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad exhibit in the St. Louis World's Fair was not built for show alone has been demonstrated by its successfull performance in assisting heavy freight trains over the Alleghany Mountain.

After the close of the St. Louis Exposition this locomotive, which is No. 2400, was brought to the Connellsville, division of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and put into regular service betwen Connellsville, Rockwood and Sand Patch. It has made several road trips and been in mountain-helper servic during the last five months, and in this time it has made about 17,000 miles. It was designed for the purpose of balancing the power on the division and to reduce the number of locomotives and crews required to handle heavy freight tonnage over the mountain districts, and thus greatly facilitate the movement of traffic which has grown so large during recent years and is growing very rapidly under the present management of the road.

It is really a pair of locomotives with one boiler, which is carried on two sets of driver wheels, each of which is 57 inches in diameter.

When in working order the locomotive weighs 334,500 pounds, while with the tender attached (which has a capacity of 15 tons of coal and 7,000 gallons of water) the total weight is 479,500 pounds, or about 193,300 pounds less than the combined total weight of the heavest consolidation locomotive that are used for other frieght service over this same mountain district.

While the draw-bar pull behind the tender of two of the consolidation locomotives is about 79,400 pounds, the draw-bar pull of the big locomotive is about 74,000 pounds when working compound and 84 000 when working simple. The weight of trains that can be taken up the mountain by two of the consolidation locomotives is about 2,025 tons, contained in loaded steel cars of about 100,000 capacity, and the weight of the train that the No. 2400 and one of the consolidated locomotives can take up the grade is about 3,210 tons, contained in similar cars. These figures are based on the locamotive operating at a speed of 10 miles an hour under generally fair condition and with the big locomotive working in compound gear.

From the practical performance of this locomotive during the last five months it has been demonstrated that the various special features which are combined in this design give very satisfactory results from the operating standpoint. The steaming capacity of the boiler, working of all fractional parts, cylinder packing, and the other features that go to make up the requirement for maximum hauling capacity have been found satisfactory.

It has been found that the cost per ton mile in the maintenance of this locomotive will be no greater than for ordinary consolidation types of helper locomotives, which are of much lighter capacity, when operating over a combination of level and mountainous division. It will consume less coal than the various types of simple consolidation locomotives now in the service, and when operated on comparatively level lines it consumes materially less coal per ton mile, while at the same time it can get much more traffic over the road.

Sand Patch is about 33 miles west of Cumberland, Md., and from there to Rockwood the grade ranges from 1.3 to nearly 2 per cent. The heaviest grade is at the rate of about 100 feet to the mile. The greatest curvature on the line over which this locomotive operates is 9 degrees, while on the heaviest grade there is a reverse curvature of about 7 degrees.

In a number of test trips that have been made with the Mallet locomotive one engineer and one fireman have been used to operate it, with the result that there were no failures or delays on account of the locomotive.

In mountain-helper service locomotives are frequently required to remain at work for extraordinary periods between cleaning the fire, and during such intervals, with the forcing of fires to the maximum, doing short service and pushing trains up the grade, together with drifting down grade and long time between trips, there is considerable opportunity for variation of temperature in the fire-box and flues, which would tend to meet the requirement and at the same time make use of an ordinary grade of run-of mine bituminous coal and maintain ample boiler pressure at all times to handle the work.

The delegates to the recent International Railway Congress, held at Washington— especially those from foreign countries— were so much interested in this mammoth piece of railroad machinery and made so many inquiries about its character of construction and work in service that Mr. J. E. Muhlfelb, the general superintendent of motive power of the Baltimore and Ohio, prepared a special report on its performance.

No locomotive in service on any other railroad has been talked about more than this one, and it is one of the main attractions all passengers are anxious to see in traveling over the section of the road where it is in operation.

INTERNATIONAL CELEBRITIES

Will Spend the Season With their Official Familes at Deer Park.

The German Ambassador and his family are installed in Cottage No. 5 in the Deer Park Hotel grounds. This is the cottage that ex-President Cleveland occupied during his honeymoon in 1888. The German Embassy consists of Freiherr Speck von Sternburg, ambassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary; Miss Langham, Freiherr von dem Busssche-Haddenhausen, counselor of Legation and first secretary of Embassy; Commander Hebbinghouse, naval attache, Major Otto von Etzel, military attache; Herr Robert R. Scheller-Steinwartz, second secretary; Herr von Verdy du Vernois, third secretary; Lieutenant Martin, attache; Herr Diedrich, technical expert.

The Chilian Minister and his family will go to Deer Park in a few days. His official family consists of Senor Don Joaquin Walker-Martinez, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary; Senor Don Manual Jose Vega, first secretary; Col. Vicente Solar, military attache, and Senor Don Oswaldo Ramirez, second secretary.

The Brazilian Ambassador has applied for a cottage for himself and family for the Deer Park season. His official family is as follows: Mr. J. F. de Assis-Brasil, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary; Mr. Alfaedo de M. Gomes Ferreira, charge d'affaires; Mr. Rinaldo de Lima e Silva, second secretary.

The Deer Park Hotel opens June 24th, and the season promises to be one of great brilliancy.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mrs. John Lochard and family, of Pittsburg, will spend the summer in the Park, having rented one of the Mick cottages.

The Loch Lynn Hotel has several guests.

Mr. J. O. Fout will clerk this season for Felty & Co.

Mrs. Lincoln and Miss Clark, of Pennsylvania, will have charge of Walton House this summer.

Miss Swan's cottage on E street is rented to a Philadelphia family.

The Mountain Lake Hotel is open for guests.

Lawyer Dickey and family moved into one of the Talson cottages yesterday.

A. J. Alexander and family, of Fairmont, W. Va., are at home in the Allen cottage on G street.

Mrs. S. L. Allen, of Baltimore, has Allen Hurst ready for guests. Mrs. Allen will have associated with her Mrs. Rinehart one of the successful managers of boarding houses on the mountain summit.

Mrs. J. B. Cocheran of Cambridge, O., is a guest of Judge Campell and wife.

C. F. Dawson went to Rowlesburg last Monday to paint the interior of a church edifice.

Dr. McLain and family, of Wheeling, are here for the summer.

Mrs. L. C. Binkley, of Chicago, has returned to the Park and taken possession of her cottage.

The Assembly House received five guests Wednesday evening.

The electric lights were turned on Tuesday night. No finer light in the land, nor better plant.

There are some nice, comfortable cottages for rent. Apply to L. A. Rudisill.

Dr. Talson and wife, of New Jersey, will arrive tonight.

Strange visitors.

Among those who graduate at the Fairmont State Normal School this year is Miss Stella Delle Hutson, of near Sunnyside, this county. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Hutson, drove to Oakland from their home last Saturday morning where the latter took the train for Fairmont to be present at the graduating exercises which take place this week.

Mrs Eliza Fundenburg and her daughter, Miss Tecla, enertained last week at their home near Deer Park a house party consisting of Misses Elizabeth Hoffman, of Keyser, W. Va.; May Kalbaugh, of Piedmont, W. Va.; Edna Brydon, of Bloomington, and Bessie and Nan Miller, of Swanton. On Saturday these ladies, accompanied by their hostess, visited Oakland for a few hours.

Messrs. Pat J. Garrett of Deer Park, and Ed Hurdle of Baltimore, Md., both well known employees of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, were in the city yesterday attending the funeral of Mr. Chas. W. See. Both of these gentlemen were life friends of the deceased, and came to pay the last sad respects to his memory.—Grafton Sentinel.

Mr. J. A. Fricker, of San Juan, Porto Rico, where he is engaged with the Standard Oil Company as special agent for the West Indies, left Oakland Tuesday morning for New York from which city he will sail on Tuesday for his home. Mr. Fricker had been in Oakland several days visiting his family who are guests here of Prof. and Mrs. J. Frank McBee.

S. M. Yoder, a farmer residing near Grantsville, Md., met with quite a mishap, Tuesday. He was preparing to hive a swarm of bees, and while standing directly under a limb of a tree on which the bees had settled, the limb broke, landing the bees all over Mr. Yoder's head and neck. The bees began to sting, and before Mr. Yoder could get rid of them, he was stung over a hundred times. The poison from the stings made him deathly sick, but Dr. E. H. Perry was promptly sent for, and at last report the patient was getting along quite well.—Salisbury Star.

Because a girl has not married young, and is approaching the age where, if single, she will be put into the "old maid" class, is no proof that she is not good and nice, but rather is an evidence that she knows her own worth; that she has good sense and a proper appreciation of life, and will not "hitch up" with just anyaody who might propose. We have a few such in our vicinity, and they are jewels, worth their weight in gold. In this locality as elsewhere, the best are not the easiest obtained, but lucky is the worthy young man who is accepted.

Annapolis no longer an Indian village: Since John Fisher, official exterminator of uncalled-for and unowned dogs, started in a little over a month ago, many of the canines have crossed the great divide and are now inhabiting the dog star. Many large spots have been discovered during the past few days by astronomers who happened to be looking toward that particular star. Fisher has already executed 86 dogs, and more are to be heard from. He has received many compliments with reference to the manner in which he has gathered in stray dogs, and many residents can now sleep comfortably during the summer, whereas in years gone by the howlings of countless mongrels gave indication that the city was an Indian village.—Annapolis Capital.

RYANS GLADE.

We have not seen any news from our vicinity for some time, so will jot you a few items thinking perhaps they may be of some interest to your many readers.

This is one of the lovely months of the year, and the weather we have at present we think will prove a blessing to the farmer.

Mrs. Lantz, of near Bayard, was visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Riley, last Sabbath.

Mrs. Chas. Harvey, of North Glade, was visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Harvey, last week.

Misses Ida Wilson and Lois Harvey, of near Blaine, were visiting in this vicinity last week.

Mrs. George Steyer is very ill at this writing.

Mr. William Clark was seen in our village last Sunday.

Messrs. Milo Wilson, Alex. Wilson, Osborne Harvey and Miss Ida Harvey were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Kelso last Sabbath.

Mrs. Wesley Wotring, of Eglon, W. Va., is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Harvey, of this place.

Miss Nellie Herring, who has been visitlng her parents near Elder for the past few weeks, is with us again.

A protracted meeting at this place is in progress. Rev. Westfall seems untiring in his work and preaches some excellent sermons.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely under the superintendency of Mr. J. B. Shockey.

NOTICE OF Bond Sale!

Notice as to the Sale of Bonds to Pay for the Improvements of the Streets of the Town of Oakland, Maryland.

Notice is hereby given that the Mayor and Town Council of the Town of Oakland, Garrett County, Maryland, will meet at their Council Chamber in said town on

MONDAY,

the 3d Day of July, 1905

AT 8 O'CLOCK P. M.

of said day, to receive and examine sealed bids for the purchase of Four Thousand Dollars of the Municipal Bonds of said Town as authorized by Chapter 24 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, 1898, for the purpose of paying for the improvement of the streets of said town.

The said Bonds will be issued in the denomination of One Hundred Dollars each. Said Bonds to be drawn in accordance with the provisions of the aforesaid Act of Assembly and the ordinance of said town providing for said issue with interest bearing coupon bonds attached at four per cent. interest payable semi-annually on the first days of July and January of each year after the date of said issue, but not to bear interest until after the first day of January, 1906, but none of said bonds will be payable before the first day of January, 1925, after that date they will be paid at the rate of one thousand dollars per year, but redeemable at the pleasure of the Mayor and Town Council of said town.

The principal and interest will be payable at the Garrett National Bank, Oakland, Maryland.

The bonds are to be paid for within ten days after the notice that the same are ready for delivery.

Said bonds will be awarded to the highest responsible bidder or bidders at a sum not less than their par value and interest after the first day of January, 1906, said bids to be without conditions or qualifications. All such bids shall be accompanied by the currency or a certified check payable to the order of the Mayor and Town Council of Oakland without condition for an amount equal to ten per cent. of the amount of said bid and in all cases where said bids are not received or accepted said money or check will be returned to the owner or owners.

In case any of said bonds are awarded to a bidder or bidders and they refuse to accept and pay for the same when ready for delivery and upon being notified of the same either by writing or orally, then the amount of ten per cent. so advanced on said bids shall be forfeited to the town of Oakland, and shall be turned over to the credit of the Mayor and Town Council of Oakland as liquidated damages for breach of contract on the part of said bidder and bidders.

The right to reject any and all bids is hereby reserved to the Mayor and Town Council of Oakland, Maryland.

Attest: HENRY W. McCOMAS, Mayor.
S. LAWTON, President Town Council of Oakland, Maryland.

Test: J. C. DUNHAM, Clerk.

TRUSTEE'S SALE OF VALUABLE Real Estate.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Garrett county, sitting in Equity, and passed in a cause wherein William Barkholder and others are plaintiffs and Clara Barkholder and others are defendants, the same being No. 1236 Equity, said decree bearing date the 24th day of May, 1905, the undersigned was appointed trustee to sell the real estate in the proceedings mentioned and I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY,

The 24th Day of June, 1905,

At the hour of 1030 a. m. of said day, in front of the First National Bank building, in the town of Oakland, Maryland, I will offer at public auction to the highest bidder the following described real estate situate and being in Garrett County, Maryland.

1st. All that tract or parcel of land containing about 130 acres and being the home farm of the late JOHN A. BARKHOLDER, and situate about three miles North of the town of Bittinger. The improvements consist of a frame dwelling house, unfinished, a log dwelling house and log barn with other outbuildings. About 40 or 50 acres of said farm is cleared and in cultivation and has a good orchard thereon. The uncleared portion is well timbered with hemlock and oak. The whole place is well watered.

2nd. All the right, title and interest of all the parties to this suit and those holding under them in and to Military lots Nos. 2332, 2333 and 2371, containing 150 acres. These last named lots are situated about one mile South of the above described farm, are unimproved, but are well timbered with hemlock, sugar, white oak, red oak and other timber.

All of said above described lands are supposed to be underlaid with valuable seams of coal.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by the terms of the decree, one-third cash on day of sale, one-third in six months and the balance in twelve months from day of sale, or all cash at the option of the purchaser or purchasers, the credit portion to bear interest from the day of sale and to be secured to the satisfaction of the Trustee.

Conveyancing at cost of purchaser. Possession of the home farm cannot be given before the 1st day of March, 1906.

FRED. A. THAYER, Trustee.

Reward $25.00 Reward

A reward of $25.00 will be paid for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the person who, on Tuesday night, May 16th, removed from in front of Hinebaugh's restaurant Watchman's Key No. 1, which is the property of the Mayor and Council of Oakland.

BRYAN AGAINST THE FRANCHISE AMENDMENT

Attorney General Explodes a Political Bomb and Unmercifully

SCORES POE DISFRANCHISING ACT

Says That He Not Only Hopes for Its Defeat, but Will Vote Against It —One of Most Obnoxious Measures Ever Presented.

One of the most convincing arguments against the passsage of the Poe disfranchising amendment at the polls in November was that given in an interview Monday by Attorney-General William Shepard Bryan. Mr. Bryan has always been unalterably against the amendment as passed by the General Assembly, and his clear-cut and straightforward assertions of Monday prove without doubt his continued hostility to the obnoxious measure.

Mr. Bryan, among other things, in his interview, said:

While I wish to see the Democratic candidates, and all the Democratic candidates, win at the approaching election, I am, as I have often stated, unalterably opposed to the proposed constitutional amendment for the restriction of suffrage.

I see no constitutional or moral difficulty about disfranchising those citizens possessing the attributes which distinguish our negro population, other than conditions of servitude.

The constitutional power to do this is clearly stated by that sound constitutional lawyer, the late Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, in his autobiography (volume 2,) where he says:

"This is not a sectional question. It is not a race question. The suffrage was conferred on the negro by the Southern States themselves. They can always make their own rules. If the negro is ignorant you may define ignorance and disfranchise that. If the negro is vicious you may define vice and disfranchise that. If the negro be poor you may define poverty and disfranchise that. If the negro be idle you may define idleness and disfranchise that. If the negro be lazy you may define laziness and disfranchise that. If you will only disfranchise him for the qualities which you say unfit him to vote, and not for his race or the color of his skin, there is no constitutional obstacle in your way."

My objection to the proposed amendment is, and has always been, confined to the method by which dischisement of the negro is sought to be accomplished. I think that that amendment, if passed, will give a dangerous and unwarranted power over both white and black voters to the election officials, a changing body, incompetent, as a class, from lack of training, to exercise such power with either fairness or intelligence.

It is a fundamental principle of constitutional liberty, older than Magna Charta, that a man's rights should depend upon definite and ascertainable facts, and not upon the discretion, opinions, whims or caprices of any other man or set of men. And when the discretionary power to pass upon the political powers and privileges of any portion of the people is sought to be given to a set of men notoriously and scandalously unfit to intelligently exercise that power, it is difficult to discuss the measure in the language of moderation The "leave to live by no man's leave" is the characteristic which distinguishes constitutional liberty from despotism.

Apart from this, I do not think that any declaration of any political convention on this subject can, on any sound or logical theory of party loyalty, bind the members of the party, because the indorsement of the amendment is not within the scope of the authority of the convention. The convention has had delegated to it power to select candidates and to frame a platform declaring the principles which will guide the official conduct of the candidates nominated by the convention, if elected. But no candidate nominated by any convention in this State this fall will, if elected, have any official duties to perform in relation to the adoption of the amendment. The amendment will be either rejected or adopted before any nominee of any convention takes office.

I hope to see the franchise amendment overwhelmingly defeated. I shall vote against it.

CONVENTION DATE NOT FIXED.

Resolutions Adopted by the Republican State Central Committee on Wednesday.

The following resolutions were adopted at the meeting of the Republican State committee in Baltimore on Wednesday. The two party committees in Baltimore not having agreed on a day for holding primaries, the date for holding the convention was left open to be fixed the Executive Committee.

Be it Resolved, By The Republican State Central Committee of Maryland that a convention for the nomination of a candidate for comptroller of the State Treasury and for the transaction of such other business as may be deemed necessary, be held in the city of Baltimore at such place as the Chairman of the State Central Committee shall designate, and at such time as shall be fixed by the executive committee of this committee, which executive committee shall be clothed with full power to make all regulations that may be necessary for this purpose, and that such executive committee shall meet in this city at such place as the Chairman of the State Central Committee shall fix on July 26 next.

The primaries in the various counties shall be held at such time and places and under such regulation as the State Central Committee of said counties may decide upon; provided, that notice of the time and places of holding said primaries, as well as county conventions, by two weekly insertions in some newspaper published in said county, and in counties where there is published no Republican newspaper 10 day's notice shall be given by handbills posted in conspicuous places of the several counties.

Resolved, That the members of the State Central Committee of Baltimore city be, and they are hereby respectfully requested and recommended in arranging for the legislative district convention to be held in Baltimore city, to provide by suitable resolutions that a majority of each ward delegation in said convention shall have the absolute right to name one member of the State Central Committee, the same when named to be accepted by the said respective legislative convention for said position.

Resolved, That the members of the State Central Committee of Baltimore and Harford county be, and they are hereby authorized; to fix the time and place for holding a judicial convention for the nomination of a candidate for chief judge in the Third Circuit. Primary meetings for the election of delegate to this convention shall be held in accordance with party usage.

LARGE LUMBER CONCERN.

That is What The Yough Manor Lumber Co. Of Kendal, Md., Proves Itself to Be.

The Yough Manor Lumber Company, of Kendall, Md., that is owned by the Kendall Brothers, old Greenville township boys, and of which Hon. S. A. Kendall, of this city is the president, is one of the largest manufacturers of lumber on the Pittsburg division of the B. & O. Ry. That our reader form some idea of the output of the company we give the figures for their shipments during the month of May. They shipped in all 180 cars from that station, made up as follows:

1,612,361 feet of lumber, loaded on 123 cars. 6,500 cross ties, loaded on 27 cars. 500 pit props, loaded on 7 cars. 130 cords of bark, 6 cars. 210 cords of wood, 14 cars.

The company have a very complete and model saw mill plant, equipped with the very latest machinery, the mill having what is called a steam feed for its carriage, a steam log turner, a sawdust feed for its boilers, in fact all that is modern in the saw mill line. They own about 25,000 acres of land, and have four narrow gauge locomotives, several hundred narrow guage cars and 40 miles of their own track. They also have a steam log loader. The general superintendent is Mr. D. H. Shank, an experienced man along these lines of work, and he is assisted in looking after this mammoth plant by J. C. Kendall, who is secretary of the concern.

Mr. C. W. Edwards, who was formerly employed by the Warm Lumber company, in Greenville township, and who is well-known to many of our people, is the efficient sawyer for the company, and in 23½ days last month, he cut 1,077,000 feet of lumber, which shows that he is a master hand at this line of the work. The work of loading this number of cars in one month is no little matter, but Arthur Lowman, who has this in charge, assisted by Edward Schultz, a son of Jos. Schultz, of Greenville township, are equal to the occasion and they keep matters moving right along.

In addition to the large mill we have described the firm have two portable mills on the same tract in operation that average about 450,000 feet of lumber each month.—Meyersdale Republican.

The Heavenly Home.

As the Bible stands apart from other books, Revelation stands apart from the rest of the Bible It is singular, difficult, mysterious. It has been called the cross of crosses of commentators. One instantly loses himself in the labyrinth of variant interpretations. It seems best not to attempt to make direct verbal application of the contents to events past, current or future. On the whole, from the mistakes of the past, it is eminently the wise course to declare the book a prophetico-poetic chain of allegories—an album of vivid pictures—the whole intent of which is to create, feed, and shelter hope of the ultimate and practically universal dominance of the good, in spite of transitory reverses and lapses.

Under the material emblem of a city, adorned and beautified, the spiritual betterment of humanity seems to be shadowed. The plan and fashion of the city is from heaven. The ideals of right human living are Divine. As these ideals are realized, and in the proportion that they are realized, God lives with and in men. In the ratio of righteousness (right living) tears are dried. Wrong living (sin) is the sole cause of tears, painful death, sorrow, and crying.

In this apocalytic city John sees no temple. A temple is a reminder of an absent Deity. God's presence makes a material structure in His honor unnecessary. Yet this presence need not be external and additional to the moral and spiritual qualities evolved in the souls of men. To use Tolstoi's phrase, "Where love is, there God is."

In this renewed earth, sun and moon will not be quenched: but the unearthly radiance of right living will outshine them. Whole nations, with their rulers, will keep walking in this light, which never shone on land or sea. This good life is not difficult of access. It requires no toilsome pilgrimage. It is at hand. It is like a four-square city, with ever-open gates on every side. He who makes right living hard and laborious is aside from the description of the revelator.

Some one suggests that the change of figures is significant. It is no longer a mere paradise or garden. Now it is a city of God on earth, stateller and more glorious, but at the same time a result of human co-operation with the Divine. Man building after God's plans and specifications.

This is the holy dream of the thousand happy years, the millennial reign, which has been the solace and inspiration of the saints in all ages—an indefinitely long period in which there shall be substantially universal righteousness (right living) and its concomitants, universal peace and universal joy.

Here, however, is no statical condition, no fixity. Here is rest: but it is the rest attendant upon a steady, unwearied advancement. There is an infinite progression. First in apprehension of the riches, both of the wisdom and acknowledge of God. Then in goodness, until the fruits of the Spirit appear and come to perfection. Finally in serviceableness, until the Master's rule of life becomes the disciple's—"Not to be ministered unto, but to minister and give."

The Teacher's Lantern.

Out on the statical heaven! Eternally resting on the banks of the river! It would be purgatory to the sentient, aspiring, capable soul. We shall think and do and be, but without the handicaps of the present.

* * * * *

Current views of the life of heaven are far too rigid. Congregations never breaking up and Sabbaths never ending. It seems best to think of the heavenly life as like one lived in this world, when it shall have been renovated by the advent of the millennial kingdom. We shall just be and do and live and love in an absolutely natural and human way.

* * * * *

The millennial kingdom comes not as a cataclysm. It is rather like yeast in dough: steadily, imperceptibly spreading out and up, till the whole mass is lifted.

* * * * *

In the ultimate analysis, the New Jerusalem is, after all, not a city at all; but a people, renewed and adorned with gifts, grace, and usefulness. The jeweled walls, golden streets, river, tree, and all, are material emblems of the moral and spiritual qualities of a redeemed humanity.

* * * * *

Mathematical computations of the time of the advent of the millennial kingdom are the "great lost labor, that chronic malady of apocalyptic exegesis."

* * * * *

Lange says the apocalypse will not be fully comprehended until we see it in the light of the millennium. Herder calls it an abstract of almost all prophets and apostles. To handle it as if it were a book of literal meanings is manifestly an unreasonable procedure. Goethe says: "I am a man of the earth, earthly. To me the parables of the unjust steward, the prodigal son, the sower, the pearl, the lost piece of money, are more Divine than the seven messengers, candlesticks, seals, stars, and woes.—Letters to Lavater.

* * * * *

Here is an example of the arbitrary manner in which the text is often divided into chapters. Rev. xxi, 1; Rev. xxii, 5 (inclusive) is one connected passage, descriptive of the new heaven and new earth.

* * * * *

Accessibility is a characteristic of the New Jerusalem. Many gates, many trees, river flowing through the midst. City easy to enter, and contents always near at hand.

Mosaic from Commentaries.

And He showed me: Not descriptive of a literal city, but of an ideal state. Figures not dimensions, but ideas.—Peloubet. River of water: If city stood on a pyramidal mountain streams could run each of the four faces. — Camb. Bib. (Ezek. xivii.) Clear: Bright as crystal. — Ibid. This picture may be of a river flanked on each side with green banks set with rows of shade and ornamental trees, and this in turn flanked on both sides with boulevards after the manner of Oriental landscape gardening. The tree of life: Eden had one tree which made men immortal. Paradise has a whole grove of them. Twelve manner of fruits: Twelve fruitages.—Pulpit Com. Twelve fruit harvests.—Stewart. Leaves for healing: Not implied that there is any disease which needs healing, but the tree of life is put forward as the means by which the perpetual health and life and general well-being of the inhabitants is sustained. — Pulpit Com. No more curse: Nothing accursed exists in that city.—Pulpit Com. No more things worth of execration. Servants shall serve him: Servants douloi (bond-servants) shall render him lateia (the service of ministry). Reward of service is the call to more honorable and understanding service. Shall see His face: Beatific vision. Blessedness of heaven.—Cam-Bib. No night there: Night figurative of ignorance and helplessness. These sayings: Brief summary of the events makes concluding portion of book.—Camb. Bib. Seal not: Communicate at once to the world.—Ibid.

Deer Park Hotel, Deer Park, Md.

This famous Allegheny Mountain Hosterly will open on June 24, with prospects for the most brilliant season in its history. The hotel and cottages have been renovated and painted, inside and out. Two of the choicest cottages can be secured if application is made at once. Many suites of rooms have been engaged in the hotel building and both annexes.

The popularity of Deer Park is due to its splendid location, 2,800 feet above the sea level, out of range of malaria and mosquitoes. Every convenience is provided for guests. The rooms are delightful and the cuisine excellent. The Hotel is provided with all modern improvements for comfort; with Bowling Alleys, Billiard Rooms, Tennis Courts, Golf Links, Swimming pools, etc., for amusement. An entirely new Livery Equipment has been installed.

Deer Park is on the direct line of the Baltimore & Ohio between New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Wheeling, Columbus and Chicago, having the excellent advantage of through vestibuled trains from each of these cities with through Pullman service during the season from and to Pittsburg.

Double Wedding.

On Sunday, June 5, 1905, at the home of J. W. White, a prosperous farmer living near Gorman, a double wedding occurred, being the marriage of his daughters—Miss Mary White to Mr. Wm. Simms and Miss Stella White to Mr. David Lower. Rev. E. J. Westfall, their pastor, officiated.

The parlor was beautifully decorated with ferns and cut flowers.

The brides wore costumes of white material elaborately trimmed, while the grooms wore black. They made a grand appearance.

After the nuptial knot was tied they entered the dining room, where a bountiful repast was served. Only a few guests were present namely, Mr. and Mrs. Beckman, of Mt. Lake; Mr. and Mrs. Paugh, of Oakland; Mrs. John White, of near Oakland; Mr. Will White and Mrs. E. J. Westfall.

PRINTERS ERRORS.

Brief Record of Blunders of Types, Some Lucky Others Unlucky.

Among the masterpieces of bludering typography must be reckoned two perpetrated in a Southern newspaper, says the Saturday Evening Post.

An editor, wishing to congratulate Geneal Pillow after his return from Mexico as a battle-scarred veteran, was made by the types to characterize him as a "battle-scared veteran". The indignant general, rushing into the editorial sanctum demanded an explanation, which was given and a correction promised in the next day's paper. Judge of the editor's feeling on the morrow when as if "to heap horrors upon horror's head," he found the general styled in revised paragraph "that bottle-scare veteran".

Some years ago the London Times, in speaking of a discussion before the council of ministers, when Lord Brougheam was chancellor, stated that "the chancellor had thrown an extraordinary light on the question".

In the London Christian World, in 1883, a writer, referring to an address at Christ Church by the Rev. Theodore Hooks, repreented him as saying that some of the clergy had gone back "to the black lie (tie) of their boy-hood.

In one of the editions of Davidson's Popular English grammar the principal parts of the verb "to chide" were given as follows: Present infinitive, to chide; past finice, I child: post infinitive, to have children." In the Londoe Courier many years ago his Majesty George IV. was said to have "a fit of the goat at Brighton." An other journal advertised a sermon by a celebrated divine on "The Immorality of the Soul," and also "The Lies of the Poets"—a work, no doubt, of many volumes. The London Globe once gave an extract from the Registrar General's return, in which it was stated that the inhabitants of London were suffering at that time "from a high rate of morality."

A letter more or less makes strange havoc of a sentence. Early in the French revolution the Abbe Sieyes, in correcting the proofsheets of a pamphlet in defense of his political conduct, read, "I have adjured the republic"—a misprint for adjourned. "Wretch!" he cried to the printer, "do you wish to send me to the guilloine?" What is treason, once asked a wag, but reason to a "t"?—which "t" an accident of the press may displace with most awkward effect. the other hand, a pruiter who omitted the first letter of Mr. Caswell's name might have pleaded that it was "as well" without the "C."

An edition of the Bible printed at the Clarendon Press in 1617 is known as the "Vinegar Bible," because in the title of the twentieth chapter of Luke the parable of the vineyard is printed "parable of the vinegar." Perhaps the most fearful error of the press that ever occurrod was caused by the letter "c" dropping out of the following passage in a form of the Book of Common Prayer. "We shall all be changed in the twinkling of an eye." When the book appeared the passage, to the horror of the devout reader, was thus printed: "We shall all be hanged in the twinkling of an eye?"

Mistakes in punctuation, such as the omission or misplacing of a comma, sometimes greatly changes the sense of a passage, as when a compositor—probably a crusty old bachelor—in setting up the toast, "Woman without her, man would be a savage," put the comma in the wrong place, and made the sentence read. "Woman, without her man, would be a savage.

REDDY SULLIVAN and the Kid said they would clean out the place. Bart O'Donnell would not go so far as that, but he would work the racket for all it was worth. The racket was to impede the operations of the Sunday school to be opened at the mission on the morrow. A smiling gentleman who insisted upon treating the men and women of the neighborhood as so many children had come upon "the gang" at Bernstein's corner and spoken of the opening of the school on the Sabbath, inviting the boys to attend.

The Kid was for fainting on the spot. Reddy Sullivan drew the back of his hand across his upper lip with a loud report. Bart O'Donnell said, "Oh, mamma!"

The next day Bart sauntered from Bernstein's corner with Reddy and the Kid in the direction of the mission. All at once he ran from the others out to the cart way and dragged a woman from under the very feet of a horse. She looked at him in a confused way as she righted her hat. He saw a thin, small creature in plain, cheap garb, without adornment save for a not too fresh white rose upon her breast.

"I was thinking. I did not see the horse," she said and, with a nod, passed on.

Reddy and the Kid came up and wanted to know if she had given Bart anything.

"Who wants anything?" demanded he.

At the mission the gentleman who had invited them looked nervous as he assigned them to a class.

"Naw," said the Kid; "we don't want no man." And, followed by the others, he darted over to a bench before which stood a girl.

"Miss Calderson," said the gentleman, "these young men elect to become your pupils."

"I have no others," returned she. And Bart saw that she was the girl he had taken from under the horse's feet. She recognized him.

She was a tired girl, Bart thought, and he understood better when, to put herself en rapport with her class, she explained that she was a stranger in the city, had come from the country and was working in a factory.

The services proceeding, she opened her Bible and said she would speak about Samson. She read a part of the story of the strong man.

"The moral of this story is," she said bitterly, "that the greatest strength is only weakness if it is not equal to battle against deceit and slyness. Delilah"—

"She's all right, lady," interrupted the Kid. "She was right in it. He'd held trumps so often he thought he alwus had the ace."

"Simson ought to knowed better," said Bart, shaking his head, his eyes on her. "If he could take a mule's jawr and strike all them people where they lived, he ought to been a match for Delie."

DRAGGED FROM UNDER THE FEET OF A HORSE.

"He certainly should," she assented, with animation; "but, then, Delilah saw his weak spot. The strongest man has his weak spot."

"What's the matter with the strongest woman?" asked Bart.

"There is no strongest woman," said Miss Calderson. "A woman's brain is governed by her feelings, and her feelings are only as strong as their weakest moment finds them, and"—

She blushed violently and shut the book with a snap, giving out the page of a hymn the school had begun to sing.

In the midst of this hymn Bart saw Reddy give the wink to the Kid, who set his eyes to rolling in a ghastly fashion. He went over to him.

"Come off. Don't get gay," he simply said and returned to his seat.

The Kid did not have a fit, and the school was dismissed.

Sunday came, and Bart went early to the mission. He was one of the first in the long, bare room. When Miss Calderson came in she was as white as ever. He had thought that possibly her last Sunday's danger from the horse had paled her for the day. But she was just as decolored today. And upon her breast was another white rose.

She gave Bart her hand, a rough little hand, with marks of toil on it. "So you are my only pupil today," she said. And so he was.

She read today from another part of the Scriptures and was altogether a quiet, peaceful creature.

When service was over Bart did a bold thing.

"May I walk alongside of you?" he asked her.

She hesitated at first and then may have thought of what he had done for her only a week before. "I suppose you want to ask me something about religion," she said. I am very ignorant, very wicked. What can I do for you?"

"I want to ask you about Simson," he said, going out with her. She looked puzzled.

"Simson and Delle," he explained; "them you read about last Sunday."

"Oh," she said; "Samson."

"That's what I said," he returned; "Simson."

"His name," she corrected, "was Samson."

"I thort it was Simson," said Bart. "Anyway, Simson sounds more like as if you knowed him. I'll call him that."

She explained the story as well as she could, but she seemed uneasy. "I ought not to have read that," she said. "It was not the lesson of the day. But I felt like it. Do you ever do a thing you feel like doing even when you know it is wrong, Bart?"

"Alwus," answered Bart.

She laughed.

"There," she said. "I guess that's all. Goodby. I hope to see you next Sunday."

Bart was not so sure she should see him the next Sunday; he had not been much impressed today. But the next Sunday found him at the mission.

She was certainly glad to see him today; it seemed to her that a work taken up in a sort of desperation was bearing fruit. She was interested in her single scholar. Today she drew him out; at another time he would have withheld many things; but, the feeling of depression lifting so miraculously, he felt that he must say everything he knew about himself.

When school was over she asked Bart to walk with her that she might talk to him. She gave him no advice, but she told him she had thought over and over again how brave he had been in rescuing her that first Sunday they had met.

"Oh, that!" said Bart and flushed and felt good.

"And," she went on, "brave people are seldom idle. You must think of yourself as brave and strong—strong as"—

"Simson?" he interrupted.

She laughed.

"If he is your idea of strength, yes," she said.

A few days later Bart got work. "The gang" jeered and called him a star member. Saturday night he brought home a white rose. "I'm thinkin' I'd like to treat you like a lady," he said to his mother. Mrs. O'Donnell had a fit of laughing, in the height of which Bart snatched up the flower and dashed it out the window. He afterward saw it in the belt of Mame Reilly, who said that a gentleman friend had presented it.

Bart was angry all night, angry with himself. In the morning he resolved not to go to the mission. But he would not give up his job of work, simply because "the gang" expected he would.

When the time came for the school he went. Miss Calderson was there with her white rose. The sight of the flower made Bart wish he had stayed away, made him angry with the wearer of it. But she held out her hand and looked glad to see him.

Today the lesson went on without interruption. After school again did the teacher ask her pupil to walk with her. She now looked upon him as her mission. Today he told her of his getting work. She said this made her glad; that he must always work and learn to love work.

Then she wanted to know what he did evenings, and, on his telling her about "the gang," she asked him to come and see her some evening.

"What evening?" he asked quickly.

She had to mention one.

That evening he went, taking with him a white rose. At sight of his gift she frowned.

"You alwus wear one," he said.

"Yes," she returned and put the flower in a little glass on the table of her mean room, where was the faded remnant of the one she had worn the Sunday before.

She had some slight refreshment for Bart, and, strangely enough, he resented this. He did not wish to be thought of like that. The evening was not particularly brilliant, and Bart went away feeling solemn.

He was solemn till Sunday. He considered it a part of the service now to walk with Miss Calderson when the school was over. At parting he asked her if he should come some evening that week also. This rather startled her, but she acquiesced.

That second evening she had a cold and could talk but little.

Bart astonished himself by his own eloquence. He asked her if she would mind reading his favorite story. He listened intently.

"That long hair o' his was a bluff," he said when she had finished. "And he didn't love De-lilah, or he wouldn't o' telled her such steep things. And she must o' been green, for the stories was too thin."

"You are right"—and Miss Calderson was in that semifeverous state attendant on a cold, when dreaminess of idea ensues; besides, it was no more than talking to a baby to talk to this boy—"he couldn't have loved her and told her such untruths concerning the secret of his strength. Maybe he cared for another woman, and Delilah took him from her. Delilah must have been more than a paid spy; she must have been revengeful because he had loved before he met her. That day when you saved me from being run over I was thinking of a Delilah I know, and I did not see the horse."

"You know De-lilah?" asked Bart.

"One of them," answered Miss Calderson.

"Barty," said Miss Calderson, "suppose I tell you a story. I have never told it to a living soul yet—perhaps because there was no one to tell it to; I am all alone in the world. There was a girl," she said softly, "who cared mightily for a man. He was a great strong man, but he had his weak spot. His weak spot was his love of beauty—beauty in a woman. This girl was not beautiful"—

"Delilah?" interrupted Bart.

"No," she shrilled. "Delilah was her friend and beautiful. Well, the girl became engaged to marry the man. Ah, he was so good to her; he was so strong! And she was so frail and weak—her frailty and weakness may have attracted him to her, those and her great love for him. She was fond of flowers, white flowers, such as she had seen in her mother's dead hand when she was a child. Every Saturday night he brought her a white rose to wear on Sunday. Once he met her friend, Delilah. After that he was lost to the frail girl. This frail girl was proud; she gave him up and seemed happy. She even went to the wedding. Then she left that part of the country and went to town. She grew frailer; she thought she had given him up, but she had not. And how did she know that she had not given him up? Why, every Saturday night when her work was paid for she bought a white rose, just as he had done, and she wore it Sundays. I think that rose is killing her, but she will wear it to the end."

Her head drooped over, and Bart thought she was asleep, till all at once she raised her hand and smote herself upon the breast again and again, raining blows upon her bosom where he had seen the roses resting and broke into a passion of sobs that seemed almost to rend her. Bart was appalled. Once again he saw that she was strong, and he looked at her with a hot spot on his cheeks.

When the storm had expended itself she put out her hand, keeping her face away from him, and said good night in an annoyed manner. But he lingered. "I won't give it away," he said; "that there story."

"That story?" she queried. "Oh, my friend's story! My friend is dead, you know."

"That's why you cried," he said. "Is that why you wear a white flower—out o' memory o' her, because she liked 'em, and they was on her dead mother's hand when she was a child?"

She looked at him with a sort of terror.

"Yes," she said. "But I shall never wear one again—never. Good night!"

And she had no white flower the following Sunday. Bart noticed it, as he noticed everything about her, as he noticed how ill she looked and how much worse was her cold. She did not ask him to walk with her, did not ask him anything concerning himself. And he had developed a love for work—had she not told him he ought to love work?—and he wished she knew it. But he could not tell her unless she were interested in the fact.

BROKE INTO A PASSION OF SOBS.

That day he went with "the gang." His mother had gone out, and there was nothing for him to do in the way of taking care of her.

He did not see her that week. Sunday he thought he would go and make up with "the gang;" but, drawn by a force to which he could not then have given a name, he went to the mission. Miss Calderson was not there. The gentleman told Bart that she was ill, but that he might go into another class. Bart turned on his heel. He went at once to Miss Calderson's.

She was lying back in her chair. Bart could have cried out, she looked so dreary, so lonely, so wasted. She had a doctor, she said, but the sickness had been coming on for a long time, and it ran in her family, her mother having died of it. But she grew cheerful now that Bart had come, and he sat there, her cheerfulness communicating itself to him. When it was time for him to go she said a strange thing.

"Barty," she said, "you have made a better woman of me—poor, lonely boy! You have softened my heart with your belief in me, and—that is all. Come Thursday evening."

He had never been so happy in all his life before. He could have kissed his mother if she would have let him.

Thursday evening he went to Miss Calderson, who was again cheerful in his company. The woman from whom she rented her room was with her now, but went away for awhile. Then the little, pale teacher turned eagerly to Bart.

"Quick!" she said. "That box under the table. There are some dead flowers in it—my friend's roses, those the man gave her. Burn them for me."

Bart took the box and obeyed her. Only, he kept one faded little bud in his folded hand.

She had turned her eyes to the stove; the faint crackling scintillation made by the burning flowers lighted them up. She was ghastly. "Thank you," she said when the dried blossoms were all gone and closed her eyes. "I should like to help you a little, Barty. What shall I do?"

"Read about Simson," he answered in a rush. He wanted to see in her face that look which had first attracted him to her, that look of strength which belied her feeble frame, that look of passionate feeling, and to see that look called forth by something she should do for him.

She held the book in her wasted hands and in a muffled voice read a part of the old story, but the old look did not come into her face.

She closed the book.

"Thank you, Barty," she said. "It is you who have helped, as usual. You saved me from the horse that time, your white rose told me how foolish I was to hold on to an old sentiment, and, reading tonight of Samson, I find I have forgiven a man and a woman whom I had thought did me a great wrong. You are a strong, good fellow, Bart, my Samson. Goodby, dear friend—not good night!"

Of course he did not understand her. He had her hand in his; there was something to say to her, something a man may say to one woman in the world, but he did not know what it was. He wrenched himself away from her. His fingers on the knob of the door, she called him back. "Be an industrious boy, a good man, a Samson without his weakness," she said. "Kiss me!" She held her brow to his lips. Touching her thus, he almost knew what he had to say to her, but she turned her face from him, and, awed, he crept from the room.

He was not prepared for what he should be told Sunday morning at the mission, but he was told it, and he went away. No one knew where he hid till late in the afternoon. Then, with soft, white rose in his hand, he went to Miss Calderson's.

They let him into the room where she lay, one small, cold hand folded over the other. Upon these hands so folded, as she had told him her friend's mother's dead hands had had white roses on them, he laid the pallid flower he had brought, looking down upon the still face that told to no earthly eye the story of the heart as still. And then he went away, his eyes buried in the sleeve of his coat, groping with his free hand for the side of the staircase.

Every Sunday when he has the money to spare a boy buys a white rose and goes and lays it upon a mound unmarked save by the dead flower he has placed there on a former occasion. Against his heart at the time Bart O'Donnell burned the dead flowers of Miss Calderson's friend. But this is not Bart O'Donnell; without act of legislature he has become Bart Simson, and so he is known. Did not Miss Calderson want it so? He has changed his life and his name for the little, pale teacher. Some day he may know that he loved her.

CAPITAL GOSSIP.

All of the Professions Represented by Employes in the Pension Office.

That the different departments of the government furnish means of employment to hundreds of men who have found it impossible to succeed in other lines of work for which they fitted themselves is shown by statistics gathered by Chief Clerk William H. Bailey, of the Pension Office. The figures are highly interesting, and develop some strange facts. There are 1,200 clerks in the Pension Bureau, and the canvass was made for the purpose of learning the former occupation of these employes. By the canvass it is shown that of these 1,200, nearly 400 had prepared themselves for the professions of law, medicine and theology. In law the number of graduates was 267, in medicine 100, and in theology 20. The literary world also had a fair sprinkling of Pension Office employes. Forty clerks were formerly authors, 43 editors, 18 editors and publishers, 27 printers, 155 correspondents and reporters, 3 proofreaders, 33 magazine writers, and one lone individual, with long hair, acknowledged that he had once been a poet. Of the total number of clerks, 144 are graduates from either colleges or universities. Military titles are not an uncommon thing in the office. There are 1 major general, 1 adjutant general, 5 brigadier generals, 8 colonels (not counting those from Kentucky), 7 lieutenant colonels, 12 majors, 46 captains, 80 lieutenants, 8 second lieutenants and an unlimited number of privates. Added to this distinction, the Pension Office has in its employ a number of men who formerly belonged to state legislatures, although they acknowledge it in no boasting way, and rather endeavor to hide the fact. Nine men there are former members of the House of Representatives of different states, and 4 ex-state senators likewise draw pay. Eighteen justices of the peace, 5 county judges, 7 probate judges, 3 police judges, and 12 sheriffs help to keep the peace in this government department. In addition to this list of distinguished men now working under civil service, and sure of an income each month, there are 21 former surgeons, 2 bankers 9 dentists and 2 elocutionists. Evidently teaching in the public schools is not an overly profitable occupation, for 457 of the 1,200 clerks in the Pension Office were formerly engaged in that profession, which, with driving canal boats, has furnished most of our presidents. The same precentage in regard to employes who were fitted for the different professions will hold good in all of the other departments, so that whatever objection may be urged against the system in vogue, it cannot be denied that educated men and women do a good share of the work.

The National Geographic Magazine recently published some interesting facts in regard to the Island of Guam, now owned by the United States.

Speaking of the forest vegetation of the island, it is stated that among the trees is one bearng a fruit which, when pounded, makes a paste which has a decidedly intoxicating effect.

The natives use the fruit of this common tree to stupefy fish, and then capture them. The paste pounded from the fruit is inclosed in a bag and kept over night. When the tide is low the bag of pounded fruit is taken out on the reef the next morning and sunk into a deep hole in the reef. This immediatly attract the fish, who eat the paste and they become intoxicated or stupified, and they soon appear on the surface of the water. Some of them are almost lifeless. Others attempt to swim or struggle in the water very simular to the manner of a man under the influence of liquor. The natives scoop them up in their hands, sometimes even diving for them. The sight of the fish on the surface of the water is most striking, because of the conglomeration of strange shapes and bright colors of the fish. The fish around Guam are of the brightest and most beautiful hue, scarlet rose color, silver, yellow and blue. The parrot fishes are an intense color, some of them of greenish blue, others looking as though painted of opaque color, while the chaetodonsf called the sea buttersflies by the native, are remarkable for their coloring. The natives of Guam of both sexes are expert swimmers and are as much at ease in the water as on land. As they throw themselves into the sea and come bounding from wave to wave, they remind one of dolphins.

The men are great divers and often catch fish in their hands. The children accompany their parents, and are so expert in the water that it is declared they appear more like fish than human beings.

Two Dogs.

I do not like my neighbor's dog.
Were I to size him up,
One brief phrase would express it all—
"A most ill mannered pup!"
He's vicious, and he has no sense,
He even barks at me,
And yet my neighbor seems to think
There's no such dog as he.

Now, my dog, on the other hand,
I'm very fond of him.
He's really gentle as a lamb,
Although he looks so grim.
And yet my neighbor fails to see
His keen intelligence,
"Your dog," he says, "is vicious, and
He hasn't any sense."

Notice To Tax Payers!

This is to notify the tax payers of Garrett county that the Annual Levy for 1905 has been made and published, and to call their attention to the following abstract. Section 45, Chapter 566, Acts of 1890, relating to the discount to be allowed and the interest to be charged on all tax bills:

"All county taxes shall be due and payable on the first day of September next succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and all county taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed, and after the first day of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid. The treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes regularly in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon his books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid. But the discount shall not be allowed unless the whole amount of State and county taxes are paid when same is made.

TO FIGHT THE POE AMENDMENT

Democrats Will Organize Within Party Lines.

PLATFORM HAS BEEN ADOPTED.

Every Affiliated Voter To Be Asked By Committee To Sign Protest Against The Law.

Every Democrat in the city of Baltimore is to be asked within the next 10 days or so to sign a protest against the proposed Poe disfranchising amendment and a declaration of his intention to vote against the amendment next fall. Later the work of securing signatures to the protest and declaration will probably be extended to all the counties.

This is the first attempt to organize the opposition in the city against the proposed amendment, and it is being confined strictly within party lines to Democrats. It marks the formal inauguration of a campaign within the party against the amendment, and is the result of the widespread opposition among prominent Democrats to the proposed amendment and the certainty that its adoption will mean the perpetuation of ring rule in the city and State and the growth of evils similar to those which led to the political landslide of 1895.

A committee consisting of Messrs. Alfred S. Niles, Archibald H. Taylor, J. Southgate Lemmon, Eugene O'Dunne and Leigh Bonsal has volunteered to start the work of securing signatures to the protest and declaration. This committee is only a temporary one, for it may be found after the work is well under way that a larger committee or a permanent organization of another character is desired, in which event the members of the first committee will be perfectly willing to step aside.

Some such movement to organize the widespread Democratic opposition to amendment has been urged for several week past by prominent Democratic opponents of the amendment, and it was after repeated conferences that the present committee was selected. This committee started to work vigorously and prepared the form of protest.

This form contains blanks for signatures under the following statement:

A declaration by Democrats against the so called Poe amendment to the Constitution.

We, the undersigned citizens of Maryland, affiliated with the Democratic party, hereby record our opposition to the proposed amendment to the Constitution of Maryland, known as the Poe amendment.

We oppose it for reasons which have been strongly set forth by Governor Warfield, Attorney General Bryan and many other of our thoughtful citizens.

It is not necessary to here set forth in detail these reasons.

We deem it sufficient now to say that the granting of arbitrary powers to the judges of election is clearly undemocratic and will surely result in injuring the liberty and rights of our citizens.

We do not believe that ability to construe our State Constitution should be the test by which the right of suffrage should be determined.

The election judges are not qualified to apply such a test.

We believe that this would be found to be only a cover under which unscrupulous partisans might easily perpetuate their own power.

We have no opposition to an amendment in line with the Democratic platform of 1903, which would restrict the suffrage to intelligent patriotic citizens.

It is entirely unnecessary to say that if ever such a condition should arise, we would oppose negro domination as resolutely as any men in Maryland.

But we do protest, in common with the standard-bearers of our party in 1903, against the particular amendment attempted to be forced upon us, and with them, utterly repudiate it as not only failing to fulfil the pledges of the platform on which they stood, but as directly opposed to its spirit.

We invite all who sympathize with us herein to send in their names to be added to our list.

Copies of this declaration are now being distributed among a selected list of 4000 Democrats, and by them will be presented to all of the 40,000 and odd registered Democrats in the city of Baltimore. It is confidently believed that every Democrat in the city will be canvassed and that the number of signatures of party men opposed to the amendment will surprise even the most sanguine of the leaders in this movement against the attempt to perpetuate the ring's power. Accompanying the declaration is the following circular letter:

At the suggestion of a number of voters affiliated with the Democratic party, we are acting as a provisional committee to organize the widespread opposition which exists against the adoption of the so-called Poe amendment to the Constitution of our State. We inclose a short declaration on the subject, and we would be greatly obliged if you would sign the same, and also get other Democratic friends to sign. It is most important that prompt action be taken. If you should not be registered as a Democrat, we request that you hand these papers to some Democrat known by you to be opposed to the amendment. Please return paper at as early date as possible to Leigh Bonsal, 511 Calvert Building.

WM. R. DAVIS SUED FOR DIVORCE

Alleged to Have Married Meyersdale Girl Under An Assumed Name.

The suit for divorce brought against young William R. Davis by Mrs. Florence Dawson, who alleges that he wedded her under the alias of William R. Dawson last March, has roused the keenest interest in this section, particularly in Grafton, where the suit is to be tried. Davis is a nephew of Henry G. Davis, the former vice presidential nominee on the Democratic ticket.

The prominence of Mr. Davis, no less than the fact that he has a wife and child, has centered the eyes of the entire social world of the state on the case.

Mrs. William R. Davis has not lived with her husband for some time. She is said to be now in New York on her way to Massachusetts to visit relatives, and is accompanied by her son.

She has never sued her husband for divorce. On their seperation it is said that Mrs. Davis received $150,000 in cash.

It is also said that divorce proceedings were held in abeyance by her because of the probable bequeathment of a large estate to her son from his bachelor uncle, Congressman-elect Thomas B. Davis, of Keyser. Mrs. Davis was formerly Miss Hamilton of Meyersdale, Pa.

The father of William R. Davis helped to lay the foundation of the great Davis fortune in the iron and lumber trade. The son owns a number of mines and property in several counties of West Virginia.

It was to prevent him from transferring any of this property that the woman who now sues him has secured injunctions preventing him from disposing of it. Davis is said to be fond of sports of all types. He owns a yacht and spends much time on board, having made a number of cruises to the West Indies.

Mr. Davis laughs at the suit of Mrs. Dawson. He points to the fact that the woman has been arrested three times in Grafton; declares he never married her under any name, and that her scheme is one of blackmail, pure and simple.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mr. Arah Wilt, a well known young farmer living near Frankville, and Miss Grace Wilt, daughter of a B. & O. employe, of the same place, were married by Rev. Howard of this place, at the minister's home on last Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock.

Misses Edith Brady and Nettie Seymour, of Cedar Cliffe, were guests of relatives part of last week.

Miss Pleasant Howard started last Monday on a visit to relatives and friends in Washington, D. C., Winchester and other points in the state of Virginia. She expects to be gone all summer, returning in the fall in time to resume her duties as one of the teachers in the Garrett county public school.

Mrs. Herbert Price and little daughter returned home on Tuesday from a very pleasant visit to the family of her father-in-law, Rev. Price of Swanton.

Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Yarnall, of Cumberland, were in town visiting relatives and Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Mullen, a few days of last week.

Mrs. Cross, of Tunnelton, was a visitor to her daughter, Mrs. Calvin Simpson, on Thursday and Friday of last week.

Mr. Thos. Devine, stenographer for the Dodson Coal Company at Dodson, was home over Sunday and reported the company busy at work building a new store room and fire proof offices to replace those destroyed by fire a few weeks ago.

Misses Minnie and Grace Barker, of Swanton, attended the big opening night of the Junior festival on last Thursday.

Large crowds attended the Junior festival on last Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights. Not quite $400 was the sum realized, which will reduce materially the debt on the new hall. Miss Bessie Wolf was the successful candidate in the contest for the ladies' desk, while Miss Dora Smith captured the ladies' gold ring.

Right to Club a Prisoner.

A jury in the Circuit Court at Fairmont, W. Va., decided that a policeman has the right to use his mace on a prisoner who resists arrest. A few months ago Policeman Henry Hess attempted to arrest Harry Knapp, who it is alleged, resised. The officer clubbed him, and Knapp sued the former for $10.000 damages. The jury found for the defendant.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS OBSERVE MEMORIAL DAY

Members of Garrett Lodge Attend Service in a Body Sunday Afternoon.

EXCELLENT AEDRESSES MADE.

Service Consisted of Appropriate Hymns, Addresses by Members the Lodge and By Rev. J. B. Workman, Pastor of the M. E. Church.

Last Sunday afternoon in accordance with an order issued by the Grand Lodge Knights of Pythias of Maryland, the members of the local lodge assembled at their Castle Hall on Alder street and marched from thence to St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal church where they participated in appropriate services in memory of the deceased brethren here and elsewhere. A like service was held in every town within the Marvland jurisdiction where a lodge of Knights of Pythias is located.

In the march from the Castle Hall to the church there were in line fifty-eight members, which represents about one-half the numerical strength of the organization here.

Arriving at the church the members occupied the center tier of seats reserved for their use when the program arranged for the occasion was carried out, beginning with the reading of a paper by Mr. Samuel Lawton, followed by a hymn.

Rev. J. B. Workman, pastor of the church, led in an appropriate prayer which was followed by an address by Mr. Julius C. Renninger, a Past Chancellor of the lodge, who dwelt at length upon the beauties of a brotherhood linked together as the Knights are and upon the great lessons of friendship, charity and benevolence taught within the lodge as well as the duty one member owed another. Mr. Renninger was followed by Mr. G. S. Hamill, Jr., who spoke extemporaneously upon the lessons taught by the order and the work being done by it in the protection and care of the widow and orphan.

While THE REPUBLICAN would like to give the speeches in full made at the gathering that of Mr. A. Totten Matthews is the only one obtainable at this time and follows:

"Chancellor Commander, Brother Knights and Friends.:

"While I appreciate very much the privilege of taking a part in the exercises of this afternoon. I fully realize my inability to add anything to that which has already been so beautifully said.

"We have met to honor and to mourn the memory of those of our band who have been called into the presence of the Eternal One to answer for the deeds done in the body, and while Pythianism would preach the doctrine that our meed of praise, and our tokens of love and affection should not be withheld until our friends and brothers have joined the host on yonder side the dark flood, but that we should strive to show our appreciation of their kind deeds and noble characters at a time when what we say may encourage, and perhaps inspire, them to the accomplishment of still better thing. Still it is eminently fitting that we should thus specially honor those who have laid aside the armor they so worthily wore, and have left to us the pleasant duty of disseminating and perpetuating the splendid principles of Pythianism which they loved and which in their day they helped to make a powerful influence for good throughout the world.

"It is also peculiarly appropriate, believing, as we do, in the Fatherhood of God, and the Brotherhood of Man, having for our chart and log book the revealed word of God, that this ceremonial should take place within these sacred walls.

"Our brothers, now no longer with us, contributed to the building up of this magificent fabric of fraternal love with which we are so proud to be associated; they were Knights in the true Pythian sense of the word, and we who have taken up the work they can here no longer perform make a mental pilgrimage to their tombs to day, to lay thereon our sincerest offerings in memory of what, in life, they were to our order and to us and to the influence for good that they, though no longer vibrating with life, still wield.

"And let us not in seeking to honor the dead lose sight of the lessons which this hour holds for us, who are still permitted to play our little parts on life's great stage. We have been told, and how true it is, that the most splendid monuments man's ingenuity can devise, finally crumble, and become even as the dust they are intended to commemorate, but he who leaves a record of a life well lived has, in the hearts of those who come after, a never-dying memorial, that time only serves to strengthen and make sweeter. Let us then endeavor to keep untarnished the armor of Pythianism which we are so proud to wear, and let us always wear it in carrying out the highest and noblest ideals of our order, so that when we take our journey into that unexplored country, from whence we shall not return, our memories shall deserve to be cherished, even as we cherish the memories of those we mourn to-day."

Mr. Norman S. Heindel followed Mr. Matthews in a few remarks of a pleasing character, touching upon the certainty of death and the uncertainty of life and the fraternal spirit which binds all Knights in an indissoluble chain of brotherhood.

Another hymn was then sung and the monatorial services of the order was read by Rev. Workman, and Messrs. Henry Lauer and Samuel Lawton, followed by prayer by Rev. J. M. Davis and dismissal by Rev. Workman.

The sermon Sunday night delivered by Mr. Workman to the members of the lodge was of more than ordinary interest and was listened to by many members of the organization, their friends and families. At this service the lodge attended in a body as at the afternoon service.

Broke His Arm.

Mr. Martin Carney, of Hutton, had the misfortune on last Saturday morning to be thrown from a horse that he was riding and striking upon his hand sustained a fracture to the small bone of his right arm. He came down to Oakland the same day and received surgical attention from Dr. Legge who reduced the fracture.

Strange visitors.

JURY OF INQUISITION

Summoned Monday to Make Inquiry Into the Mental Condition of McClelland Friend.

McClelland Friend, a farmer of some means whose home is near Sand Springs, a few miles from Friendsville, was brought to Oakland several days ago by Sheriff Edward J. Frantz and placed in jail upon an order issued by the Court directing the Sheriff to take charge of Mr. Friend until his mental condition could be inquired into and determined by a jury of inquisition summoned for that purpose.

Monday morning Judge Henderson came up to Oakland and Mr. Friend was examined before a jury in the presence of the Court. The testimony showed plainly that Mr. Friend was mentally unbalanced, his condition being caused by an injury to his hand which is verging on blood poisoning, his entire arm being swollen and the inflamnation extending to his neck, which in the opinion of the physicians has affected his brain to some extent, but with the proper treatment it is believed that his mind will be restored.

Judge Henderson signed an order placing Mr. Friend in the hands of Sheriff Frantz and instructing County Physician Legge to render the proper surgical and medical attention.

Wreck at Hitchcock Tunnel.

Extra eastbound engine No. 1873, on the Baltimore and Ohio, had four cars derailed and badly piled up Sunday evening about seven o'clock at a point one-half mile east of Hitchcock Tunnel on the Seventeen-mile Grade. Both tracks were blocked by the wreck. One track was cleared in four hours and the other in eight hours. None of the trainmen were injured. The wreck was caused by a broken flange on a wheel.

HIS HUNTING TRIP

By TROY ALLISON

Copyright, 1905, by Troy Allison

The eligible bachelor braced himself against the shock and stood it like a man.

He had been wandering along the country road for half an hour looking for a field that might prove the hiding place of many rabbits when the thing occurred.

From behind a dilapidated old stone fence that separated the field from the adjoining wood a girl came running pellmell directly into the eligible bachelor's arms.

He got one glimpse of a frightened face before she buried it in the roughness of his hunting coat and clung to him frantically.

"He's after me!" she gasped.

The man's face grew stern, he brought his gun into a more available position and fixed his eyes on the corner of the fence where the girl had first appeared. There was a rattling of dead leaves—more noise, he thought, than one man's feet could possibly produce. The eligible bachelor had never before had an opportunity to play knight errant, but he suddenly felt himself longing to kill the scoundrel who had frightened this girl.

There was another scurry of leaves, and then—a playful yearling calf stood before him, prancing in the awkward way peculiar to sporting calves, with an expression in its eyes that seemed to wink at the man and ask if he didn't see the point of the joke.

The eligible bachelor stared, then let his gun fall to the ground.

"Good Lord!" he howled. "Was that what frightened you?"

The girl had wriggled out of his arms and stood behind him, peering around him for a safe glimpse of the enemy.

"If he had already knocked you down once and was trying to do it again I don't suppose it would be so funny to you," she said resentfully, evidently not appreciating his ecstasy of mirth.

He sent the calf down the road with a few warlike gestures and turned to look at her, amusement still lurking in his eyes.

She had seated herself on a stone and was pinning up a torn place in her skirt.

"Some people can laugh at nothing," she said icily, fitting the edges of the torn place together.

The man looked at the small face, rosy from the frosty morning air, and noticed the short brown hair that made little curls around her forehead.

"I'm a brute to laugh," he said penitently, "but it was so—er—sudden." He was in danger of offending again.

He took his handkerchief to brush the mud from her dress.

"You are evidently not accustomed to them?" he queried, smiling.

"I have never had such close acquaintance with one before," she said. "I live in the city and am down here to get strong. I am boarding at the farmhouse just above here."

"I'm down here on a little hunting trip," he said, not adding that he was also taking a rest from being hunted during the season by maneuvering mammas. "I wonder if they would give me dinner at your farmhouse?"

"I'm sure they would." She extended the hospitality of a hospitable country. "It's the first house you come to, and they are named Jones—you can't forget it if your memory is any good at all. I'll tell them you are coming to the 1 o'clock dinner." She had repaired the damage to her skirt as best she could and stood up to go.

"I will bring some rabbits if I can—they are good for invalids," letting his eye rest again on the little, short, boyish curls that made him wonder if she were sixteen or twenty. "Maybe you will accept them as a peace offering and forgive me for laughing."

A hint of shyness in her eyes made him understand that her resentment was really a reaction from the embarrassment of having rushed into his arms, now that her fright was over and the cause at a distance seemed so trivial.

She gave a regretful look at the torn place in her skirt. "I never shall be able to mend it so it won't show," she said as she left him.

The eligible bachelor was meditative as he climbed the stone wall to wage war on the rabbits.

"Now, I wonder," he mused, "if that little girl is so poor that a torn place in a blue serge skirt can worry her? It's a shame!" He strode through the tangle of briers and dead weeds thoughtfully.

* * * * * * *

Next day the eligible bachelor's valet went back to town, and his master established himself as a boarder at the Jones farm, with only gun and suit case for baggage.

The gun was in small demand. There seemed much more pleasure in jogging along country roads mounted on clumsy farm horses and hedging a girl regain her strength. She looked so tiny and dainty perched upon the big horse that the eligible bachelor vowed to himself that he had never seen an equestrienne in Central park that compared with her.

"Wouldn't it be just lovely," she began one day when they had stopped to regain their breath after a bounding race on their large limbed steeds, "if one didn't have to work for a living?"

His mind flew to his bank account, enough to last several generations if a man could only get his threescore and ten extended that long.

"Do you find teaching so terrible?"

"It's not the work." She grew confidential. "It's that I want so many things—pretty things like some women have."

"Might a mere man ask what these things may be—as applied to your own desires?"

"Oh, a sable neck piece and a muff, a lovely brass bedstead to sleep on, some long, wrinkly gloves and some soft, traily dresses; lots of violet water, manicured nails, a French maid"—

"Hadn't you better wait till I call a stenographer?" he interrupted.

"But wouldn't it be blissful to have them?" she sighed. "I would give my torn walking skirt to the deserving poor and not bother about it any more," she wound up ruefully.

He let his face assume its most doleful aspect.

"I wish I had all these things to offer you." He broke a twig from the hedge with a vigorous cut from his riding whip.

She sat suddenly erect on her horse, and he watched her from the corner of his averted eye.

"A poor dog of a man feels that he has nothing to offer a girl," he continued morosely.

She looked at him hesitatingly. "I don't want all those things so dreadfully much," she said shyly.

Careless About Money.

An eccentric character of pioneer days in California was a lawyer named Lawrence, an attorney for the firm of Palmer, Cooke & Co. "After a night of drinking and gambling Lawrence one afternoon called upon Palmer at the bank," says Thomas E. Farish's "Gold Hunters of California." "He was dressed in a gray flannel shirt and overalls, a broad brimmed hat, with a belt containing two six-shooters and a bowie knife around his waist. He informed Palmer that he intended to leave on the afternoon boat for Sacramento and the mines. 'Why do you do that?' inquired Palmer. 'Because I have spent all my money and must earn more,' said Lawrence, who never kept any account of how he stood at the bank. 'Why,' said Palmer, 'you have not spent all of your money, surely. Let me see.' And, turning to the book of daily accounts, he continued, 'You have a credit here of $5,000.' 'Have I?' asked Lawrence incredulously. 'Yes, so the books show.' 'Well, then, I will not go,' decided Lawrence, who returned to his office and his practice of law."

One View of Joe Jefferson.

Of one phase of Joe Jefferson's character a writer in the Outlook says:

He was interested in the lighter philosophies. The work of Prentice Mulford greatly attracted him at one time. He had had remarkable communications, as he believed, from the other world—enough, at any rate, to convince him that there was another world and to make him confident that he should see again those he loved. He was a wonderful optimist, always cheerful, always looking for the brightness of life. He once told the Spectator that in all his thousands of miles of travel he had never been in a railway or steamship accident or seen one. The last letter which the Spectator received from Mr. Jefferson was reminiscent of their earlier friendship and closed with these words:

How time goes on, so heedless of us all! What a short lived creature is man (myself excepted—by the bye, seventy-five next birthday)! In a few years we shall be sweet little angels, wings and all, and, as the old gambler said on his deathbed, "If we meet, I'll fly you for $5." Till then, sincerely yours. J. JEFFERSON.

Some Crowns.

When Emperor Napoleon I. was crowned king of Italy at Milan, May 23, 1805, he placed the iron crown of Lombardy upon his head with his own hands, exclaiming, "Dieu me l'a donne; gare a qui la touche" (God has given it to me; beware who touches it), which was the haughty motto attached to it by its ancient owners.

The Hungarian crown, worn at their accession by the emperors of Austria as kings of Hungary, is the identical one worn by Stephen 800 years ago. It is of pure gold and weighs nine marks six ounces (fourteen pounds) and is adorned with 53 sapphires, 50 rubies, 1 emerald and 338 pearls.

The crown of the king of France is a circle enameled, adorned with precious stones and heightened up with eight arched diadems, rising from as many fleurs-de-lis, that conjoin at the top under a double fleur-de-lis, all of gold.—Chambers' Journal.

He vhas climbing up mit his feet und waving a flag in his hand, und it gifs me great pleasure dot all der people praise him. More ash one t'ousand persons vhas delighted vhen a young man mit a black eye comes in und limps aroundt and spits oafer his shoulder und says:

"'Vhell, I don't belief you haf sooch cheek till I see him. How dare you make me oop like dot und call me Napoleon?'

"'My frendt, don't you know sometings?' says I. 'Dot figure vhas der great Napoleon, und he vhas walking oafer some mountains. Don't you neffer hear of Napoleon?'

"'Neffer in all my life. Dot vhas my hair und eyes und body. If you don't give me feefty dollars I shall make him tired.'

"I spheak mit dot man more ash ten minutes, but he gets madder all der time. By und by he shumps in mit a right hand swing und knocks dot Napoleon all to pieces, und he also kicks me three times before he goes out. Nopody finds Napoleon in my place any more. I fix him oop ash well ash I can und mark him, 'Der Tomb of Shakespeare.' If somepody comes in und claims he vhas der tomb himself I can't help it und shall call on der police to put him oudt.

"Dot vhas badt for me, Hans, but two weeks ago a man makes me der figure of Queen Elizabeth, und she vhas so grand dot eaferybody vhas full of praise. Three days ago a man comes in my place und sees dot figure und says:

"'But he vhas only wax,' I says.

"'Dot vhas no deeference to me. He goes back on a friend of mine, und wax or no wax he vhas a licked man in two minutes.'

"Und he hauls off und knocks Judas by der middle of next week in one round, und vhen I want damages he knocks me after Judas. I fix der head on again und make him Shakespeare, und yesterday a woman comes in und says he vhas der man who winks at her on a street car.

"I laugh at her, but she goes oudt und gets her husband, und he raises sooch a row ash neffer vhas. He gifs dot Shakespeare an uppercut on der chin, und avhay goes his headt und vhas in twenty pieces in a minute und can neffer be fixed oop again.

The Woes of the Taxpayer

By Governor E. C. STOKES of New Jersey

TODAY the taxpayer is suffering from a high rate and is threatened with INCREASED valuations. Our tax rate in many cases is over 2 per cent, in sixty-two districts over 2½, in fifteen over 3 and in a few cases over 5 per cent. Do you believe that capital and property can pay 2 or 3 per cent in taxes AND GIVE AN HONEST ACCOUNT OF ITSELF? Are not such rates practical confiscation? Are not our citizens leaving the large cities and seeking the country districts as places of residence in order to escape these INTOLERABLE burdens? Is it not time that something was done FOR THE TAXPAYER in this humanitarian age? Is not a tax rate from $1.50 to $1.80 on an honest valuation all that property can stand? The constitution protects property valuations. The law fixes a limitation on bonded indebtedness. SHOULD NOT THE LAW LIMIT THE TAX RATE?

New Jersey leads all the states in the Union in good roads. Her justice is proverbial. Her record in peace and in war is second to none.

LET HER SET AN EXAMPLE IN THE SETTLEMENT OF THE PROBLEM OF TAXATION THAT SERVES BOTH THE TAXPAYERS' INTERESTS AND THE DICTATES OF COMMON HONESTY.

JIM BLUDSO OF THE PRAIRIE BELLE

By John Hay

WALL, no! I can't tell whar he lives
Because he don't live, you see.
Leastways, he's got out of the habit
Of livin' like you and me.
Whar have you been for the last three year
That you haven't heard folks tell
How Jimmy Bludso passed in his checks
The night of the Prairie Belle?

He weren't no saint—them engineers
Is all pretty much alike,
One wife in Natchez-Under-the-Hill
And another one here in Pike.
A keerless man in his talk was Jim
And an awkward hand in a row,
But he never flunked, and he never lied—
I reckon he never knowed how.

And this was all the religion he had:
To treat his engine well,
Never be passed on the river,
To mind the pilot's bell,
And if ever the Prairie Belle took fire
A thousand times he swore
He'd hold her nozzle ag'in the bank
Till the last soul got ashore.

All boats has their day on the Mississipp,
And her day come at last—
The Movastar was a better boat,
But the Belle, she wouldn't be passed;
And so she come tearin' along that night—
The oldest craft on the line—
With a nigger squat on her safety valve
And her furnace crammed, rosin and pine.

The fire bust out as she d'ared the bar
And burnt a hole in the night,
And quick as a flash she turned and made
For that willer bank on the right.
There was runnin' and cursin', but Jim yelled out
Over all the infernal roar:
"I'll hold her nozzle ag'in the bank
Till the last galoot's ashore!"

Through the hot, black breath of the burnin' boat
Jim Bludso's voice was heard,
And they all had trust in his cussedness
And know'd he would keep his word.
And, sure's you're born, they all got off
Afore the smokestacks fell,
And Bludso's ghost went up alone
In the smoke of the Prairie Belle.

He weren't no saint, but at jedgment
I'd run my chance with Jim
'Longside of some pious gentlemen
That wouldn't shook hands with him.
He seen his duty, a dead sure thing,
And went for it thar and then,
And Christ ain't a-goin' to be too hard
On a man that died for men.

The Military Walk Is All Wrong

By Professor H. L. TAYLOR of the New York Postgraduate Medical School

ONE of the three principles which I insist upon in dancing and physical exercises is that the posture of the foot THAT IS BEARING THE WEIGHT of the body should be such as to give the best leverage against the tendency of the body to fall. Some one has described walking as a series of interrupted falls. Now when the foot is so set that it is in the line of advance it is best able to resist AND CHECK the fall. When, on the contrary, the toe is turned out, it can exert very little leverage against the fall of the body. Walking or dancing on everted toes twists and distorts the NATURAL MOVEMENT of the knee, the ankle and the foot.

That the straight posture for the weight bearing foot is the natural one might seem to be indicated by the fact that it is the posture ALWAYS REPRESENTED IN GREEK ART. It is an interesting fact that though soldiers have for centuries been trained to stand at attention with everted toes, they immediately revert to the straight foot posture AS SOON AS THEY GO INTO ACTION. So athletes at the start or during exertion keep the straight foot posture.

MILITARY TRAINING IN EVERTED FEET HAS DONE MUCH HARM, AS HAS ALSO GYMNASTIC TRAINING IN THE SAME POSTURE.

It is not only the harm that comes from the distortion of the position itself that makes it objectionable, but also the fact that if you are resting with everted feet you must always CHANGE to the straight foot posture if you want to move or exert yourself. Thus it is not only unnatural, but a loss of time. THE MILITARY IDEA IS ALL WRONG.

The Fall of Mobile

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

April 8 and 9, 1865

[Copyright, 1905, by G. L. Kilmer.]

APRIL 8 and 9, 1865, simultaneous with the negotiations and surrender at Appomattox, the chief Confederate defenses of Mobile were stormed and taken by General E. R. S. Canby's army. Spanish fort was first to yield. During the siege, which began March 27, nearly 5,000 shots had been hurled into the long inclosed line surrounding the fort proper.

Canby commanded a force of 45,000 men, which attacked Mobile in two columns. The post was defended by about 10,000 Confederates under General D. H. Maury. The principal works east of the city, which was the weakest side, were Spanish fort and Fort Blakely. Canby marshaled a force of 32,000 men in front of Spanish fort and after a long bombardment ordered a general assault for the morning of April 9. Colonel Bell was selected to lead his Iowans close up to the Confederate works as a picket guard for the stormers. Bell advanced the evening of the 8th, first with two companies and then the whole regiment. Some Texas and North Carolina troops in the works confronted by Bell resisted the Federal advance with a musketry fire, intense and deadly. In fact, the ground which the Iowans had been ordered to take was too hot to hold, and Bell led his command on over the enemy's works without stopping.

The fighting was close and furious after the assailants leaped down from the parapet. They formed as they fought and in compact bodies rushed upon the garrison, demanding surrender. Some threw down their arms, but others refused, even with the bayonet at their breast or the muzzle of a musket at their head. They resisted to the last and died with the words "I never will surrender" on their lips.

Bell's men turned right and left and swept the works for 300 yards, gathering in battleflags and prisoners. The Confederates attempted to expel them; but, re-enforced, they held the ground, and before midnight the garrison evacuated the works, fleeing to Fort Blakely.

The key to Mobile was now in the hands of the besiegers. Prisoners revealed to the Federal navy the location of torpedoes planted in the bay, and after a score of them had been fished up the west gulf squadron, commanded by Rear Admiral Thatcher, sailed almost within shelling distance of the city. Fort Blakely remained, and to this Canby turned his attention. The line of defenses at Blakely comprised nine redoubts and was three miles in extent. It was capable of stout resistance, although with the fall of Spanish fort its water communications had been cut.

The siege of Fort Blakely was begun April 2 by a column of 13,000 Federals under command of General Frederick Steele. The work was defended by about 3,000 men with forty guns. Six o'clock the evening of April 9 was the hour fixed for the grand assault. General Kenner Garrard's division held the left of the Federal line and was closest to the enemy's works. The Eleventh Wisconsin advanced as skirmishers and, getting the Confederate skirmishers on the run, followed them to within 100 yards of the ditch. There they encountered a terrible fire of bullets and canister.

Many of the assailants fell, but the survivors in groups rushed on to the parapet and began a hand to hand fight. Lieutenant Angus McDonald, Sergeant Daniel Moore and six others charged together with bayonets. At the parapet five were shot dead, and Moore lost the lock of his gun by a bullet. Moore and McDonald leaped down into the fort, and eight of their nearest foemen surrendered.

A few yards to the right of McDonald's party was a squad of a dozen Confederates firing over the wall at the line of the Eleventh. Seeing what had taken place, they turned upon the intruders, five of them attacking McDonald with bayonets. With his sword he killed two and knocked down others. At last he fell, shot through the thigh and having two bayonet thrusts in the breast. A dead Confederate fell across him as he lay and received a bayonet thrust intended for the brave lieutenant. Moore, also wounded, was at hand and with a Confederate musket shot down McDonald's last assailant.

The Eleventh soon closed up and entered the works, followed by the whole division. Garrard rode at the front on the line of battleflags. For 600 yards the troops dashed over rough and broken ground, moving with the wildest enthusiasm. Ranks separated and melted together again like the waves of a stormy sea. Above all the clamor of battle arose the voices of the troops cheering. They went into the works at the first rush and planted their flags on the walls only a few hours after Robert E. Lee had signed the terms of surrender at Appomattox.

The Confederate skirmishers in front of Garrard's division at Fort Blakely were lads under sixteen belonging to Thomas' brigade of Alabama reserves. A truce was made with them early in the siege, and the spirit of fraternization went so far that the Confederate commander replaced them by old veterans.

As a preliminary to the general attack some colored regiments from General J. P. Hawkins' division went forward to test the fire. Federal skirmishers near the works overheard the orders inside the fort to "lay low and mow the ground—the niggers are coming." The colored troops entered the works with the rest, and one ex-slave took his old master prisoner. They shook hands cordially and celebrated the event by a drink from the same canteen.

When the besiegers were running their approaches toward the fort they encountered many hidden torpedoes. Sometimes these were exploded by the tools in digging. After the siege it was found that one approach lay the whole distance between two lines of buried torpedoes. Often during the siege shells and bullets which plowed the ground in front of the fort struck and exploded the infernal machines.

In the advance of the colored regiments a party of nineteen officers and sixty-five men found themselves alone at the works. They repulsed a sortie and also a flank attack. Signals and messengers to the rear brought them no support. Finally the officers picked up muskets from the field, and the party charged down the parapet, driving off the Confederate sharpshooters until it reached a position of shelter which could be held. There the gallant fellows remained until the grand assault.

Although the capture of Spanish fort and Fort Blakely rendered the Mobile defenses untenable for the Confederates, General Maury clung to the defenses on the west side until April 12, when he marched out with 4,500 soldiers, twenty-seven field guns and all his camp wagons. Retreating to Meridian, Miss., Maury kept his force under arms until news of the surrender of Johnston to Sherman reached him on the 4th of May. On that day all the Confederate forces under arms east of the Mississippi river, about 42,000 men, formally surrendered to Canby, the victor at Mobile. Canby also received the surrender of the last Confederate force in the field, the trans-mississippi army, commanded by General E. Kirby Smith, numbering at the date of surrender, May 26, 1865, about 17,000 men. The last battle of the war took place in General Kirby's department on May 13 at Palmetto ranch, Texas.

PRACTICAL POLITICS OF A DIFFERENT KIND.

If things keep going as they are going nowadays, the American political lexicon will have to be modified in some very important particulars. The words "politics" and "politician" have long been habitually used in a sense by no means complimentary, though there has also been room for a meaning to them which implies nothing unfavorable. But when it comes to the term "practical politics" every one in America understands just what it means—and that is something about which very little that is good can be said. But it begins to look as though the phrase were undergoing a process of vigorous fumigation, and if this goes an much longer we may expect to see people talk of "practical politics" when they mean the increase of economy or the elimination of dishonesty, and employ the term "practical politician" as the highest epithet of praise that can be bestowed upon a public officer.

The latest indication in this line comes from Ohio. Here's the way Governor Herrick has been talking about lobbying to the newspaper men gathered at the banquet of the Ohio Association of Dailies: "Lobbying is a deadly poison in the wellspring of legislation. It is responsible, in the main, for the low estimate in which our law-making bodies are held by many throughout the entire country. The professional lobbyist is a criminal—by that I mean the man who offers a fixed bribe to promote or restrict legislatton. His great crime lies in the destruction of the faith in the honesty of mankind. We must do more than arrest; we must exterminate the professional lobbyist." This is not the talk of a mugwump or a preacher or a theoriest; it is the talk of a practical business man and politician, a man who has "been there" and knows all about it. The Governor proposes, he says, to do all in his power to set on foot this extermination of the lobby; and if he keeps his promise, he will be carrying on the most practical kind of practical politics.

In Philadelphia the country has been treated, for the past week or two, to such an exhibition of redhot practical politics as is hardly witnessed twice in one generation. Mayor Weaver, not a reformer or a saint, but a practical politician, suddenly realized that was practical from their point of view, and, under the stimulus of the great popular uprising, proceeded to furnish them just that brand. The more he has been giving them of it, the more they seem to like it, and the more he seems to be convinced that the most practical thing he can do is to fight it out on that line if it takes him all summer. When a self-constituted committee of eminenly respectable Republicans undertook to draw a herring across the trail by diverting attention to the question of strengthening the party's ticket for the fall elections, Mayor Weaver promptly read the riot act to these gentlemen in a shape of a declaration day that just at the present time he wasn't bothering about trifles and didn't think the people were, either. His practical work of getting Philadelphia straightened out demanded all his attention and all the people attention and such unpractical questions as those of machine politics were not to be allowed standing-room.

Those who remember Mr. Roosevelt as a public speaker in the early part of his career will recall with what gusto he used to speak of himself as a practical politician, a practical Republican politician. He has always thoroughly believed in party organization, and has stood by his party organization at times when most men of his general purposes and character have not done so. But he has all along been one of the most powerful promoters of the merit system in the country; and, since he has been President, he has done a vast amount to fix it firmly in the organization of the Government. He is not only a straight party man, and a believer in party organization, but he is an exceedingly shrewd political calculator. This does not, however, strike him as at all incompatible with the other kind of practical politics—the kind that aims at accomplishing useful results through governmental agency. When he started an investigation of administrative methods the other day, with a view to cutting down waste and securing co-ordination between the departments, he undoubtedly felt that he was engaged in politics of the most practical sort. President Roosevelt is doing yoeman work in the line of disinfecting the phrase "practical politics" and making the right kind of practical politics fashionable.

DEMOCRATS REBEL.

The movement for aggressive opposition to the Poe amendment "within the party," has now been formally launched. Following the unselfish leadership of the heads of the state government, a number of prominent Democrats of Baltimore have issued a call for signers to an anti-Poe platform. The Committee in charge consists of Democrats whose party regularity cannot be challenged. They are: Alfred S. Niles, Archibald B. Taylor, J. Southgate Lemmon, Eugene O'Dunne and Leigh Bonsal. Three of these gentlemen hold public office as Democrats. They will find themselves in the excellent company of prominent party men like Richard M. Venable, Albert S. J. Owens, Edgar H. Gans, William Shepard Bryan, Jr., and Edwin Warfield, all of whom are among those who have already put themselves on record against this iniquitous scheme to enthral the Democracy for all time under a covert appeal to race animosity.

Such a plea might have been made successfully in years agone, but with the increase in intelligence, and especially with the growing realization that fair election laws lies at the very root of representative government, any argument resting upon prejudice and implying the baser motives of conduct to the citizen can only recoil against its authors.

Once put the control of the registration lists in the hands of a party organization and even an upheaval like that of 1895 can be made to spend itself in thin air. The will of the people must be free to assert itself through the ballot-box. This cannot be done if the law be such as to allow of partisan manipulation. Realizing the supreme vice of the proposed amendment, the best element in the Democratic party protests against the erection of a barrier to its own influence and power, for in great crises these barriers become the impregnable fortresses of misrule and corrupt government. The landslide is starting.

No Bald-Headed Consumptives.

There are advantages accruing even from balb heads. It is pointed out by a writer in a medical journal that bald-headed men never suffer from consumption, and that a tendency to baldness is an assurance that the dreaded scourge will pass over him whose thatch grows thin. At first glance it would seem absurd to argue that a man's hair is indicative of his immunity from disease, but the writer who advances this novel theory declares that five years during which he seriously added a record of his patients hair or lack of it his case cared have failed to show a single instance of bald being upon the card of a consumptive. He had under treatment more than 700 cases, and he makes the further statment that in a census of more thau 5,000 teberculosis cases he failed to discover a single suffered who was bald. He makes no effort to explain his theory upon medical grounds, but simply offers the results of his observation for the benefit of the profession, and has invited his brother physicians to write him of any case of a bald-headed consumptive coming under their observation.

MINE DRIVER SHOT AT BLOOMINGTON.

George Harding is Wounded in Shoulder By William Rolland During Quarrel.

William Rolland, aged 19 years, a miner of Westernport, this county, yesterday afternoon, during a quarrel shot George Harding, of near Tunnelton, W. Va., in the left shoulder, making an ugly but not serions wound. Harding was brought to the Western Maryland Hospital, this city, and Rolland escaped and is still at large.

The shooting occurred at Bloomington, Garrett county. The men had quarreled about a week ago, and Monday night they had a fight in Piedmont. They met yesterday afternoon and renewed the quarrel, with the aboye result. Harding was a driver at Buxton mine, where Rolland was employed at times.—Cumberland News.

ONCE PROMINENT FAMILY.

Descendants On a Visit to Friends After An Absence of 35 Years.

Meshack Shultz and wife of Illinois are now on a home visit in Garrett and Allegany counties. This is the only visit in a number of years. They left Grantsville in 1869 and followed the old Shultz family, who had moved some years previous. He was well situated and prosperous—but wished to be near the immense Shultz family then in the west. He was one of the 18 children of Adam Shultz, by his two wives, seven of the 18 still live and strange to say, the oldest is Mrs. Eliza Rover, aged past 83 years, who resides on Keyser's Ridge, in Garrett county and the last in the old home country. A remarkable fact is the Shultz name here once so numerous and influential in the two counties is now about extinct. All are in the great west.

Meshack Shultz, when he went west settled in Shipman, Ill., and at once embarked in active and successful business of various kinds. He became the owner of a considerable acreage of farm lands, but engaged in other departments of business, including banking. He became independent and wealthy and a few years ago he retired from business with an ample reserve for the contingencies of the future.

In 1853 he was married to a Miss Augustine of a very prominent family in Somerset county, Pa. Two years ago they celebrated their golden wedding, both not only living, but in fine health, spirits and activity, he at 72 and she a little below. There are seven children living, all doing for themselves. Any one who may chance to see him, will be surprised to find one so healthy, strong and vivacious as he really is. He loves to be mirthful over the youthful incidents of the "deep past." The visitor named a few days, made a friendly call upon the author of these incidents but a separation of more than a generation made recognition, at least on the part of one, quite tardy. Still the interview was gladsome once worthy of appreciation and remembrance. J. B.

BITTINGER.

After an illness extending over a period of several months, Mrs. Polly Orendorf died at her home near this place on Sunday, June 18th, aged about seventy years. The deceased was the widow of the late Christian Orendorf and is survived by a number of sons and daughters. The interment was made in the Baptist cemetery on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, after impressive services by her pastor.

A good representation of our young folks attended the festival given by the ladies of the Reformed church at New Germany on last Saturday evening.

Miss. Amanda Ellithrope returned last Sunday evening from a short visit with relatives at Rockwood, Pa. She was driven up from Myersdale by Mr. Asa Ordendorf.

Commissioner Stephens was in this section of the county last week looking after the condition of the county roads.

Sheep killing dogs have been doing a large amount of damage to the flocks in this section during the past week, and the farmers are crying loudly for some adequate law to protect them from this abominable nuisance, and it is hoped that our next Legislature will give the dog question its attention.

Mr. N. Custer, of near McHenry, is in this locality this week with a view to securing a permanent location here.

Mr. T. J. Lohr brought a load of fertilizer from Oakland last week which he will use on his farm near here.

PASTOR M'CLELLAND INSTALLED.

The Ceremony Was Performed by Rev. Dr. Byers, of Grafton, last Night.

Last night in the Garrett Memorial church Rev. John A McClelland, who has been filling the pulpit for a number of months, was duly installed pastor of the congregation by Rev. Dr. Byers, of Grafton, in the presence of a large congregation composed of the members of the Presbyterian church and those of other congregations of town.

Rev. Robert M. Ramsay, of Kingwood, delivered a very eloquent sermon eminently suitable to the occasion and impressed his hearers greatly with his earnestness.

Mr. James H. Wilson, of District No. 13, who is spoken of as a possible candidate for County Commissioner on the Republican ticket this fall was business visitor to Oakland yesterday afternoon.

While all the rest of the country is howling at the weather man on account of the hot weather which has been prevailing for a few days, Oakland is very well satisfied with present conditions. Here the mercury has been humping itself pretty lively but little suffering on this account has resulted.

Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Offutt entertained yesterday evening Rev. and Mrs. Robert M. Ramsay, of Kingwood, the former coming here for the purpose of assisting with the installation services of Rev. McClelland as pastor of the Garrett Memorial (Presbyterian) church which took place last night. Rev. Dr. Byers, of Grafton, who installed Rev. McClelland, was the guest of the management of The Oakland.

An entertainment that promises to be very interesting and enjoyable will be a Cantata given in the Oakland Opera House on Friday night next, June 30th. Those taking part in the Cantata will be dressed in the costumes of the different nations they represent. The music will be bright and pleasing. We trust the public generally will give this their generous patronage. Proceeds for the benefit of St. Matthew's P. E. church.

On July 4th the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company will run a special Christian Endeavor train from Grafton to Baltimore. The special will leave Oakland at 2.29 p. m. arriving in Baltimore at 9.45 p. m. The rate from this point to Baltimore for the round trip will be $7.95 and tickets will be honored for return passage until July 15th.

Ex-Governor A. B. Fleming was brought to his home near Oakland Tuesday afternoon from Fairmont where he had been quite ill for two week. Within the next two weeks the Governor in company with Mrs. Fleming and Dr. Cook, of Fairmont, will sail from New York for Europe where they will visit the health resorts of that country in hopes of restoring the vigor of the distinguished West Virginian.

A Terrific Wind, Hail and Rain Storm.

Last Tuesday morning about 3.30 o'clock the lower section of Garrett county was visited by one of the most terrific wind, hail and rain storms in its history. In places vegetation was beaten into the ground and the corn fields were either washed entirely out or overed up. Mr. W. H. Jacobs had 160 panels of fence blown down and the stone corners of his fences were blown out of their places. The hail broke the window panes in Mr. Jacob's residence, knocking them half across the rooms, and the rain poured down in torrents. The roads are in a wretched condition as a result of the storm.

Prosperous Times at The Oakland.

At the season of the year when things are just opening with the proprietors of summer resorts and the outlook for patronage is generally hidden behind clouds of uncertainty, the new proprietors of The Oakland are in high spirits with their success thus far and hold rosy views for the future as everything points to a most prosperous season with them.

The hotel was opened on last Thursday morning and on that day more than twenty persons registered. This record has never been equalled since the hotel was first opened to the public. The patrons are loud in their praise of the management and the table service as well as the scrupulous cleanliness of everythieg surrounding the place.

Six Thousand Indictments.

A total of 6,100 indictments were returned by the Marshall county grand jury against six breweries, four in West Virginia and two in Ohio, for failing to take out wholsalers' licenses. This is a record for the state. Next week the grand juries meet in Clarksburg and Wheeling, and will consider like cases. If the Marshall county indictments stand, prosecuting attorney of that county will get $61,000, based on the stipulated $10 for each indictment allowed by the state.

NOTICE OF Bond Sale!

Notice as to the Sale of Bonds to Pay for the Improvements of the Streets of the Town of Oakland, Maryland.

Notice is hereby given that the Mayor and Town Council of the Town of Oakland, Garrett County, Maryland, will meet at their Council Chamber in said town on

MONDAY,
the 3d Day of July, 1905
AT 8 O'CLOCK P. M.

of said day, to receive and examine sealed bids for the purchase of Four Thousand Dollars of the Municipal Bonds of said Town as authorized by Chapter 24 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, 1898, for the purpose of paying for the improvement of the streets of said town.

The said Bonds will be issued in the denomination of One Hundred Dollars each. Said Bonds to be drawn in accordance with the provisions of the aforesaid Act of Assembly and the ordinance of said Town providing for said issue with interest bearing coupon bonds attached at four per cent. interest payable semi-annually on the first days of July and January of each year after the date of said issue, but not to bear interest until after the first day of January, 1906, but none of said bonds will be payable before the first day of January, 1925, after that date they will be paid at the rate of one thousand dollars per year, but redeemable at the pleasure of the Mayor and Town Council of said town.

The principal and interest will be payable at the Garrett National Bank, Oakland, Maryland.

The bonds are to be paid for within ten days after the notice that the same are ready for delivery.

Said bonds will be awarded to the highest responsible bidder or bidders at a sum not less than their par value and interest after the first day of January, 1906, said bids to be without conditions or qualifications. All such bids shall be accompanied by the currency or a certified check payable to the order of the Mayor and Town Council of Oakland without condition for an amount equal to ten per cent. of the amount of said bid and in all cases where said bids are not received or accepted said money or check will be returned to the owner or owners.

In case any of said bonds are awarded to a bidder or bidders and they refuse to accept and pay for the same when ready for delivery and upon being notified of the same either by writing or orally, then the amount of ten per cent. so advanced on said bids shall be forfeited to the town of Oakland, and shall be turned over to the credit of the Mayor and Town Council of Oakland as liquidated damages for breach of contract on the part of said bidder and bidders.

The right to reject any and all bids is hereby reserved to the Mayor and Town Council of Oakland, Maryland.

PASTOR M'CLELLAND INSTALLED.

The Ceremony Was Performed by Rev. Dr. Byers, of Grafton, last Night.

Last night in the Garrett Memorial church Rev. John A McClelland, who has been filling the pulpit for a number of months, was duly installed pastor of the congregation by Rev. Dr. Byers, of Grafton, in the presence of a large congregation composed of the members of the Presbyterian church and those of other congregations of town.

Rev. Robert M. Ramsay, of Kingwood, delivered a very eloquent sermon eminently suitable to the occasion and impressed his hearers greatly with his earnestness.

Mr. James H. Wilson, of District No. 13, who is spoken of as a possible candidate for County Commissioner on the Republican ticket this fall, was business visitor to Oakland yesterday afternoon.

While all the rest of the country is howling at the weather man on account of the hot weather which has been prevailing for a few days, Oakland is very well satisfied with present conditions. Here the mercury has been humping itself pretty lively but little suffering on this account has resulted.

Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Offutt entertained yesterday evening Rev. and Mrs. Robert M. Ramsay, of Kingwood, the former coming here for the purpose of assisting with the installation services of Rev. McClelland as pastor of the Garrett Memorial (Presbyterian) church which took place last night. Rev. Dr. Byers, of Grafton, who installed Rev. McClelland, was the guest of the management of The Oakland.

An entertainment that promises to be very interesting and enjoyable will be a Cantata given in the Oakland Opera House on Friday night next, June 30th. Those taking part in the Cantata will be dressed in the costumes of the different nations they represent. The music will be bright and pleasing. We trust the public generally will give this their generous patronage. Proceeds for the benefit of St. Matthew's P. E. church.

On July 4th the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company will run a special Christian Endeavor train from Grafton to Baltimore. The special will leave Oakland at 2.29 p. m. arriving in Baltimore at 9.45 p. m. The rate from this point to Baltimore for the round trip will be $7.95 and tickets will be honored for return passage until July 15th.

Ex-Governor A. B. Fleming was brought to his home near Oakland Tuesday afternoon from Fairmont where he had been quite ill for two week. Within the next two weeks the Governor in company with Mrs. Fleming and Dr. Cook, of Fairmont, will sail from New York for Europe where they will visit the health resorts of that country in hopes of restoring the vigor of the distinguished West Virginian.

A Terrific Wind, Hail and Rain Storm.

Last Tuesday morning about 3.30 o'clock the lower section of Garrett county was visited by one of the most terrific wind, hail and rain storms in its history. In places vegetation was beaten into the ground and the corn fields were either washed entirely out or overed up. Mr. W. H. Jacobs had 160 panels of fence blown down and the stone corners of his fences were blown out of their places. The hail broke the window panes in Mr. Jacob's residence, knocking them half across the rooms, and the rain poured down in torrents. The roads are in a wretched condition as a result of the storm.

Prosperous Times at The Oakland.

At the season of the year when things are just opening with the proprietors of summer resorts and the outlook for patronage is generally hidden behind clouds of uncertainty, the new proprietors of The Oakland are in high spirits with their success thus far and hold rosy views for the future as everything points to a most prosperous season with them.

The hotel was opened on last Thursday morning and on that day more than twenty persons registered. This record has never been equalled since the hotel was first opened to the public. The patrons are loud in their praise of the management and the table service as well as the scrupulous cleanliness of everythieg surrounding the place.

Six Thousand Indictments.

A total of 6,100 indictments were returned by the Marshall county grand jury against six breweries, four in West Virginia and two in Ohio, for failing to take out wholsalers' licenses. This is a record for the state. Next week the grand juries meet in Clarksburg and Wheeling, and will consider like cases. If the Marshall county indictments stand, prosecuting attorney of that county will get $61,000, based on the stipulated $10 for each indictment allowed by the state.

JAPANESE LOSSES.

If we are to give full credit to the official report of the Surgeon-General of Gen. Oku's army, science has succeeded in robbing war of much of its terrors. Just how many men are in Gen. Oku's army cannot be definitely known at present, but report gives him all the way up to 200,000. In all these who were campaigning in a foreign country, enduring the rigors of a harsh climate and subject to extraordinary hardships, there were only 24,642 cases of diseases, of which but 40 resulted fatally. This seems amazing, because it shows the army to have been a very much healthier place than home, since more than 40 men would have died at home in the seven months from May 6 to Dec. 1. Of the 24,642 hospital cases, 18,578, or three out of four, recovered, and 2,609 were sent home. Probably a large proportion of these died, which will help explain the Surgeons-General's low death rate in the field. There were only 193 cases of typhoid and 342 of dysentery, which shows that there must have been rigid regulations in regard to drinking water and that these regulations were scrupulously obeyed by all. The most serious ailment was that of beri-beri, of which there were 5,700 cases. No statement is given as to the deaths resulting from this terrible disease, and probably it was much larger than the Japanese care to publish. The report show what great strides have been made in the sanitary science,and what can be done by careful attention to camp hygiene, to whichall of this surprising result is

The Surgeon-General's report of the casualties is highly interesting. He says that from May 6 to Dec. 16 the battle losses in the whole army were 210 officers and 4,917 men killed and 743 officers and 20,337 men wounded, with but four officers and 402 men missing. This would make a total of 26,207. The Union loss at Gettysburg in three days' fighting from about 67,000 men, actually engaged, or from one-half to one-third of the number under Gen. Oku, was 2,834 killed, 13,709 wounded and 6,643 missing. Total 23,186. A large number of those reported wounded were actually killed. There were enough of these to raise total killed up to about 5,000, or almost exactly the same number that the Japanese lost in their seven months' campaign. Also a large portion of those reported missing were wounded, and many died. Also, apparently, the Japanese lost about as many in seven months out of their from 150,000 to 200,000 men as 55,000 Union soldiers lost in two days at Chickamaugua, or in one day at Antietam.

In giving the history of those struck by bullets, we find the result of advanced sanitary science to be quite as striking as in the treatment of diseases. Only 16 per cent of the wounded died and 19 per cent recovered in the field. About 65 per cent, or two-thirds, were so severely wounded as to be sent home to Japan for convalescence.

The old story is repeated as to the proportion of hurts inflicted by the different arms, since 85 per cent of the wounds, or eight and one-half out of every 10, were inflicted by bullets, only eight per cent by artillery and but seven per cent by bayonet and saber. The precentage of bayonet and saber wounds is somewhat larger than is usual in war, showing that there were occasionally parties who came close enough together to use steel. These collisions must have been quite rare, however, and probably resulted in the victors massacreing all the men they captured, a supposition which is borne out by the small number of the missing. Probably all of these bayonet and saber wounds were made when small parties were surprised, overcome and massacred. That the Japanese officers fought in the ranks with their men, the same as is the custom in the American army, is shown by the remarkable likeness of the proportion of officers killed and wounded to the men, as shown by the same statistics of the American armies. For example, the Japanese lost 210 officers killed to 4,617 men. The Surgeon-General's report of the losses at Gettysburg give 264 officers killed to 20,909 men. The Japanese report 753 officers wounded to 20,837 men. The Surgeon-General's report of Gettysburg give 1,145 officers to 13,384 men. The higher percentage of American officers is due partially to the fact that the Union regiments were numerically small at the time of the battle of Gettysburg, and that there is a larger proportion of officers to men in American than in Japanese regiments. The Japanese regiments went into the campaign with full ranks, while at Gettysburg the regiments which had numbered 1,000 were cut down by the time they entered the battle to one-half and in some cases one-third of their original strength.

The German Baptist Brethren Conference, Bristol, Tennessee.

May 30th, on train No. 14, started for Annual Conference at Bristol, Tennessee. It is a city of about 15,000 inhabitants, a large proportion of the town are colored people, some of whom are quite well to do financially, and of a good class.

The trip to the place of meeting was of usual waits and delays. I changed but four times. The country, in the lay of the land, was not what I expected. After leaving the lower portion of the Shenandoah Valley, the country was quite broken with knobs and peak after peak rising skyward, the timber quite ordinary and the land on the slopes untillable, and in some places, rocky places like Shenandoah City, Roanoke, and other towns are an exception. It is not the farming country that I had expected to see. The buildings in the rural district are very ordinary and principally occupied by the colored people.

However, before reaching the city of Bristol the valley widened out and was more fertile and not so knobby. Arriving at our destination two hours late, on the 31st, we took a trolley car for the grounds. Venola Park is a beautiful park, just rolling enough to drain well, densly shaded by trees of 40 years growth. A Tabernacle that would seat from 4,000 to 5,000 people, dining hall, restaurant, ticket office, Gospel Messenger office and stand, committee room, in which I spent the greater part of my time, had been erected on the park for our use.

Our people practically were unknown to the people of Bristol and her surroundings. There was considerable surmising as to what the conference would be. Fifteen thousand people, of whose customs, habits and religion were to these people a blank, came into their midst.

For instance, a miuister of one of the leading churches, (colored) said, "that some of the leading business men advised that the people had better not go on the grounds, and I so advised my congregation from the pulpit. But when your people began arriving, I said to my wife, I shall go up the depot and see what these people are like. I was somewhat dubious, but I went back and told my wife that these people are all right; they seem so cheerful, and manifest so much love among themselves and everybody they met with. I also, said, 'I am not afraid of these people.' If I am to be killed I would rather be killed by these people than any I ever saw." He came to the grounds with his people and enjoyed the meetings.

One of the managers said they had some trouble in getting lodging for our sisters; why this was he did not say. When the churches were opened to us, it was with the request that we preach the gospel. Whether they thought we would preach Mormonism or some other heresy I do not know. I learned afterward that it was said that they never heard the Gospel preached so plainly. The ministry and the congregations were highly pleased. I saw the change before we left the grounds. The Board of Trade of the city, gave us an urgent invitation to meet with them again next year. The accommodations and treatment could not have been better, the meeting was a pleasant one. The open conference had four sessions closing on Wednesday evening. The name question was among the most important ones, but they fell back to the old name.

The weather upon the whole was all that could be hoped for. I arrived home safely on June 7th, greatly pleased with my trip and the meetings.—C. G. L. Myersdale Republican.

Deer Park Hotel, Deer Park, Md.

This famous Allegheny Mountain Hosterly will open on June 24, with prospects for the most brilliant season in its history. The hotel and cottages have been renovated and painted, inside and out. Two of the choicest cottages can be secured if application is made at once. Many suites of rooms have been engaged in the hotel building and both annexes.

The popularity of Deer Park is due to its splendid location, 2,800 feet above the sea level, out of range of malaria and mosquitoes. Every convenience is provided for guests. The rooms are delightful and the cuisine excellent. The Hotel is provided with all modern improvements for comfort; with Bowling Alleys, Billiard Rooms, Tennis Courts, Golf Links, Swimming pools, etc., for amusement. An entirely new Livery Equipment has been installed.

Deer Park is on the direct line of the Baltimore & Ohio between New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Wheeling, Columbus and Chicago, having the excellent advantage of through vestibuled trains from each of these cities with through Pullman service during the season from and to Pittsburg.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW

The twelve lessons of the quarter are like the twelve jewels in the high priest's breastplate. They are of priceless value. Each has its own peculiar charm. After its contents have been apparently exhausted, each is sure to emit an unexpected ray. They are so placed with reference to each other that each enhances the other.

The two parables, "The Good Shepherd," and "The Vine and the Branches," illustrate Jesus' method of teaching.

He spake of lilies, vines, and corn,
The sparrow, and the raven,
And words so natural, so wise
Were on men's hearts engraven,
And yeast and bread and flax and cloth
And eggs and fish and candles,
See how the whole familiar world
He most Divinely handles.

In His parable of the Good Shepherd (Lesson I), Jesus held the mirror before the hierarchy of His day with a fearless hand. He showed it mercenary spirit. It worked havoc in the highest interests of men. Its killed in the realm of spiritual values On this dark background Jesus projected the ideal of the true shepherd. He enters upon His function in the appointed way. His life is spent in care of the flock. He calleth, leadeth, putteth forth, goes before.

The Vine (Lesson VI) was one of most familiar and beautiful of natural objects—the king of fruits in Palestine, source of wealth, joy and strength to the people. In every respect it was worthy of the dignified and emblematic use Jesus made of it. In the allegory Jesus asserts His fundamental relation to humanity. He is source of spiritual life and fruitfulness. Abiding in the stock (Jesus) and pruned by the husbandman (the Father), the branches (the disciples) live and bear fruit. Apart from the stock the branches they wither. Figurative language could not be used more skillfully.

Jesus' parables are miracles in word. His miracles are parables in deed. The miracle of the raising of Lazarus (Lesson II) is the parable which teaches that the resurrection and immortal life are not far off abstractions, but that they are concreted in an immanent Christ. Those who are joined to Him whether dead or living (as we use the words) live (in the higher meaning which Jesus has put into the word). The dead have not lost, the living can not lose this immortal life. He that hath the Son hath life.

Jesus acted out still another parable when He washed His disciples' feet (Lesson V). It was to rebuke the unseemly scramble for place in which His disciples engaged at the last supper, that Jesus performed the most menial task of the scullery drudge. He put an end to caste, place, and precedence. Henceforth His disciples must cherish such a feeling towards one another as would make them willing to perform the most lowly service for each other.

A social occasion and a great popular ovation next arrest our attention. The supper at Bethany (Lesson III) was a high and loving courtesy shown to Jesus. One significant and timely deed lifted this feast to the level of a sacrament. Mary brought out of her boudoir an Oriental cruse of alabaster filled with liquid perfume and poured it upon Jesus' head and feet. Mary gave Jesus a momentary embalming; He embalmed her forever in the incense of His praise. The popular ovation was on His entry into Jerusalem. (Lesson IV.) It was not a mere passing incident—an accident of His approach to the city. Jesus planned this entry, designed to make it effective. He was not captured by the multitude; He captured it and used it for His purpose. The orderly precision of all His movements indicates this. He openly came to His own. The issue was pressed. They must accept or reject. The test was made in no dark corner—nothing could have been more conspicuous.

Jesus puts a period to His ministry with a prayer (Lesson VII), commonly called "the high priestly prayer." The high priest of the old dispensation carried the twelve tribes upon his bosom before the Lord in the twelve precious stones which formed his breastplate. The high priest of the new dispensation carried the twelve apostles upon His bosom. Jesus stands with the little group of men to whom he had made the greatest possible revelation, and whom He expects in their turn to be revealers of His truth. He must needs leave them. If they fail, all is lost. He cries to heaven for them, that they may be kept and sanctified and their unity preserved.

Two types of character comes in sharpest contrast when Jesus appears before Pilate for trial. (Lesson VIII.) Pilate, time-server, whose ruling motive was to keep his place, to do which he would even condemn the innocent. Jesus, King in the realm of truth, whose subjects are the lovers of truth. The outcome of these two types is significant. Pilate's time-serving had small reward. He kept office only six years longer. Jesus' dominion, on the contrary, ever augmenting, has lasted for twenty centuries, and extends from sea to sea.

The procession to the cross (Lesson IX) was the most pitiful earth has ever seen. The evangelists incidentally suggest how we should treat that pitiful scene. Their quadruple description of the crucifixion is a literary marvel. Though a circumstance of transcendent importance, the account is surprisingly condensed. Nature herself drew a veil of darkness around the scene. The seven words from the cross yield richer gains than any morbid spinning out of mere physical pains.

The open tomb (Lesson X) was converted into a bureau of information for the troubled disciples. White-liveried attendants were there to point them to the place where the Lord lay, and to the grave-clothes, laid in such orderly fashion as to preclude the idea of a hasty and clandestine removal, and to announce the blessed truth, "He has risen!"

Prepared message (Lesson XI) always comes to prepared person. It was no accident that this man had this vision. By a long course of schooling, to which he submitted intelligently, he became singularly open to the Divine. By the same process he was prepared to submit what he received. The Apocalypse has been called a "Tract for Bad Times." It was written in an age of persecution. Its purpose was to assure foreboding minds of ultimate victory in spite of current contradictions. It opens the vista of the future, and pictures Jesus triumphant.

Under the material emblem (Lesson XII) of a city adorned and beautified, the spiritual betterment of humanity is shadowed. The plain and fashion of the city is from heaven. The ideals of right human living are Divine. As these ideals are realized, and in that proportion God lives with and in men. In the ratio of righteousness (right living) tears are dried. Wrong living (sin) is the sole cause of tears, painful death, sorrow, and crying.

Kansas Luck.

"When Kansas was born she butted right into hard luck," declared the Lawrence Gazette, which brings an array of its statement. "The war cyclone had its center here, and then there came the grasshoppers and the years of crop failures.

"Then there was a dearth of corn in the nation, and Kansas took the contract for supplying the demand. So well was the job done that corn could not be sold, and had to be used for fuel. From a dollar a bushel it went down to 8 cents, and Kansas fields were covered with unsalable piles of it.

"Then wheat got away up, and Kansas again took a contract to furnish wheat for all men. She broke the records of the world with her crops, but instead of getting a dollar a bushel the price went down to 30 cents, which did not pay the cost of production.

"Then Kansas changed her tactics and went into practical politics. The Populists wave buried the state, and immediately political stock went down until the commonwealth went broke on that commodity.

"Then all at once something new happened. Oil from the earth was worth millions to the people who had it. Kansas dug down and found unlimited quantites. The wealth of Ophar was at our feet. Thousands of wells went down, and millions of barrels of oil came bubbling up. At once the price of oil went down until a barrel of it was worth less than a barrel of water at harvest time. The gas, too, which cost millions to the people of other states and communities, was found, only to be turned loose to poison the atmosphere and wreck the hopes of those who found it.

"As a discoverer Kansas is a hoodoo. If we should find gold in virgin purity that could be mined by the ton gold would at once be demonetized and sold as lead on the market. If a cave of dimonds should be discovered diamonds would be used for paving stones and be sold by the ton. Kansas is original, very original, but her orginality has never brought anything for her save advertising space"—Lawrence (Kan.) Gazette.

THE AMERICAN BRAND OF DIPLOMACY.

The choice of Washington as the scene of peace negotiations between Japan and Russia indicates a change in the axis of the diplomatic world. A couple of centuries ago it was the fashion to go to Holland to settle disputes, and down to the last few years Washington was considered quite outside the pale of diplomatic civilization. Then everything centered round London, Paris, Berlin or The Hague, but perhaps the diplomatic chart of the Twentieth Century may have its longitude reckoned from the meridian of Washington.

We hear a great deal these days about "American diplomacy." It is advertised as the only genuine brand, and advice is freely given to ask for it and to take no substitute. Of course, much of that talk is "tommyrot," intended chiefly for the use of Bunkum county. Nevertheless, there are certain qualties about our diplomacy which make it very efficacious. It is built on business principals. The American diplomatist is generaly a hard-headed business man who has been used to dealing practically with large and important questions of commerce, law, politics or what not. When he is confronted with a diplomatic problem he treats it like any other matter of business and goes at it in the most direct and practical way that suggests itself. He does not play the game according to the rules laid down in the books. He does not feel bound down by precedents. This is not because he is ignorant of the protocol, but simply because he takes a large, clear view of the situation and does not bother about trifles. The American negotiator may sometimes do things which unnecessarily shock respectable gentlemen of the "tape and sealing-wax office," but it is the defect which goes with his qualities. In great diplomatic affairs his business instincts generally inspire him to go straight for his object and to get there with both feet—and he succeeds partly by the very audacity of his action.

More over, American diplomacy usually goes right to headquarters, and doesn't waste time on underlings. It has happened more than once that an American has gone straight to a foreign sovereign and arranged affairs with him in a satisfactory way while foreign diplomats of importance and ability have cooled their heels in the ante-room of a comparatively unimportant Minister of State, thereby wasting their time and losing the game through fear of breaking some minor law of diplomatic tradition. Such diplomats follow the carriage roads while the American is riding straight across country almost upon the heels of the hounds.

This vigorous diplomacy comes from the fact that we are still a young and vigorous people. Unfortunately, it will wear off. After we have been in the diplomatic world a while we shall become more timid and more conventional; our diplomatic manners will become more blase, and will lose their dash. But, for the present, we are making the running. With us, in diplomacy as in everything else, "business is business," and in successfully bringing about the peace conference the President has shown the proper American method of picking up a red-hot proposition with a firm grip.

JAPANESE LOSSES.

If we are to give full credit to the official report of the Surgeon-General of Gen. Oku's army, science has succeeded in robbing war of much of its terrors. Just how many men are in Gen. Oku's army cannot be definitely known at present, but report gives him all the way up to 200,000. In all these who were campaigning in a foreign country, enduring the rigors of a harsh climate and subject to extraordinary hardships, there were only 24,642 cases of diseases, of which but 40 resulted fatally. This seems amazing, because it shows the army to have been a very much healthier place than home, since more than 40 men would have died at home in the seven months from May 6 to Dec. 1. Of the 24,642 hospital cases, 18,578, or three out of four, recovered, and 2,609 were sent home. Probably a large proportion of these died, which will help explain the Surgeons-General's low death rate in the field. There were only 193 cases of typhoid and 342 of dysentery, which shows that there must have been rigid regulations in regard to drinking water and that these regulations were scrupulously obeyed by all. The most serious ailment was that of beri-beri, of which there were 5,700 cases. No statement is given as to the deaths resulting from this terrible disease, and probably it was much larger than the Japanese care to publish. The report show what great strides have been made in the sanitary science,and what can be done by careful attention to camp hygiene, to whichall of this surprising result is

The Surgeon-General's report of the casualties is highly interesting. He says that from May 6 to Dec. 16 the battle losses in the whole army were 210 officers and 4,917 men killed and 743 officers and 20,337 men wounded, with but four officers and 402 men missing. This would make a total of 26,207. The Union loss at Gettysburg in three days' fighting from about 67,000 men, actually engaged, or from one-half to one-third of the number under Gen. Oku, was 2,834 killed, 13,709 wounded and 6,643 missing. Total 23,186. A large number of those reported wounded were actually killed. There were enough of these to raise total killed up to about 5,000, or almost exactly the same number that the Japanese lost in their seven months' campaign. Also a large portion of those reported missing were wounded, and many died. Also, apparently, the Japanese lost about as many in seven months out of their from 150,000 to 200,000 men as 55,000 Union soldiers lost in two days at Chickamaugua, or in one day at Antietam.

In giving the history of those struck by bullets, we find the result of advanced sanitary science to be quite as striking as in the treatment of diseases. Only 16 per cent of the wounded died and 19 per cent recovered in the field. About 65 per cent, or two-thirds, were so severely wounded as to be sent home to Japan for convalescence.

The old story is repeated as to the proportion of hurts inflicted by the different arms, since 85 per cent of the wounds, or eight and one-half out of every 10, were inflicted by bullets, only eight per cent by artillery and but seven per cent by bayonet and saber. The precentage of bayonet and saber wounds is somewhat larger than is usual in war, showing that there were occasionally parties who came close enough together to use steel. These collisions must have been quite rare, however, and probably resulted in the victors massacreing all the men they captured, a supposition which is borne out by the small number of the missing. Probably all of these bayonet and saber wounds were made when small parties were surprised, overcome and massacred. That the Japanese officers fought in the ranks with their men, the same as is the custom in the American army, is shown by the remarkable likeness of the proportion of officers killed and wounded to the men, as shown by the same statistics of the American armies. For example, the Japanese lost 210 officers killed to 4,617 men. The Surgeon-General's report of the losses at Gettysburg give 264 officers killed to 20,909 men. The Japanese report 753 officers wounded to 20,837 men. The Surgeon-General's report of Gettysburg give 1,145 officers to 13,384 men. The higher percentage of American officers is due partially to the fact that the Union regiments were numerically small at the time of the battle of Gettysburg, and that there is a larger proportion of officers to men in American than in Japanese regiments. The Japanese regiments went into the campaign with full ranks, while at Gettysburg the regiments which had numbered 1,000 were cut down by the time they entered the battle to one-half and in some cases one-third of their original strength.

The German Baptist Brethren Conference, Bristol, Tennessee.

May 30th, on train No. 14, started for Annual Conference at Bristol, Tennessee. It is a city of about 15,000 inhabitants, a large proportion of the town are colored people, some of whom are quite well to do financially, and of a good class.

The trip to the place of meeting was of usual waits and delays. I changed but four times. The country, in the lay of the land, was not what I expected. After leaving the lower portion of the Shenandoah Valley, the country was quite broken with knobs and peak after peak rising skyward, the timber quite ordinary and the land on the slopes untillable, and in some places, rocky places like Shenandoah City, Roanoke, and other towns are an exception. It is not the farming country that I had expected to see. The buildings in the rural district are very ordinary and principally occupied by the colored people.

However, before reaching the city of Bristol the valley widened out and was more fertile and not so knobby. Arriving at our destination two hours late, on the 31st, we took a trolley car for the grounds. Venola Park is a beautiful park, just rolling enough to drain well, densly shaded by trees of 40 years growth. A Tabernacle that would seat from 4,000 to 5,000 people, dining hall, restaurant, ticket office, Gospel Messenger office and stand, committee room, in which I spent the greater part of my time, had been erected on the park for our use.

Our people practically were unknown to the people of Bristol and her surroundings. There was considerable surmising as to what the conference would be. Fifteen thousand people, of whose customs, habits and religion were to these people a blank, came into their midst.

For instance, a minister of one of the leading churches, (colored) said, "that some of the leading business men advised that the people had better not go on the grounds, and I so advised my congregation from the pulpit. But when your people began arriving, I said to my wife, I shall go up the depot and see what these people are like. I was somewhat dubious, but I went back and told my wife that these people are all right; they seem so cheerful, and manifest so much love among themselves and everybody they met with. I also, said, 'I am not afraid of these people.' If I am to be killed I would rather be killed by these people than any I ever saw." He came to the grounds with his people and enjoyed the meetings.

One of the managers said they had some trouble in getting lodging for our sisters; why this was he did not say. When the churches were opened to us, it was with the request that we preach the gospel. Whether they thought we would preach Mormonism or some other heresy I do not know. I learned afterward that it was said that they never heard the Gospel preached so plainly. The ministry and the congregations were highly pleased. I saw the change before we left the grounds. The Board of Trade of the city, gave us an urgent invitation to meet with them again next year. The accommodations and treatment could not have been better, the meeting was a pleasant one. The open conference had four sessions closing on Wednesday evening. The name question was among the most important ones, but they fell back to the old name.

The weather upon the whole was all that could be hoped for. I arrived home safely on June 7th, greatly pleased with my trip and the meetings.—C. G. L. Myersdale Republican.

Deer Park Hotel, Deer Park, Md.

This famous Allegheny Mountain Hosterly will open on June 24, with prospects for the most brilliant season in its history. The hotel and cottages have been renovated and painted, inside and out. Two of the choicest cottages can be secured if application is made at once. Many suites of rooms have been engaged in the hotel building and both annexes.

The popularity of Deer Park is due to its splendid location, 2,800 feet above the sea level, out of range of malaria and mosquitoes. Every convenience is provided for guests. The rooms are delightful and the cuisine excellent. The Hotel is provided with all modern improvements for comfort; with Bowling Alleys, Billiard Rooms, Tennis Courts, Golf Links, Swimming pools, etc., for amusement. An entirely new Livery Equipment has been installed.

Deer Park is on the direct line of the Baltimore & Ohio between New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Wheeling, Columbus and Chicago, having the excellent advantage of through vestibuled trains from each of these cities with through Pullman service during the season from and to Pittsburg.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW

The twelve lessons of the quarter are like the twelve jewels in the high priest's breastplate. They are of priceless value. Each has its own peculiar charm. After its contents have been apparently exhausted, each is sure to emit an unexpected ray. They are so placed with reference to each other that each enhances the other.

The two parables, "The Good Shepherd,' and "The Vine and the Branches," illustrate Jesus' method of teaching.

He spake of lilies, vines, and corn,
The sparrow, and the raven.
And words so natural, so wise
Were on men's hearts engraven,
And yeast and bread and flax and cloth
And eggs and fish and candles.
See how the whole familiar world
He most Divinely handles.

In His parable of the Good Shepherd (Lesson I), Jesus held the mirror before the hierarchy of His day with a fearless hand. He showed it mercenary spirit. It worked havoc in the highest interests of men. Its killed in the realm of spiritual values On this dark background Jesus projected the ideal of the true shepherd. He enters upon His function in the appointed way. His life is spent in care of the flock. He calleth, leadeth, putteth forth, goes before.

The Vine (Lesson VI) was one of most familiar and beautiful of natural objects—the king of fruits in Palestine, source of wealth, joy and strength to the people. In every respect it was worthy of the dignified and emblematic use Jesus made of it. In the allegory Jesus asserts His fundamental relation to humanity. He is source of spiritual life and fruitfulness. Abiding in the stock (Jesus) and pruned by the husbandman (the Father), the branches (the disciples) live and bear fruit. Apart from the stock the branches they wither. Figurative language could not be used more skillfully.

Jesus' parables are miracles in word. His miracles are parables in deed. The miracle of the raising of Lazarus (Lesson II) is the parable which teaches that the resurrection and immortal life are not far off abstractions, but that they are concreted in an immanent Christ. Those who are joined to Him whether dead or living (as we use the words) live (in the higher meaning which Jesus has put into the word). The dead have not lost, the living can not lose this immortal life. He that hath the Son hath life.

Jesus acted out still another parable when He washed His disciples' feet (Lesson V). It was to rebuke the unseemly scramble for place in which His disciples engaged at the last supper, that Jesus performed the most menial task of the scullery drudge. He put an end to caste, place, and precedence. Henceforth His disciples must cherish such a feeling towards one another as would make them willing to perform the most lowly service for each other.

A social occasion and a great popular ovation next arrest our attention. The supper at Bethany (Lesson III) was a high and loving courtesy shown to Jesus. One significant and timely deed lifted this feast to the level of a sacrament. Mary brought out of her boudoir an Oriental cruse of alabaster filled with liquid perfume and poured it upon Jesus' head and feet. Mary gave Jesus a momentary embalming; He embalmed her forever in the incense of His praise. The popular ovation was on His entry into Jerusalem. (Lesson IV.) It was not a mere passing incident—an accident of His approach to the city. Jesus planned this entry, designed to make it effective. He was not captured by the multitude; He captured it and used it for His purpose. The orderly precision of all His movements indicates this. He openly came to His own. The issue was pressed. They must accept or reject. The test was made in no dark corner—nothing could have been more conspicuous.

Jesus puts a period to His ministry with a prayer (Lesson VII), commonly called "the high priestly prayer." The high priest of the old dispensation carried the twelve tribes upon his bosom before the Lord in the twelve precious stones which formed his breastplate. The high priest of the new dispensation carried the twelve apostles upon His bosom. Jesus stands with the little group of men to whom he had made the greatest possible revelation, and whom He expects in their turn to be revealers of His truth. He must needs leave them. If they fail, all is lost. He cries to heaven for them, that they may be kept and sanctified and their unity preserved.

Two types of character comes in sharpest contrast when Jesus appears before Pilate for trial. (Lesson VIII.) Pilate, time-server, whose ruling motive was to keep his place, to do which he would even condemn the innocent. Jesus, King in the realm of truth, whose subjects are the lovers of truth. The outcome of these two types is significant. Pilate's time-serving had small reward. He kept office only six years longer. Jesus' dominion, on the contrary, ever augmenting, has lasted for twenty centuries, and extends from sea to sea.

The procession to the cross (Lesson IX) was the most pitiful earth has ever seen. The evagelists incidentally suggest how we should treat that pitiful scene. Their quadruple description of the crucifixion is a literary marvel. Though a circumstance of transcendent importance, the account is surprisingly condensed. Nature herself drew a veil of darkness around the scene. The seven words from the cross yield richer gains than any morbid spinning out of mere physical pains.

The open tomb (Lesson X) was converted into a bureau of information for the troubled disciples. White-liveried attendants were there to point them to the place where the Lord lay, and to the grave-clothes, laid in such orderly fashion as to preclude the idea of a hasty and clandestine removal, and to announce the blessed truth, "He has risen!"

Prepared message (Lesson XI) always comes to prepared person. It was no accident that this man had this vision. By a long course of schooling, to which he submitted intelligently, he became singularly open to the Divine. By the same process he was prepared to submit what he received. The Apocalypse has been called a "Tract for Bad Times." It was written in an age of persecution. Its purpose was to assure foreboding minds of ultimate victory in spite of current contradictions. It opens the vista of the future, and pictures Jesus triumphant.

Under the material emblem (Lesson XII) of a city adorned and beautified, the spiritual betterment of humanity is shadowed. The plain and fashion of the city is from heaven. The ideals of right human living are Divine. As these ideals are realized, and in that proportion God lives with and in men. In the ratio of righteousness (right living) tears are dried. Wrong living (sin) is the sole cause of tears, painful death, sorrow, and crying.

Kansas Luck.

"When Kansas was born she butted right into hard luck," declared the Lawrence Gazette, which brings an array of its statement. "The war cyclone had its center here, and then there came the grasshoppers and the years of crop failures.

"Then there was a dearth of corn in the nation, and Kansas took the contract for supplying the demand. So well was the job done that corn could not be sold, and had to be used for fuel. From a dollar a bushel it went down to 8 cents, and Kansas fields were covered with unsalable piles of it.

"Then wheat got away up, and Kansas again took a contract to furnish wheat for all men. She broke the records of ths world with her crops, but instead of getting a dollar a bushel the price went down to 30 cents, which did not pay the cost of production.

"Then Kansas changed her tacties and went into practical politics. The Popul ists wave buried the state, and immediately political stock went down until the commonwealth went broke on that commodity.

"Then all at once something new happened. Oil from the earth was worth millions to the people who had it. Kansas dug down and found unlimited quantites. The wealth of Ophar was at our feet. Thousands of wells went down, and millions of barrels of oil came bubbling up. At once the price of oil went down until a barrel of it was worth less than a barrel of water at harvest time. The gas, too, which cost millions to the people of other states and communities, was found, only to be turned loose to poison the atmosphere and wreck the hopes of those who found it.

"As a discoverer Kansas is a hoodoo. If we should find gold in virgin purity that could be mined by the ton gold would at once be demonetized and sold as lead on the market. If a cave of dimonds should be discovered diamonds would be used for paving stones and be sold by the ton. Kansas is original, very original, but her orginality has never brought anything for her save advertising space"—Lawrence (Kan.) Gazette.

THE AMERICAN BRAND OF DIPLOMACY.

The choice of Washington as the scene of peace negotiations between Japan and Russia indicates a change in the axis of the diplomatic world. A couple of centuries ago it was the fashion to go to Holland to settle disputes, and down to the last few years Washington was considered quite outside the pale of diplomatic civilization. Then everything centered round London, Paris, Berlin or The Hague, but perhaps the diplomatic chart of the Twentieth Century may have its longitude reckoned from the meridian of Washington.

We hear a great deal these days about "American diplomacy." It is advertised as the only genuine brand, and advice is freely given to ask for it and to take no substitute. Of course, much of that talk is "tommy-rot," intended chiefly for the use of Bunkum county. Nevertheless, there are certain qualties about our diplomacy which make it very efficacious. It is built on business principals. The American diplomatist is generaly a hard-headed business man who has been used to dealing practically with large and important questions of commerce, law, politics or what not. When he is confronted with a diplomatic problem he treats it like any other matter of business and goes at it in the most direct and practical way that suggests itself. He does not play the game according to the rules laid down in the books. He does not feel bound down by precedents. This is not because he is ignorant of the protocol, but simply because he takes a large, clear view of the situation and does not bother about trifles. The American negotiator may sometimes do things which unnecessarily shock respectable gentlemen of the "tape and sealing-wax office," but it is the defect which goes with his qualities. In great diplomatic affairs his business instincts generally inspire him to go straight for his object and to get there with both feet—and he succeeds partly by the very audacity of his action.

More over, American diplomacy usually goes right to headquarters, and doesn't waste time on underlings. It has happened more than once that an American has gone straight to a foreign sovereign and arranged affairs with him in a satisfactory way while foreign diplomats of importance and ability have cooled their heels in the ante-room of a comparatively unimportant Minister of State, thereby wasting their time and losing the game through fear of breaking some minor law of diplomatic tradition. Such diplomats follow the carriage roads while the American is riding straight across country almost upon the heels of the hounds.

This vigorous diplomacy comes from the fact that we are still a young and vigorous people. Unfortunately, it will wear off. After we have been in the diplomatic world a while we shall become more timid and more conventional; our diplomatic manners will become more blase, and will lose their dash. But, for the present, we are making the running. With us, in diplomacy as in everything else, "business is business," and in successfully bringing about the peace conference the President has shown the proper American method of picking up a red-hot proposition with a firm grip.

A. M. DAVIES OGDEN

Copyright, 1905, by A. M. Davies Ogden

Miss Anstruther touched the purple blossoms at her breast with caressing fingers.

"They are lovely," she said; "so fresh and fragrant. I think them the only flower for a man to send a woman."

Carrollton laughed. The dinner had reached the stage where general conversation glides imperceptibly into monologues or duets. The soft shaded lights, the odor of flowers, tempted to confidences.

"Then you agree with a friend of mine who declares it is deceitful for a girl to buy violets for herself, thus creating a false impression of owning a 'young man,'" he answered lightly. Miss Anstruther's lips curved into a slow smile.

"I am not sure that I should go so far as that."

"Well, perhaps not. And yet"—Carrollton's voice grew more serious—"I suppose the sending of violets does mean more than the gift of other flowers. When a man begins to associate a girl with violets, it's usually all up with him."

Miss Anstruther, a faint hint of disquietude creeping into her dark eyes, glanced quickly around.

"But—but couldn't he have sent them for any other reason—because he knew she liked them—for congratulations?" she asked in a troubled tone. Carrollton shook his head.

"Oh, no; he would send roses in such a case," he answered with conviction.

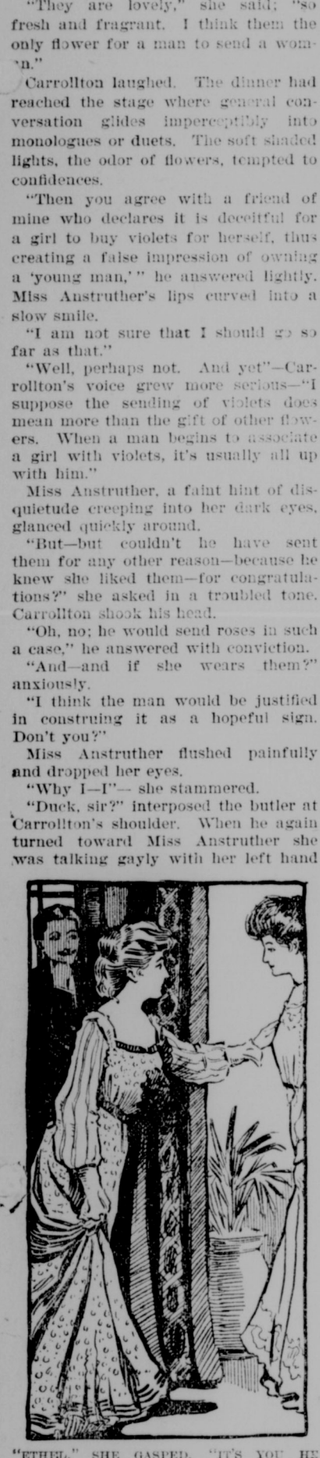
"And—and if she wears them?" anxiously.

"I think the man would be justified in construing it as a hopeful sign. Don't you?"

Miss Anstruther flushed painfully and dropped her eyes.

"Why I—I"— she stammered.

"Duck, sir?" interposed the butler at Carrollton's shoulder. When he again turned toward Miss Anstruther she was talking gayly with her left hand



"ETHEL," SHE GASPED, "IT'S YOU HE MEANS—NOT ME!"

neighbor. Carrollton, free to let his eye wander, fell to watching the eager, beautiful face of a girl across the table—a face that sparkled and changed with every varying thought.

"And if she doesn't wear them?" he mused a bit ruefully.

Miss Anstruther finished her dinner with a the consciousness of having in all probability answered the greater part of her companion's remarks with utter irrelevance. She could only trust that Mr. Morris, a fluent talker himself, might not have noticed. The girl's thoughts were hopelessly tangled. Carrollton's words about violets had startled and disturbed her. Did he really attach such significance to the little flower? She had never dreamed of such a thing and pinned on the odorous cluster before dinner with enjoyment of their beauty, indeed, but without any idea of occult meaning to the act. But now her eyes sought him doubtfully, a little wistfully. Did other men feel that way about violets too? She must speak to him again, but not now.

After dinner, however, the house party scattered. Miss Anstruther felt herself borne along to the billiard room, while Carrollton sat down for a rubber of bridge. It was not until some time later that Carrollton, walking down the hall, absorbed in worrying as to why Ethel Wheatley had so persistently avoided him all the evening, heard his name being called softly. Turning, he found Miss Anstruther facing him within a curtained window embrasure, her cheeks scarlet, her eyes full of a new shyness. She was breathing rapidly.

"Forgive me for stopping you," she said. "But—but I wanted to tell you something," avoiding his glance as she spoke. "It—it isn't announced yet, but I—I am going to marry Joe Wright. I—I felt that I must tell you," she ended half beseechingly. Carrollton, conscious of a vague expectancy in her attitude, hesitated.

"It's awfully good for you to let me know," he answered. "I congratulate you both most heartily. Joe's a bully chap, and mighty lucky too," he added a little awkwardly. "Of course I am to be an usher." What was it the girl wanted, Carrollton wondered. He noticed that she had grown quite white.

"You—you and Joe are such friends that I was sure you knew," she struggled. Why was he making it so hard for her? "It was only at dinner that I began to suspect—when you spoke about the meaning of violets." Her voice was unsteady. "I—I never dreamed that you cared; I thought you had sent me them because"— She stopped, startled by the change in his face. Carrollton jumped.

"I—I sent you!" he stammered, staring. Miss Anstruther stared in turn.

"But—but didn't you?" she demanded. "I found them in my room. Your card was in the box. To be sure, it was not addressed. Tell me," with a quick inspiration; "there was some mistake, then?"

Carrollton, taken aback, was striving to regain his wits.

"I—I sent them to the blue room," he muttered stupidly, then bit his lip. What a brutal speech! A sudden flash of comprehension lighted the girl's face.

"To the blue room," she repeated in undisguised relief. "Why—oh!" Darting impulsively into the hall, Miss Anstruther seized a girl standing by the billiard room door, and before either she or Carrollton could realize what was intended had whirled her behind the curtain.

"Ethel," she gasped, "here's Mr. Carrollton proposing to the wrong girl. It's you he means—not me," breathlessly. The next moment she had vanished down the hall. Miss Wheatley, startled and a little indignant, turned to follow, but Carrollton caught her by the hand.

"It's—it's true," he murmured incoherently. "I've been trying all the evening to tell you, only you wouldn't let me."

"What made Patricia think you were making love to her, then?" demanded the girl, still resentful. Carrollton shook his head.

"I don't know," he groaned bewilderingly. "She—she began talking about some rot that I had said at dinner, and then burst out that she was engaged to Joe, and said I had sent her violets. You are in the blue room, aren't you? Mrs. Mortimer said you were to be," doggedly. "I—I brought them down from the city myself." But Miss Wheatley's soft laugh had rippled out.

"Why, I was to have had the blue room," she explained, "but it had no fireplace and Patricia, who doesn't mind the cold, insisted on changing with me. And then, when she came in wearing those flowers and saying that you had sent them"— with a delicious pout. Carrollton, whose face had cleared, joined in her laughter.

"There seems to have been a mixup all around," he declared. "Now, see here, Ethel, that was a pretty narrow escape, and the next time the girl might not be engaged. Don't you think that you could do something toward claiming your own property? It isn't much good, perhaps, but still—hadn't I better tell Patricia that we have been engaged for some time too? That would remove finally from her mind any lingering idea that I was in love with her, and, besides, I'd hate to have her think you second choice," artfully. "What do you say, dear." There was a pause—a long pause—then Carrollton thrust his head from between the curtains. "Patricia," he called.

Compassion.

Among the stories which were told by certain aged physicians at a reunion of medical men of the times when surgical operations were conducted without anaesthetics none was more touching than the following:

A little girl not more than eight years old was injured in such a way that it was necessary to amputate one of her legs. She proved to be of wonderful pluck, and instead of binding her, as was customary in such cases, she was given her most cherished doll to hold. Pressing it in her arms, she submitted to the amputation without a single cry.

When it was done the physician in charge, seeking to brighten matters up with pleasantry, said, "And now, my dear, we will amputate your doll's leg."

Then the little girl burst into tears.

"No, no!" she gasped between her sobs. "You shall not; it would hurt her too much."

King James' Books.

Some very fine binding was executed for King James I., who during his entire life was an enthusiastic patron of letters and art. In some of his books the thistle is introduced with heavy corner pieces and the arms in the center. One fine piece of work now in the British museum is in bright brown calf powdered with fleur-de-lis. Another folio in crimson velvet has the arms of England embroidered on both sides with gold thread on a groundwork of yellow silk. The king's initials are worked above. The lettering is in leather, and the boards are tied together by red ribbon, constituting a regal book in every particular. John Gibson, in Scotland, and the Barkers, in England, were appointed to be the king's binders, but there is little trace of their work now extant.—Chambers' Journal.

Running Amuck.

A Malay is intolerant of insult or slight; it is something that to him should be wiped out in blood. He will brood over a real or fancied stain on his honor until he is possessed by the desire for revenge. If he cannot wreak it on the offender he will strike out at the first human being that comes in his way, male or female, old or young. It is this state of blind fury, this vision of blood, that produces the amuck. The Malay has often been called treacherous. I question whether he deserves the reproach more than other men. He is courteous and expects courtesy in return, and he understands only one method of avenging personal insults.—"Malay Sketches."

Some Pike County Doings

Abe Shorter Tells Colonel Harper About His Many Chances to Climb the Ladder of Fame.

IT was a hot day, and Abe Shorter sat on a chair under the awning of Skinner's grocery, with his feet on the head of a barrel and his head nodding with drowsiness. Colonel Harper, who had come into town and left his mule hitched in front of the postoffice, came along on his way to the drug store and halted to say:

"That yo', Abe? I declar' to goodness but I didn't know yo' at first sight. Powerful hot day in town."

"Bless me, kurnel; bless me!" exclaimed Abe in reply as he slowly lowered his legs to give the colonel the benefit of the barrel. "I was jest a-thinking about yo', kurnel—jest a-thinking and a-pondering. How's co'n a-gitting on this weather?"

"Ought to be a little mo' rain mebbe, but co'n isn't looking 'tall bad."

"And mewls hold their own, I reckon to consider?"

"Jest about hold their own, Abe; jest about."

"That's good, kurnel. If I can't hold my own I'm still glad to see other

"HAVE I BEEN ENCOURAGED IN THIS TOWN, KURNEL?"

folks do it. Things are looking up a bit for me, however. These yere Pike county scandalizers seem to have got tired of throwing me down and jumping on my body, and mebbe I'll get a chance to draw a long breath. Dawg gone folks who ain't willing for other folks to get along!"

"Scandalizing ain't right," said the colonel as he removed his hat to mop his forehead.

"Of co'se it ain't; of co'se not. Can't make a man better by scandalizing him—can't possibly do it. Can't put ambition into a man's soul by throwing him down every week or two. He's got to be encouraged if yo' want him to do his best. Have I been encouraged in this town, kurnel? Has Pike county ever extended her hand to help me climb up?"

"Reckon not, Abe."

"No, suh; no, suh, 'cept by one solitary human being, whose name is Kurnel Harper. Yo' run to co'n and mewls, an yo' work twenty-two men on yo'r plantation the year round, but that don't prevent yo' from seeing and realizing all sorts of situations. Firstly, I went into the late wah as a private soldier. I came out the same thing. Drat their pesky hides, but they were making captains and majahs and kurnels while I was pouring out my blood for love of country—that is, I was willing to pour, which is the same thing, I take it."

"'Bout the same, Abe," paternally replied the colonel, "except that the bullets don't hit yo'."

"When the wah ended I run for office, same as all the rest. They owed me an office for having laid down my life for my country, but what was my reward? Kurnel Harper, I reckon yo' can remember that I was knocked out—h'isted twenty feet high—snowed under till yo' couldn't see the top of my hat. That's the way Pike county encouraged me to grab hold with both hands and climb to the top!"

"Yes, I remember about that," mused the colonel as he watched a dog rolling over and over in the dusty street.

"Then I turned to law," continued Abe as he hitched his chair over to get a brace for his feet on a post of the veranda. "Kurnel Harper, nobody on the face of this big earth will ever know how I pinched and saved and starved and worked to get that law business down to a fine point. Did anybody encourage me? Not a critter. Not a pesky varmint had a kind word for me. If I'd known yo' during them struggling times yo'd have been the man to open yo'r wallet and hand me out $30 or so and tell me to pay it back in my own good time. Yes, that would have been yo', kurnel."

"Yes, mebbe," doubtfully replied the colonel.

"Waal, I got to be a lawyer. Then what? I wanted practice. I finally got a case and went into court with it, but the pesky jury was lying in ambush to throw me down. Yes, suh—had the purtiest, nicest, cleanest case yo' ever heard tell of, and that jury was bound by law and evidence to bring in a verdict for me, but I got the cold flop instead. They brought my client in guilty of stealing a hawg when he was thirty miles away at the time at the bedside of his dying mother. Do yo' call that encouraging a young man, kurnel? Was that giving me a show to climb up?"

"Can't skassly call it that, Abe, but

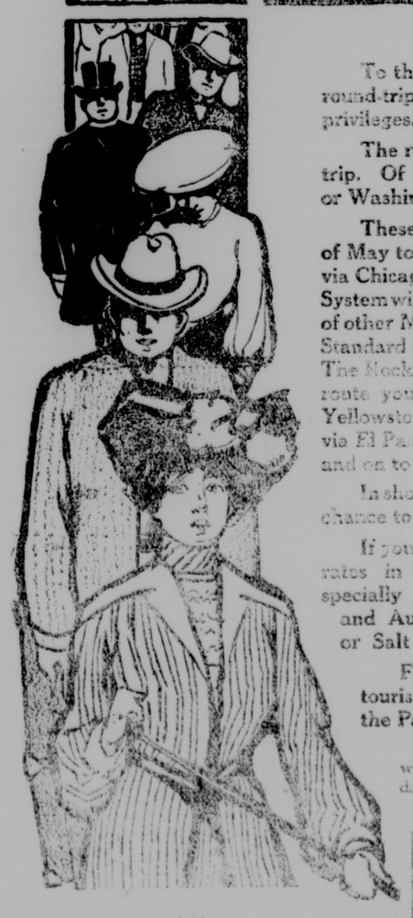
EXCURSIONS TO THE WEST



To the Pacific Coast—to California, Oregon, Washington—round-trip, long transit and return limits, liberal stop-over privileges.
The rate is practically on the basis of one fare for the round trip. Of course, if you wish to visit both California and Oregon or Washington, the cost is slightly more.
These reduced rates are in effect on certain dates in months of May to October, inclusive. They apply from all Eastern points via Chicago, St. Louis or Memphis gateways. The Rock Island System will take you up in either Chicago or St. Louis, or at hundreds of other Middle West points and carry you to the Coast in through Standard or Tourist Sleepers with unexcelled Dining Car service. The Rock Island also affords a choice of routes: on the "Scenic" route you can stop off in Colorado—see Salt Lake City—visit Yellowstone National Park; on the "Southern" route you can go via El Paso, thru New Mexico, then "up coast" to San Francisco and on to Portland or Seattle if desired.
In short, these Pacific Coast excursions offer an unusually good chance to see our western country in a comprehensive manner.
If you desire to go only as far as Colorado, there are excursion rates in effect to that section and return, all summer long, specially reduced June 30 to July 4, August 12 and 13, and August 30 to September 4. Extension trips to Ogden or Salt Lake and return at low cost also.
From September 15 to October 31, 1905, one-way tourist or "colonist" tickets will be on sale to California and the Pacific Northwest—about half regular fare.
If interested, send name and address on this coupon, designating which booklet wanted and to what point you plan to go. Name probable date of start also, so we can advise definitely with respect to rates, etc.

Wanted an Up to Date Auto or None at All

"SHALL we buy a new automobile?" The young husband looked at his wife anxiously. The voice had a strange tremor in it.

"The one we have is in perfect running order," he continued. "The engine is not worn a bit. The bearings are like new. The tires have all been renewed. Everything about it is in first class shape, and we can, I think, get along beautifully. Don't you dear?"

The wife rose to her full height. It was evident that her indignation was fully aroused.

"You amuse me," she said, with a slight sneer. "Are you aware, sir, that they are not now using those bodies? Do you know that mauve awnings have gone out? Can you get it through your dull brain that nothing but a limosanaum body is au fait? And do you suppose for one moment that I would ever demean myself by entering my machine from the rear? Why, I would just as soon wear last year's hat."

Whereupon her stricken husband immediately telephoned to have the back number taken to the iron factory.—Puck.

Returning the Photograph.

Marshall P. Wilder tells of a quarrel between a couple of his acquaintance who had been engaged for some months. The two lovers since have "made up," but while their quarrel was at its height no recrimination was too severe for either of them to put upon the other.

Of course the first thing the girl did after the breaking of the engagement was to write to the young man, requesting the return of various souvenirs, and she particularly desired him to send back her photograph, which, she declared in her note, she had given to him "in a moment of girlish folly."

The young man's reply was amusingly cruel. Said he: "I regret exceedingly that at present I am unable to find the photograph requested. However, I send you my entire collection of young ladies' photos, numbering some forty or fifty, among which, no doubt, you will find your own. The rest I shall thank you to return by the bearer of this."—St. Louis Republic.

Profitable Work.

"I believe every man ought to eat good and plenty always," said the fat man. "It never pays to work on an empty stomach."

"I disagree with you," remarked the quiet stranger. "I've found that it often pays very well."

Notice To Tax Payers!

This is to notify the tax payers of Garrett county that the Annual Levy for 1905 has been made and published, and to call their attention to the following abstract, Section 45, Chapter 566, Acts of 1890, relating to the discount to be allowed and the interest to be charged on all tax bills:

"All county taxes shall be due and payable on the first day of September next succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and all county taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed, and after the first day of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid. The treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes regularly in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon his books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid. But the discount shall not be allowed unless the whole amount of State and county taxes are paid when same is made.

I have spent every cent of my own money in organizing this company and securing the 32 claims it owns. 100,000 shares of stock sold at 65 cents a share; (par value $1,) will do this development work

100 Shares will Cost you Only $65

You can pay for it at $5 per month and it may be worth

$6,500 in Three Years

Many copper properties have shown even greater increases. If you desire full information, it's now

GOOD ROADS ARE IN GREAT FAVOR

Counties Everywhere Taking Advantage Of Law.

GARRETT CO.'S LACK OF INTEREST

Meanwhile Engineer Crosby And His Assistants Are Busy Preparing Specifications.

Reports come from all parts of the State that the Commissioners of the various counties have taken up, with very few exceptions, the question of good roads under the provisions of the Shoemaker law in some form or other.

Meanwhile the highway engineer, Mr. W. W. Crosby, and his corps of assistants have been as busy as possible preparing specifications of those counties that have already applied for State aid in the matter of building good roads on a basis of economy and efficiency. From the present outlook, it would seem that next year, when petitions will again be received for the State aid which the Shoemaker law provides for every county, the Department of Highways will have to keep the "busyday" sign continually on the outer door.

Dr. William Bullock Clark, chief of the Maryland Geological Survey, who has general supervision of all the road-building of the State said:

"The people of the State are fast awakening to the fact that the poor condition of roads, wherever they occur has not been altogether the result of shortness of road appropriations, but due in part to the manner in which the money has been applied, and that the same amount of money scientifically applied will in comparatively few years guarantee a system of satisfactory roads which the outlay and toil of years has failed to produce. The State-aid road law has already aroused more than ordinary interest, as is shown by the many applications to the Maryland Geological Survey for plans and estimates of the cost of modern macadam roads, which many of the boards of County Commissioners purpose to make under the new road law.

"The most earnest advocates of scientifically built roads have never urged that a system of modern roads could be secured at once, but it has been repeatedly pointed out and demonstrated by experienced that a system of good roads can be gradually and conveniently built up by adding each year small pieces of modern roads wherever the conditions most demand improvement. As an example of the comparison between the results of scientifically built roads, it has been shown that had Montgomery county spent one-half of the amount of money its roads have cost in the past 15 years in the building of modern roads during the same length of time, 45 miles of good macadam road would now furnish easy access to all the main points of the county. But such is not the case.

"It has been shown also that should the counties of Maryland take up the total amount of State aid under the Shoemaker law it would be possible to build 1000 miles of modern, or State roads within 10 years—enough to insure easy traffic between all parts of the State. And the residents of the counties under the new law have the matter entirely in their own hands, for they know that by the pledge of two-thirds of the property owners along a piece of road to pay 10 per cent. of the cost of building the road commissioners of the county can be forced to petition for the allotted share of state aid. Again, it is well to emphasize the fact that the Shoemaker law puts within reach of the real producers in a community a very good thing at a very reasonable price to the county, namely, one-half the actual expense.

"Recent mention has been made of movements in Montgomery, Harford, Prince George's and Caroline counties to take advantage of the State-aid road fund. A number of the counties have provided themselves with expert road engineers to handle or direct most of their work. Prince George's county is planning on a large scale; Harford county has actually begun some of its work, and Baltimore county wants to build a mile of State road in each of its 15 districts."

Testing Eggs in Mexico.

It is a common sight in the plaza to behold a stall woman, who is selling two reals' worth of eggs, pick them up one by one, put one end and then the other to her lips and hand them over to the customer, who repeats the same identical operation.

To the inexperienced onlooker it seems as if they were tasting the extremeties of the egg. As a matter of fact, they never touch the egg with the tongue.

The idea of the performance is that when an egg is fresh one end is distinctly colder than the other. The end which has the air chamber is the warmer of the two. The human lips are exceedingly sensitive to heat and cold, and even the novice at this form of egg testing promptly becomes a capable judge. If both ends of the egg reveal the same temperature, that egg may be counted as bad as it is a fairly good sign that the air chamber is broken and the contents spread equally within the shell—Mexican Herald

OUR FLAG

By C. M. RATHBUN

UP with our flag to the breezes of heaven,
There, in its splendor, to flash in the sun—
Its stars brightly gleaming—its stripes brightly streaming—
All hail to Old Glory—the many in one!

Brightly it beams, like the rainbow, in promise,
Heralding freedom and justice and right;
Its glory-crowned beauty, inspiring the duty
That hallows and holds it unsullied and bright.

Beacon of liberty, shine on in gladness!
Beaming with hope for the days yet to be;
May heaven defend thee, its blessings attend thee
And guide thee forever, oh flag of the free!

God of the nations! through darkness and tempest,
Thou hast upheld us, and guided our ways;
Mid trials unnumbered, thy grace never slumbered—
To thee, then be glory and honor and praise!

CAMP MEETING TO BEGIN SATURDAY

Bishop Wilson, D. D. LL. D., Will Deliver Sunday Morning Sermon.

The great international and undenominational camp meeting at Mountain Lake Park, will begin on Saturday next with an array of brainy preachers and speakers.
